far blind both our Eyes, and our Judgments, as to make us believe, that the same Causes should not produce the same Effects, and that the same Latitudinarian, and Republican Notions should not bring forth the same Rebellious and Pernicious Consequences. They are pleas'd now to soften their Lewd Principles, and cover their Dangerous Tenets with the Name of Speculative Opinions; but what Fatal Practices they have created, and whether these Seditious Thoughts will not again Exemplify themselves in the same Bloody Actions, We shall be Convinc'd, to our Sorrow, if We don't Apprehend. That the Old Leaven of their Forefathers is still Working in their Present Generation, and that this Traditional Poyson still remains in this Brood of Vipers, to Sting Us to Death, is sufficiently Visible, from the Dangerous Encroachments They now make upon our Government, and the Treasonable Reflections They have Publish'd on Her Majesty, God bless Her! Whose Hereditary Right to the Throne, They have had the Impudence to Deny, and Cancel, to make Her a Creature of their own Power; and that by the same Principles They plac'd a Crown upon Her, They tell Us, They (that is, the Mob) may re-assume it at their Pleasure. Nay, now They have advanc'd themselves from the Religious Liberty Our Gracious Sovereign has Indulg'd them, to Claim a Civil Right, as they Term it, and to Justle the Church out of Her Establishment, by Hoisting their Toleration into its Place; and to convince Us what alone will satisfy 'em, insolently Demand the Repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, as an Ecclesiastical Usurpation, which indeed under Her Majesty (whom God long preserve for its Comfort and Support!) is the only Security the Church has to Depend upon. And which they have so far Eluded by their Abominable Hypocrisy, as to have Undermin'd Her Foundation, and Endanger the Government, by filling it with its Profess'd Enemies. These Charges are so Flagrant, and Undeniable, that a Man must be very Weak, or something worse, that thinks, or pretends, that Dissenters are to be Gain'd, or won over by any other Grants, and Indulgences, than giving up our Whole Constitution: And He that recedes the least Tittle from it, to satisfy, or Ingratiate with these Clamorous, Insatiable and Church Devouring Malignants, knows not what Spirit They are of, or He ought to shew who is a True Member of Our Church. Have They not ever since their first Unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, by the Intercession of that False Son of the Church, Bishop Grindall, always Improv'd, and Rise upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government? Infomuch that Queen Elizabeth, that was Deluded by that Perfidious Prelate to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline, found it such an Headstrong, and Encroaching Monster, that in Eight Years, She foresaw it would Endanger the Monarchy, as well as the Hierarchy: And like a Queen of True Resolution, and Pious Zeal for Both, pronounc'd, That such were the Restless Spirits of that FACTIOUS People, that no Quiet was to be Expected from them, till they were utterly Suppress'd: Which like a Prudent Princess, She did by Wholesome Severities, that the Crown for many Years sat Easy, and Flourishing on Her Head. And had Her Successor, King James, but follow'd Her Wise Politicks, his Son had never fallen a Martyr to their Fury, nor any of his Unhappy Offspring suffer'd those Disastrous Calamities, mities, which made the Royal Family one continu'd Sacrifice to their Malice. And what better could have been expected from Miscreants, Begot in Rebellion, Born in Sedition, and Nurs'd up in Faction? I would not here be misunderstood, as if I intended to cast the least Invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government has condescended to give 'em, which I am sure all those that wish well to our Church are very ready to Grant to Consciences truly Scrupulous; let Them Enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has Prescrib'd. But let them also move within their Proper Sphere, and not grow Eccentrick, and like Comets that Burst their Orb, Threaten the Ruin and Downfall of Our Church, and State. Indeed they tell us they have Relinquish'd the Principles, as well as the Sins of their Fore-Fathers: If so, why do they not Renounce their Schism, and come Sincerely into Our Church? Why do they Pelt Her with more Blasphemous Libels, and Scurrilous Lampoons, than were ever Publish'd in Oliver's Usurpation? Have they not lately Villainously Divided us with Knavish Distinctions of High and Low-Church Men; Are not the Best Characters they can give Us, those of Papists, Jacobites, and Conspirators? And what do they mean by all this Insidious Cant, but by False Insinuations, and raising Groundless Jealousies, and Fears, to Imbroil the Publick, and to bring it into that Confusion, they are Suggesting upon Us? Whether these Men are not Contriving, and Plotting our utter Ruin, and whether all those FALSE BRETHREN, that fall in with these Measures, and Designs, do not contribute basely to it, I leave every Impartial Man that wishes the Welfare of Our Constitution to Determine; And if we find this true in Fact, what Reason have we to think, but that the National Sins are Ripen'd up to a full Maturity, to call down Vengeance from Providence on a Church and Kingdom, thus Debauch'd in its Principles, and Corrupted in its Manners, and instead of the True Faith, Discipline, and Worship, given over to all Licentiousness, both in Opinion, and Practice, to all Sensuality, Hypocrisy, Lewdness, and Atheism? And now are we under no Danger in these Deploable Circumstances? Must we Lull Ourselves under this sad Repose, and in such a Stupid, Lethargick Security, Embrace our Ruin? When Elisha the Great Prophet of God, was Surrounded with an Host of Enemies, that fought for his Life, his Blind Servant beheld not the Peril his Master was in, till his Eyes were open'd by Miracle, and he found himself in the midst of Horses and Chariots of Fire. I pray God We may be out of Danger! but we may remember the King's Person was Voted to be so, at the same Time that his Murderers were Conspiring his Death. What I have thus freely spoken, I hope is as much without Offence, as it proceeds from a good Intention, and a Tender Concern for Her Majesty's Person, and Government, and an hearty Zeal for the Honour and Safety of our Excellent Church, and Constitution. I intreat Your Patience, III. Briefly to set forth the Heinous Malignity, Enormous Guilt, and Folly of this Prodigious Sin of FALSE BROTHERHOOD.

1. And First, With Regard to God and Religion. It is a most Perfidious Apostacy from, and Reproach upon Both. It is no less than Renouncing Our Allegiance to our Almighty Sovereign, an Open Denial, and Prostitution of Our most Holy Faith, and Church, upon which Crime God has Entail'd so many Dreadful Threats, and Anathemas. It is Betraying Our most Solemn Oaths, proving False to Our Sacred Trust, and Commission, Admistring to, and Indulging Men in the most Mortal Sins, Endangering both our Own, and the Salvation of that Dear Flock, for which Christ Dy'd, by Exposing it to the Corruptions of Heresy and Schism, the Impostures of False Apostles, and the Deceit, and Malice of Wolves in Sheep's Cloathing. It is Deriving the highest Blasphemy, and Dishonour upon the Holy Spirit of God, thus to Prevaricate with his Immutable Oracles of Truth, in Wrestling 'em to maintain the most Diabolical Falshoods, and Errors, and making Veracity itself the Author and Patronizer of Lyes. It is Forsaking Our Baptismal Covenant, Basely Deserting the Glorious Colours we are Listed under, turning Refugees from our Saviour, and Adherents to his most Abjur'd Enemies. In a Word, to accomplish any wretched Secular Design, to Gratify their Pride, or Ambition, to Feed their Lust, or Avarice, to wreak their Spleen, or Revenge, out of Envy, or Disappointment, for a Little, Poultry Honour, Money, or Preferment: These FALSE BRETHREN will Renounce their Creed, and Read the Decalogue backward, be the very Reverse of Our Blessed Saviour (whom like their Primitive Pattern, they first sell, and then betray) Fall down and Worship the very Devil himself for the Riches and Honours of this World.

2. Secondly, In Regard to the World. What a vast Scandal, and Offence must it give to all Persons of Piety, and Integrity, to see Men of Character, and Stations, thus Shift and Prevaricate with their Principles, and Starting from their Religion upon any Occasion of Difficulty, or Trial, and like the Disciples, flying from, and forsaking our Saviour, when his Life Lay at Stake? To see Mens Opinions sit as loose about 'em as their Garments, to be put on, or off, for Convenience? What can Unwary Persons conclude from such Tergiversation, and Hypocrisy, but that all Religion is State-Craft, and Imposture? That all Godliness is Gain; and that the Doctrines of the Church lie not so much in Her Articles, as Her Honours, and Revenues? Without doubt, this Modern Latitude, and Infamous Double-Dealing, as it can proceed from nothing but the rankest Atheism, so it must Propagate it wheresoever it goes; and 'tis not to be Questioned, but that the Wonderful Increase, and Impudent Appearance of all Sects and Heresies in this Kingdom at present, beyond what was ever known in Former Ages, is chiefly to be attributed to it. But this Crime is as Pernicious to Human Society, as Religion; for it Destroys all Common Honesty, Faith, and Credit in the World, and in the Place of it sets up an Universal Trade of Cousenage, Sharping, Disimulation, and downright Knavery. For, what Dependence can there be upon a Man of no Principles? What Trust in Equivocations, Evasions, and Lyes? Nor indeed could any one be suppos'd so Sottish, as to place the least Confidence in these Men, did they not Bait their Hook, and Cover their Treachery with the Sacred and Plausible Pretences of FRIENDSHIP, whereby they are capable of doing much more Mischiefe, than a barefac'd and profess'd Enemy. In what moving and Lively Colours does the Holy Psalmist paint out the Crafty Insidiousness of such wilely Volpones? Wick-edness (says he) is therein, Deceit and Guile go not out of their Streets. For it is not an Open Enemy that has done me this Dishonour, for then I could have born it: Neither was it mine Adversary, that that did Magnify himself against me, for then peradventure I would have bid my self from him. But, it was even Thou! my Companion, my Guide, and mine own Familiar Friend. We took sweet Counsel together, and walked in the House of God as Friends. There is no Faithfulness in their Mouths, their inward Parts are very Wickedness; Their Throats are Open Sepulchres, and their Words are smother than Oil, yet be they very Swords. Like Joab, they pretend to speak Peaceably, and smite us Mortally under the fifth Rib.

3. Thirdly, With Regard to a Man's Self, it is hard to distinguish whether our FALSE BRETHREN prove themselves Guilty of more excessive Knavery, or Folly. For whatever these Cunning, Temporizing Politicians may think, they will find, after all their Shuffling, and Compliance, that the Plain Road of Truth, Honesty, and Integrity, is both the most Prudent, as well as the Safest Way they can follow, and that the Wisdom of this World is as much Foolishness with Men, as 'tis with God. For certainly there is no Sin that so much Disappoints its Own Ends as This does. Perhaps the Man may Obtain the Present Advantage, He has in Prospect, by relinquishing his Old Friends and Principles; but is ever such a Mercenary Convert receiv'd heartily into the Bosom of his Former Enemies? Or are They ever found so Credulous and Good-natur'd, as to Forgive, and Believe such an Apostate Cordial and Sincere, and fit to be Trusted in any Matter of Weight or Importance, who has Betray'd his Own Party for the Little, Sordid Lucre of a Place, or Preferment? And is again ready to be Retrograde, whenever the Wind shall Change and Veer about? Such a FALSE BROTHER may serve the Present Turn of his Adversaries, who may seem, whilst they want the TOOL, to Flatter and Caress him; but let such a Turn-Coat rest assured, He shall meet with Hypocrisy for Hypocrisy; and since he is got upon the Stage, shall Act his Part, and be His'd off when He has done? Such a Wise Game do our Projectors Play, they Barter, and Betray their Friends, only to sell themselves Slaves into the Hands of their Enemies, who shall Treat them with more Insolence, Disdain, and Tyranny, than Honest Men do with Scorn and Contempt, if they don't go the whole Lengths of their Party, stick at Nothing, tho' never so Impious, and Absurd, and run from one Extream to a quite contrary. Thus Little, thus Base, thus Odious, thus Contemptible, thus Servile, nay thus Execrable is the Traytor, and Double-Dealer, in the Sight, not only of all Honest Men, but the most Profess'd Knaves, and Hypocrites? Who cannot but have a Tacit Regard, and Veneration for a Man of Steadiness and Probity, that upon All Occasions is True to Himself, and his Cause, is above the Threats, as well as Flatteries of this World, still Trusting in his God, and his own Integrity, and Justice, Despising his Interest, or Success, and is under all Circumstances like that God, and Religion He Believes and Serves, without Variableness, or Shadow of Change, but is the same, to day, to morrow, and for ever? Farther, these FALSE BRETHREN cannot be more Odious to God and Man, than they are to Themselves, who are always a Self-contradiction, full of Confusion and Perplexity, perpetually Haunting themselves, the Worst of Demons, maintaining an irreconcilable War betwixt the Outward and Inward Man, Conformists in Profession, Half-Conformists in Practice, and Non-Conformists in Judgment. Such as Mixture of Inconsistency and Nonsense, that any one that has the least Spark of Conscience or Reason, must Renounce and Detest. But this dismal Effect has such a State of habitual Hypocrisy, that it quite Damps, and Extinguishes Both, Quenches the Holy Spirit of God, and Crucifies his Son afresh; and as it finds a Man void of Shame, generally without a miraculous Conversion leaves him incapable of Repentance, and both Damns him here, and hereafter; and as He Chooseth it in This World, Appoints him in the Next, his Portion with Hypocrites and Unbelievers, with all Lyars that have their Part in the Lake which burns with Fire and Brimstone, with the Grand Father of Falshood, the Devil and his Angels. And so here we leave our FALSE BRETHREN, in the Company they always keep Correspondence with.

IV. Now what should be the Result of this Long Discourse, but that if We bear any True Concern for the Interest, Honour, and Safety of Our Church and Government, We ought stedfastly to Adhere to those Fundamental Principles, upon which Both are Founded, and upon which their Security, under God, alone, depends; and consequently that it highly Beboves Us, Cautionally to watch against, to Mark, and Avoid All those that thus Treacherously Desert them. And indeed it would be both for Our Advantage, as well as Their Credit, if such Men would throw off the Mask, entirely Quit Our Church, of which they are no True Members, and not fraudulently Eat her Bread, and lay wait for Her Ruin, Purloin Her Revenues, and ungratefully lift up their Heels against Her. For then We should be One Fold under One Shepherd, all those Invidious Distinctions that now Distract, and Confound Us Lost, and We should be Terrible like an Army of Banners to our Enemies, who would never break in upon such an Uniform, and Well-compacted Body. This indeed would be a True Peace, and Solid Union, when we should All with one Mind, and one Mouth, Glorify God, and not with a Confus'd Diversity of Contradictory Opinions, and inconsistent Jargon of Worship, which the God of Peace, Purity and Order cannot but Abhor. As it is a Maxim in Politicks, that All Governments are best supported by the same Methods, and Counsels upon which they are Founded; so it will appear undeniably True in its Application to our Constitution, which can be Maintain'd by no Other Principles, but Those on which it is Built, and like their Basis, the Gospel, if there's any Violation, or Breach made in any Branch of it, it shakes and endangers the whole Frame and Body. These Things, however Little they may be Represented by Our Adversaries, will be found of the most Considerable Consequence. Let Us therefore, as We are unhappily Sharers of St. Paul's Misfortune, to have our Church in Perils among FALSE BRETHREN, follow his Example and Conduct in a Parallel Case. He tells us in his Epistle to the Galatians, c. ii. That he was Obstructed, and Peffer'd in his Preaching the Gospel, by FALSE BRETHREN, unawares brought in, who came privily to spy out his Liberty, which he had in Christ Jesus, that they might bring him into Bondage. To whom he gave place by Subjection, not for an Hour, that the Truth of the Gospel might continue with the Church. Doubtless this brave, and bold Resolution did the Apostle take by the peculiar Command, and Inspiration of the Holy Ghost; and yet if our Dissenters had Lived in those Times, they would have branded him as an Intemperate, Hot, Furious Zealot, that wanted to be Sweeten'd, by the Gentle Spirit of Charity, and Moderation, forsooth! Schism and Faction, are Things of Impudent and Incredulous Natures; they Thrive upon Concessions, take Permission for Power, and advance a Toleration immediately into an Establishment; and are therefore to be treated like Growing Mischiefs, or Infectious Plagues, kept at a Distance, lest their Deadly Contagion spread. Let us therefore have no Fellowship with these Works of Darknes, but rather reprove them. Let our Superior Pastors do their Duty in Thundering out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's, and let any Power on Earth Dare Reverse a Sentence Ratify'd in Heaven. Let them Discourage all these Seditious, Lukewarm, Almost-Christians, and Promote Men of Probity, Conscience, and Courage. I say Conscience, and Courage, for the One without the Other is like Faith without Works, Dead, and Insignificant. A Christian, and a Coward, are such Contradictions, as were never found in the Church Militant; Men of Timorous and Dastardly Spirits, who are asham'd to Own, or afraid to defend their Principles, lest they should lose, or suffer by it, will prove very Poor Disciples of the Cross! Such Men (as an Ingenious Prelate Wittily expresses it) are only Honest by Chance. Let us Despise the sneaking, shuffling Compliances of such as Consult their Safety, and not their Innocence, and dare to be True in the worst of Times, with this All-sustaining Cordial Comfort, that whatever Enemies We gain, or Friends We lose, We carry One within Us, that can Confront, Vanquish, and Counter-Balance All. Woe unto them that have a Fearful Heart, and to the Faint Hands, and to the Sinner that goeth two manner of ways! says the Wise Man, Eccles. ii. 12. And agreeable to Him the Apostle in very Sarcastic Expressions, Jude 11, 12, 13. Woe unto them that have gone in the Way of Cain, and ran greedily after the Error of Balaam for Reward, and Perish'd in the Gain-saying of Corah! These are Spots in your Feasts of Charity, Clouds without Water, carry'd about of Winds, Trees whose Fruits are wither'd, without Fruit, Twice Dead, pluck'd up by the Roots: Raging Waves of the Sea, foaming out their Own Shame; Wandring Stars, to whom is reserv'd the Blackness of Darknes for ever. Let Us therefore, being well assur'd how much Our Cause Deserves, and how much at present it Requires Our bravest Resolutions, hold fast our Integrity, and Religion, without Wavering, and earnestly contend for the Faith, which was once deliver'd unto the Saints. My Brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the Power of his Might. Put on the whole Armour of God, that Ye may be able to stand against the Wiles of the Devil. For we Wrestle not only against Flesh and Blood, but against Principalities, against Powers, against the Rulers of the Darknes of this World, against Spiritual Wickednesses in High Places. Wherefore take unto you the whole Armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the Evil Day, and having done All, to stand, Eph. vi. 10. &c. Not doubting, but that if We shew the same Courage, and Indefatigable Zeal, and Labour, to Defend, as Our Adversaries to Reproach, Divide, and Ruin our Church, neither their united Malice, nor Power, nor all the Plots, and Machinations of Rome, nor the very Gates of Hell, itself, shall ever be able to Prevail against Her. And let us Trust in that Gracious Providence, which so Miraculously deliver'd

Her on this Day, that tho' She lies Bleeding of the Wounds she has receiv'd in the House of Her Friends, Lam. ii. 2, 4. tho' the ways of Zion may Mourn for a Time, and Her Gates be Desolate, her Priests Sigh, and she in Bitterness, because Her Adversaries are Chief, and Her Enemies at present Prosper; tho' among all her Lovers she has few to comfort Her, and many of her Friends have dealt Treacherously with Her, and are become her Enemies, Zech. xiii. 6. Tho' there are few to Guide Her among all the Sons whom she hath brought forth; neither are there many that take Her by the hand, of all the Sons that she hath brought up, Isa. li. 18. Tho' her Enemies cry, Down with her, Down with her, even to the Ground; Yet there is a God that can, and will Raise Her up, if We Forsake Her not. Let us not therefore ungratefully contribute to Her Destruction; but let us continue Stedfast, Immoveable, always abounding in the Work of the Lord, soasmuch as We know that our Labour will not be in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. xv. 58. Now the God of all Grace, who hath called Us into his Eternal Glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffer'd a while, make you Perfect, Stablish, Strengthen, Settle You. 1 Pet. v. 10, 11. To Him be Glory, and Dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

“ Let Us conclude all in that Excellent Collect of Our Church;

O Lord, We beseech thee, let thy continual Pity Cleanse, and Defend thy Church; and because it cannot continue in Safety, without thy Succour, Preserve it evermore by thy Help, and Goodness, through Jesus Christ, Our Lord.

After which the Lords Adjourn'd to the House of LORDS.

Tuesday, Feb. 28. The Second Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly Charge and Command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed in your Evidence.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. MY Lords, Yesterday your Lordships heard the Articles against Doctor Sacheverell, his Answer, and the Commons Replication, read; and the Charge being open'd, your Lordships likewise heard the Doctor's Sermon preached at St. Paul's, and the Dedication of his Derby Sermon; so that the Case is now fully before your Lordships.

That Part which is assigned to me, and some other Gentlemen, is to maintain the First Article of the Commons Charge. The Method I shall take will be, first, to shew the Importance of this Article;

Article; Secondly, To clear up and vindicate the Justice of the Revolution; and, Thirdly, To state the Evidence or Proof of this Article, which charges the Doctor with traducing and condemning the Revolution.

My Lords, I must premise, that the Commons cannot but think it hard, that in this Assembly of the British Nation, they should now after more than Twenty Years Enjoyment of the Benefits arising by the Revolution, they can't but think it hard, I say, that in this Place, and at this Time, they should be forced to plead in Vindication of the Justice of that Revolution. But since we must give up our Right to the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, or (which is all one) be precarious in the Enjoyment of them, and hold them only during Pleasure, if this Doctrine of unlimited Non-resistance prevails, the Commons have been content to undertake this Prosecution; and they who share in the Legislature with your Lordships, have put themselves into the Condition of Suiters for Justice against this Offender, in whom your Lordships will find the Reverse of a true British Subject: For such an one is dutiful and submissive to his Prince, and true to the Liberty of his Country; but in this Criminal your Lordships will find virulent Faction, and slavish Submission.

As to the Importance of this Article, your Lordships were rightly told Yesterday, that the whole Charge centers in this Article. If the Justice of the Revolution be establish'd, the Toleration will be rejoiced in by some, and be acquiesced in by all; the Resolutions of the Two Houses of Parliament will have a just Regard shewn to them; Her Majesty's Administration will be no longer defamed, nor will that unhappy Distinction of Parties be capable of being heightened amongst us. But if the Justice of the Revolution (which is our Foundation) be question'd, every Thing that is built on it is in some Degree shaken, and Occasion is given for Disputes and Factions, never to be ended but by a total Subversion of our Constitution.

My Lords, As it is self-evident that the Honour of Her Majesty's Government stands upon the Justice of the Revolution, so doth the Peace and Tranquility of it depend upon that also. The Commons may appeal to your Lordships, and the whole Nation, in this Matter: From what Quarter is it, that all that Opposition and Obstruction to the Administration of the late King, and Her present Majesty have come? Has it not been from those who have question'd the Lawfulness of the Resistance made use of in the Revolution? Whose Pursuit after Power is indefatigable, and to obtain which they would make a willing Sacrifice of the Common Liberty; whilst others who have a contrary Principle, and are convinced of the Justice of that Proceeding, have acted a quite contrary Part. Have they not contributed every thing in their Power to strengthen the Government in her present Majesty's Hands, as well as the late King's; and that with a Zeal and Constancy thro' several Changes, which nothing but a Principle could inspire? How much is owing to this Zeal in promoting the Settlement of the Protestant Succession, and how little to the contrary Principle, every one that remembers the State of Things at the End of the late King's Reign can tell. Upon the present Question therefore, my Lords, depend our present Happiness, and future Hopes. Hath not this Principle of unlimited Non-resistance been revived by the professed and undisguised Friends of the Pretender? Hath it not been prosecuted with an unusual Warmth, since his Attempt upon Her Majesty's Crown? Can the Pretender have any Hopes, but from the keeping alive such Notions? Or can the Queen's Title receive any Advantage from them? Or can it be seasonable to preach this Doctrine in the Reign of the best of Princes, which can be of no Use to any but the worst?

In clearing up and vindicating the Justice of the Revolution, which was the Second Thing proposed, it is far from the Intent of the Commons to state the Limits and Bounds of the Subject's Submission to the Sovereign. That which the Law hath been wisely silent in, the Commons desire to be silent in too; nor will they put any Case of a justifiable Resistance, but that of the Revolution only; and they persuade themselves that the doing Right to that Resistance, will be so far from promoting popular Licence or Confusion, that it will have a contrary Effect, and be a Means of settling Mens Minds in the Love of, and Veneration for the Laws; to rescue and secure which, was the only Aim and Intention of those concerned in that Resistance.

To make out the Justice of the Revolution, it may be laid down, That as the Law is the only Measure of the Prince's Authority, and the Peoples Subjection, so the Law derives its Being and Efficacy from common Consent: And to place it on any other Foundation than common Consent, is to take away the Obligation this Notion of common Consent puts both Prince and People under to observe the Laws. And upon this solid and rational Foundation, the Lawyers, in all Ages, have placed that Obligation, as appears by all our Law-Books. But instead of this, of later Times, Patriarchal and other Fantastical Schemes have been framed, to rest the Authority of the Law upon; and so Questions of Divinity have been blended with Questions of Law; when it is plain, that Religion hath nothing to do to extend the Authority of the Prince, or the Submission of the Subject, but only to secure the legal Authority of the one, and enforce the due Submission of the other, from the Consideration of higher Rewards, and heavier Punishments. And if this Distinction were attended to, it might serve to bury the useless Labours (to say no worse of them) of several Divines, and others, on these Subjects, in utter Oblivion.

My Lords, Nothing is plainer than that the People have a Right to the Laws and the Constitution. This Right the Nation hath asserted, and recover'd out of the Hands of those who had dispossest them of it at several Times. There are of this two famous Instances in the Knowledge of the present Age; I mean that of the Restoration, and that of the Revolution; in both these great Events were the regal Power, and the Rights of the People recover'd. And it is hard to say, in which the People have the greatest Interest; for the Commons are sensible, that there is not one legal Power belonging to the Crown, but they have an Interest in it; and I doubt not, but they will always be as careful to support the Rights of the Crown, as their own Privileges.

My Lords, That the Constitution was wholly lost before, and recover'd by the Restoration, is known to all; and before the Revolution, it is known how Popery and absolute Power had invaded the Constitution. The regal Supremacy, of such absolute Necessity to preserve the Peace of the Kingdom, was disclaimed, and the Papal Supremacy, by a solemn Embassy to Rome, owned and acknowledged, and no Footsteps left of the regal Supremacy but that which was worse than nought, an illegal High-Commission Court: And at that Time the popular Rights, in almost all the Species of them, were invaded, That great Privilege of the People, on which all others depend, that of giving their Consent to the making new, or repealing old Laws, was invaded; and a dispensing Power, such as rendred all our Laws precarious, and at the Will of the Prince, was exercised. These, and a great many other Acts of absolute Power, are mentioned in that Act of Parliament, called The Bill of Rights. It would be to mispend your Lordships Time, to mention all the Instances there given: For, my Lords, the whole Tenor of the Administration then in Being, was agreed by all to be a total Departure from the Constitution; the Nation was at that Time united in that Opinion, all but the Criminal Part of it. And as the Nation joined in the Judgment of their Disease, so they did in the Remedy. They saw there was no Remedy left, but the last; and when that Remedy took Place, the whole Frame of the Government was restor'd intire and unhurt. This shewed the excellent Temper the Nation was in at that Time, that after such Provocations from an Abuse of the regal Power, and such a Convulsion, no one Part of the Constitution was alter'd, or suffer'd the least Damage; but on the contrary, the whole received new Life and Vigour.

My Lords, As that Doctrine of unlimited Non-resistance was implicitly renounced by the whole Nation in the Revolution, so divers Acts of Parliament afterwards pass'd, expressing that Renunciation. I beg leave to read a few Passages out of the Laws that were then made. In the First of King William and Queen Mary, was the Act for Abrogating the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and appointing other Oaths. By that Act, the Declaration injoin'd to be taken by several Acts in the Time of King Charles II. to this Purpose, That it is not lawful, on any Pretence whatsoever, to take up Arms against the King, was taken away. Then in the second Session of that Parliament, was the Act for declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject: In that Act Notice is taken, that the late King James did endeavour to subvert and extirpate the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom; and the particular Instances of Malè Administration are set forth: Then it declares, that that unhappy Prince had abdicated the Government, and the Throne was thereby vacant; and that it had pleas'd Almighty God to make the Prince of Orange the Glorious Instrument of delivering the Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power. And if the Instrument, who brought about that Deliverance, be stiled Glorious, surely the Means us'd by him is (in Consequence) approved and applauded; and his late Majesty is mention'd as the same Glorious Instrument, in the Act for paying the States General the Charges of his Expedition. And surely this is an Approbation of the Means us'd by him, when that Act charges the People with Six hundred thousand Pounds for those Means, viz. the Force he brought along with him. But if it should be thought these Words are too general, and do not particularly approve the Resistance at the Revolution; there came a memorable Occasion, when the Parliament had that Particular under their Consideration; and that was, when they were considering whether they should meddle with so tender a Thing, as the taking away the Benefit of the Law from a great many of the Subjects of the Kingdom; which was done by an Act in the same second Session of that Parliament, intituled, An Act for preventing vexatious Suits, against such as acted in order to the bringing in their Majesties, or for their Service. There they take notice, that at the Time of his Majesty's glorious Enterprize, for delivering this Kingdom from Popery and arbitrary Power, and in Aid and Pursuance of the same, divers Lords, Gentlemen, and other good People well affected to their Country, did act as Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Justices of the Peace, or other Officers, Civil or Military, tho' not sufficiently authoris'd thereunto; and did apprehend and put in Custody several crimineous and suspected Persons; and did seise and use divers Horses, Arms, and other Things; and did enter into the Houses and Possessions of several Persons, and did Quarter, and cause to be Quartered, Soldiers and others there; which Proceedings, in Times of Peace and common Safety, would not have been warrantable: Yet that Act declares they were necessary, in regard of the Exigence of publick Affairs, and ought to be justified; and provides an Indemnity for those who acted in that Resistance, from the Actions that might be brought by their Fellow-Subjects.

My Lords, I shall conclude this Head with taking notice of the Form of Prayer, appointed by Royal Authority, for the Fifth of November, now doubly memorable: There is in that Form not only Thanks offered to Almighty God for the Revolution, but for the Success given to those Means that were us'd to bring about that wonderful Deliverance: What else is the Meaning of thanking God, for giving his late Majesty a safe Arrival here, and making all Opposition fall before him, till he became our King and Governour?

But, my Lords, notwithstanding the Justice of those Steps that were taken to bring about the Revolution, notwithstanding the Temper and Prudence that was shewn in the Settlement of it, and the Sanction since given to it, not only by the Royal, but the whole Legislative Authority, Dr. Sacheverell hath condemn'd the Resistance, (which was the Principal, if not the only Means) by which that Deliverance was wrought; which was the last Thing I propos'd to shew to your Lordships.

My Lords, This Article is divided into three Branches: First, The general Charge, that he suggests and maintains, that the necessary Means us'd to bring about the Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable. The second and third Branches are Particulars of that General; viz. That his late Majesty disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance; and that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the said Revolution.

To maintain this Article, I will not repeat the particular Words of the Sermon, in order to the Application of them; that is a Province which is assigned to another Gentleman, who will speak after me: But I shall offer to your Lordships what I apprehend to be the clear Sense and Meaning of those Passages in the Sermon, which maintain this Article. In the eleventh Page of the Quarto Edition, he lays down a general Position, of the utter Illegality of Resistance, upon any Pretence whatsoever. He says, there are some who deny this Position, who are new Preachers, and new Politicians, who teach divers Antimonarchical and pernicious Doctrines. He goes on, and says, They do not only deny this Position, but urge the Revolution in Defence of their Denial; that is, by producing that as an Instance of a justifiable Resistance.

Then he exclaims against these Men, as endeavouring to cast black and odious Colours on the late King and the Revolution; whereas he says, the King disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance by his Declaration; and the Parliament disowned it, because they declare they only fill'd a vacant Throne, without taking Notice how it became so; and they burnt a Book which alledged Conquest, because it had that Ingredient of Resistance in it.

This Extract out of the Sermon makes out the first Article, which is, his condemning the Resistance, which the Commons call the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution. For, first, that general Position of his condemns Resistance in any Case whatsoever. Secondly, he introduces some as denying this Position, and fastens a vile and odious Character upon them. Thirdly, he makes those that deny this Doctrine object to it an Authority or President of a lawful Resistance, viz. that at the Revolution; but, my Lords, this he does only to give up the Lawfulness of that Resistance, and condemn that as well as any other. For, Fourthly, he answers this Objection, by denying there was any Resistance in that Case, a Fact as clear as the Sun at Noon-day, and which all the Nation saw and rejoiced at. He brings the late King and the Parliament to witness against any Resistance in the Revolution; and yet he has shewn by two Quotations out of the Prince of Orange's Declaration, one in his Answer, and the other in the printed Sermon, that his late Majesty was so far from disclaiming Resistance, that he avowed it, and invited the Subjects of this Kingdom to join in that Resistance; for in his Answer, he cites that Passage in his Declaration; wherein his Majesty takes Notice, that he carried a Force with him, sufficient, by the Blessing of God, to defend him from the Violence of Evil Counsellors; and that he designed that Expedition to oblige King James to call a Free Parliament: And by his Quotation of another Passage in the Prince of Orange's Declaration, it appears his late Majesty was, by divers Subjects of King James's, invited to and assisted in that Expedition; which being an Expedition by Force, to oblige that King to call a Free Parliament, doth it not carry in it a plain and manifest avowing of Resistance? My Lords, as to what he says in Relation to the Parliament's disowning any Resistance at the Revolution, by asserting, that they set the Crown on the King's Head on no other Title than that of the Vacancy of the Throne, that appears to be directly otherwise from the several Passages in divers Acts of Parliament which I have before-mentioned: To which I only add, that in the Conference between the two Houses, previous to the settling the Crown on the King's Head, the Word Abdicated was insisted upon and carried; for that it included in it the Male-Administration of King James, which the Word Deserted (desired to be used instead of it) did not: And this appears by the Journal. He therefore knowing that there was Resistance at the Revolution, and that the late King and the Parliament avowed that Resistance; and he pretending to defend it only by denying those Facts, hath (by a necessary Implication) asserted, That that Resistance was not an Exception to his general Rule, but stands condemned by it.

My Lords, I shall not enter upon the Consideration of the Doctor's Answer to this Article, because I don't know whether his Counsel will think fit to abide by it; nor would I meddle with any Thing that is proper for the Reply.

The Sum of the whole Proof is this: The Doctor lays down a Doctrine, condemning Resistance in all Cases whatsoever: He makes those who deny this Doctrine, Asserters of Antimonarchical Principles: He takes Notice of the Revolution, only to give it up: He admits, that if there were Resistance in that Case, that it was as unlawful as any other Resistance. He asserts that to be true, which every one knows to be false: He says, the late King disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance; the Parliament disowned it; and they who say there was any Resistance in it, cast black and odious Colours on the late King and the Revolution; and consequently, he condemns the Resistance used to bring about the Revolution, which is the Matter of the first Article.

This, my Lords, is what the Commons rely upon, to maintain and make out the first Article of their Charge against the Criminal at the Bar; and they refer the Consideration of it to your Lordships Wisdom and Justice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. MY Lords, It falls to my Share, Sir Rob. Eyre. to state to your Lordships the several Passages in the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, which the Commons rely upon as a Proof of the first Article; and to shew the particular Weakness and Insufficiency of the Answer given to this Charge.

The Charge is, That the Gentleman at the Bar doth suggest and maintain, That the necessary Means used to bring about the late happy Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable; That his late Majesty, in his Declaration, disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; and, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the said Revolution.

The Passages upon which the first Article is founded, are in the eleventh and twelfth Pages of this Sermon; where Dr. Sacheverell having first asserted, "That the grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar upon which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the supreme Power in all Things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, which, He says, "has been lately exploded and ridiculed, goes on in these Words:

"Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence; but certainly they are the greatest Enemies of that, and his late Majesty, and the most ungrateful for the Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such black and odious Colours upon both. How often must they be told, that the King himself solemnly disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance, in his Declaration? And that the Parliament declared, that they set the Crown on his Head upon no other Title but that of the Vacancy of the Throne? And did they not unanimously condemn to the Flames that infamous Libel, that would have pleaded the Title of Conquest, by which Resistance was suppos'd?

These Words the Commons apprehend to be a full Proof of the Assertions charg'd in the first Article, for Resistance was the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution.

And the Doctor expressly affirms in this Place, that the King disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; he asserts it as a thing notorious, which no Body could be a Stranger to : He says, the King disclaim'd it solemnly ; he disclaim'd it in his Declaration.

And he as plainly affirms, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution ; for he first lays down the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, as a fundamental Doctrine ; and then acquaints his Auditory, that his Adversaries thought they could effectually stop his Mouth, and had him sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urged the Revolution in their Defence ; but that they were the greatest Enemies to the King and to the Revolution, who endeavour'd to cast such black and odious Colours upon both.

Now this Point, which he says his Adversaries thought they had him sure and unanswerably upon, is plainly the Point of Resistance, which he had asserted to be illegal upon any Pretence whatsoever ; and others, he says, had denied, and had urg'd the Revolution in their Defence.

And the urging of the Revolution in that Case, as an Instance of the Legality of Resistance, in Opposition to his general Doctrine, is what he calls casting black and odious Colours upon the King and the Revolution ; for his Argument runs thus. All Resistance is utterly illegal ; the King disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance ; the Parliament set the Crown upon his Head upon no other Title than that of the Vacancy of the Throne ; and burnt a Book because it asserted a Title by which Resistance was supposed ; and therefore to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution.

This, my Lords, is the Force of his Reasoning, and the plain and obvious Sense of this Part of the Paragraph ; and therefore fully makes out the Charge of his asserting and maintaining, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the said Revolution.

I come now to consider the Answer he makes to this Article, which he divides into three Parts.

“ And first, he denies that he doth suggest and maintain, that the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable ; and says, that he doth not affirm in any Part of that Sermon any thing concerning the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution ; the said Henry Sacheverell is so far from reflecting on his late Majesty or the happy Revolution, that he endeavours in that Sermon to clear the Revolution, and his late Majesty, from the black and odious Colours which their greatest Enemies had cast upon both.

Now the material Part of the Answer to this Branch of the Article is, “ That he denies his maintaining that the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution were odious and unjustifiable, and his affirming any thing concerning those necessary Means. But this is no more than saying that he has affirmed nothing by the Words Necessary Means ; and 'tis very true, that the Words Necessary Means are not used in any Part of the Sermon.

But no Body will say, that 'tis requisite to charge the Assertion in the very Words.

And therefore if Resistance was necessary, and the Means used, in that extraordinary Case of the Revolution, he has asserted the Means to be odious and unjustifiable, tho' he has done it in other Terms, and by Words more particular and express.

“ And as to that Part of the Article whereby he is charged with suggesting and maintaining, “ That his late Majesty in his Declaration disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance :

“ He acknowledges himself to have made this Suggestion ; but says, that he made it not in Dishonour, but in Vindication of his Majesty ; the Resistance he represents the King to have disclaimed, being such a Resistance as tended to the Conquest of this Realm ; for which he refers to that Part of the Declaration which is printed at the Bottom of the eleventh Page in the Sermon ; and upon this Ground he observes, that there are these other Passages in the Declaration — “ We have thought fit to go over to England, and to carry over with us a Force sufficient, by the Blessing of God, to defend ourselves from the Violence of evil Counsellors. — We think fit to declare, that this our Expedition is intended for no other Design than to have a free and lawful Parliament assembled.

Now in this Part of his Answer Doctor Sacheverell admits, that he made the Suggestion charged upon him, in the same Words that are used in the Article ; but defends himself by alledging, that the Commons have mistaken his Meaning. — He meant only, that the King disclaimed a Resistance which tended to Conquest.

But 'tis clear and plain, that the Words have no such limited or restrained Sense, and that the Meaning he would now put upon them is a mere Shift and Evasion ; for the Proposition is general, The King disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance : And the Use he makes of it shews, that his Meaning was as general as his Words ; for he is replying upon those who urge the Revolution in Answer to his general Position, That Resistance is utterly illegal upon any Pretence whatsoever ; and how does he answer the Case of the Revolution, or is it possible to be answered, but by saying, that there was no Resistance at all in the Revolution ; the King, who was principally concerned in it, disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance ?

The Question is stated upon Resistance in general ; Whether Resistance in any Case, or upon any Occasion, be lawful ?

And therefore, if the Lawfulness of Resistance in any Case be allowed, 'tis impossible that his general Assertion should stand ; and 'tis equally impossible to get clear of the Objection, without denying the Resistance.

Doctor Sacheverell was aware of this, and therefore denies that there was any Resistance at all in the Revolution, and says, That the least Imputation of it was solemnly disclaim'd and disavow'd.

For had he said, in express Terms, that the King disclaim'd all Imputation of Resistance that tended to Conquest, this would have been no Answer to the Objection : For if there was any Resistance, tho' not the particular Resistance which the King disclaim'd ; and if that Resistance which was us'd be agreed to be lawful, his fundamental Doctrine must certainly be shaken. And therefore if your Lordships suppose him to make any Use at all of this Assertion, his Words plainly spoke his Meaning, and represent the King to have disclaim'd all Resistance whatsoever.

But he excuses the making of this Suggestion, by declaring, “ That he made it not in Dishonour, “ but in Vindication of his Majesty ; and therefore “ whether he was mistaken or not in expressing “ himself, as if the late King had disclaimed all “ Imputation

" Imputation of Resistance, when he meant thereby, that the late King disclaim'd the Imputation of a Design of Conquest, he humbly conceives such a Suggestion, plainly design'd for the Honour of the late King, cannot in any reasonable Construction be thought a Reflection upon his said late Majesty, or deem'd any high Crime or Misdemeanor.

My Lords, had these Words been spoken in Vindication of his late Majesty, or great and glorious Deliverer, the Commons, who have so much at Heart the Honour of the late King, and the Justice of the Revolution, had never charg'd them upon this Gentleman as a Crime.

But they carry with them the highest Reflection upon the Honour and Justice of his Majesty; for they suppose that he denied the Lawfulness of Resistance when he was actually engaged in it, and disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance when he brought over an Army on purpose to maintain that Resistance, to which all the People of England were invited and encouraged by his Declaration.

And this Assertion, of the King's disclaiming all Resistance, could never be meant in Vindication of his Majesty from any Imputation of a Design of Conquest; for there was no Occasion for vindicating the King upon this Point, the Subject-Matter of the Discourse did not lead him to it; for the Business of the Sermon, or of this particular Paragraph is not to vindicate the Honour of the King from any such Aspersions, or to maintain the Liberties of England, by asserting, That the Constitution of Government still remains, and was not broken and dissolv'd by Conquest at the Revolution: Had that been his Ground, his Mistake had been more excusable; for then it had been proper to have urg'd that there was no Step taken towards the Revolution, which look'd like a Design of Conquest; and that the armed Force which was used in it, and had the Appearance of such a Design, was not intended to conquer; for the King, who commanded it, disclaim'd all Imputation of Resistance that tended to Conquest. Upon such a Question these things had been very properly urg'd, and there might have been some Indulgence to a general Expression, that in any Propriety of Speech could have received such a Meaning.

But when the Question is not, Whether the Revolution was brought about by Conquest, or what would be the Consequence of such an Assertion, either in regard to the Honour of the King, or the Condition of the People, there can be no Colour for saying that he meant by this general Expression, which carries no such Meaning in it self, that the King disclaimed Conquest, or a Resistance which tended to Conquest only.

Especially, my Lords, when the Subject-Matter of his Discourse naturally led him to assert this Proposition in the common and ordinary Sense which the Words import: For he is asserting the Doctrine of absolute Non-Resistance; and shewing, that the Lawfulness of the Revolution was no Argument against it; and why? Because the King disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; there was no such wicked Ingredient as Resistance in it; no other Answer would have serv'd him; and therefore it can never be suppos'd that he meant to clear the King from any Design of Conquest, or intended to say any thing in Vindication of his Majesty upon that Head.

And, in Truth, it is an apparent Scandal upon the Memory of the late King, to say there was any Occasion to clear him from this Imputation; his Actions spoke the Justice and Sincerity of his Intentions; his Business was not to conquer and enslave us, but to deliver us from Popery and Slavery, the most dreadful Calamities that could befall us, and to settle and establish our Constitution both in Church and State. This was the Ground of the glorious Enterprize he undertook, and the general Aim and Design of all his Labours through the whole Course of his Reign.

'Tis therefore plain, that what Doctor Sacheverell says in his Answer, in Excuse of his Assertion, relating to the King's disclaiming all Imputation of Resistance, was rather made to the Dishonour, than in Vindication of his Majesty; for there was no Colour to suggest that he needed any such Vindication or Defence.

And that the King did not disclaim all Imputation of Resistance, is evident, even from that Part of his Declaration which is cited in the Answer, whereby " He declares to the People (to encourage them to join with him) that he had brought over a sufficient Force to defend himself from the Violence of evil Counsellors. — And that this Expedition was designed to have a free and lawful Parliament assembled, which was a plain Force upon the executive Power that was directed by those evil Counsellors, who, by subverting the Liberties of Corporations, and practising upon the Freedom of Elections, never intended that any such free or lawful Parliament should be assembled.

This is plain Resistance in the Sense that Doctor Sacheverell takes the Word; and is so far from a Justification, that there is no Colour to say, that his Majesty disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance.

As to the last Branch of the Article, whereby he is charged that he suggests and maintains, " That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the said Revolution; he denies that he suggests or maintains any such Position.

But this Negative is fully answer'd by what has been offer'd to your Lordships upon the first Head of this Article, his asserting, That the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution were odious and unjustifiable; for if Resistance be utterly illegal upon any Pretence whatsoever, and there was Resistance in the Revolution, it necessarily follows, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon it. And this is expressly asserted by his stating the Case of the Revolution, in which there was Resistance, as an Objection to his general Doctrine of Non-Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever; and then answering this Objection, by saying, That the urging of the Revolution, as an Instance of the Legality of Resistance, was casting black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the late Revolution: For there could be no black or odious Colours cast, but from the shaking that fundamental Doctrine of absolute Non-Resistance; the Belief of which he asserts to be the Pillar upon which the Government of England stands.

And therefore the imputing of Resistance to the Revolution, must, according to the Principles he lays down, cast black and odious Colours upon the Revolution, and upon the great and glorious Instrument of it, his late Majesty, by whom it was happily brought about.

And Doctor Sacheverell himself, by the subsequent Part of his Answer, seems to think that this Assertion is fairly and plainly inferred from the Tenor of his Discourse.

For he is pleased to excuse it, by saying, "That he intended to apply it not to such Persons who impute Resistance to the Revolution, of whom he affirms nothing; but to those new Preachers, and new Politicians, who teach in Contradiction both to the Gospel and the Laws, that the People have the Power invested in them, the Fountain and Original of it, to cancel their Allegiance at their Pleasure, and call their Sovereign to Account for High Treason against his Subjects, and who urge the Revolution in Defence of such Principles; and that, unless those who impute Resistance to the Revolution be the same with those new Preachers and new Politicians, he affirms nothing concerning them.

But, my Lords, this Part of his Answer is far from excusing or extenuating his Crime; for if a Proposition be true, it will lose nothing of its Weight and Force, though the vilest Man upon Earth should make use of it; and it can be no Argument against a true Principle, that it has been made use of to ill Purposes, and to maintain Positions which are not warranted by it. 'Tis rather an Aggravation of his Crime, and a high Reflection upon the Commons, and the Justice of this Proceeding, to suppose that any such wicked Consequences as he mentions, can possibly be infer'd from defending the Resistance at the Revolution: And the Question is, Whether Doctor Sacheverell himself asserts, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, be to cast black and odious Colours upon it; and not, OF WHOM he affirms the casting such black and odious Colours?

I go on to the last Part of his Answer to this Article, where he says, "That upon the strictest Search into his said Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, he doth not find that he hath given the least colourable Pretence for the Accusation exhibited against him in this first Article, but barely by his asserting the utter Illegality of Resistance to the supreme Power upon any Pretence whatsoever; for which he conceives he has the Authority of the Church of England, which has taught and inculcated this Doctrine in her Homilies—And he doth further insist, That this Assertion is agreeable to, and warranted by the Common Law of England, and divers Acts of Parliament now remaining in full Force.

Now it must be agreed, that there is no colourable Pretence to charge him with suggesting and maintaining, that the Resistance used at the Revolution was odious and unjustifiable, if the Doctrine of the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever be true; for upon this Principle his Censure is just, and it must necessarily follow, that the Resistance used in bringing about the Revolution is not to be maintain'd.

And therefore the Commons should think themselves ungrateful for the Deliverance, if they did not vindicate the Honour of the late King, and of those illustrious Persons, who, upon his Invitation, defended the Constitution at that time by Resistance, and declare that this Resistance was lawful, honourable and just.

They had Reason to hope, that after so many Years had passed in a happy Enjoyment of all the Advantages of a Free-born People, and at a Time when the Subjects of this Kingdom are in the full Possession of their Rights and Liberties under her Majesty's gracious Protection, and the wisest and happiest Administration that England ever saw, that no Body could have been so wicked as to cast an Odium upon the necessary Means whereby these Blessings were obtain'd, and are continued to us. But since, notwithstanding our blessed Deliverance from Popery and Arbitrary Power, and the Benefits we enjoy by restoring the Constitution both in Church and State; and above all, by her Majesty's happy Administration, which has improved the Lustre of the Crown to the Honour of the Nation, and the common Benefit of every particular Subject; yet there are Men of restless and turbulent Spirits, Enemies to the Revolution, who are continually urging the Resistance then used as a fundamental Error, fatal to every thing that has been built upon it: This, my Lords, strikes so directly at the present Establishment, that the Commons think it their indispensable Duty to demand your Lordships Judgment upon this important Subject.

And they think it the more necessary at this time, because 'tis plain and obvious to every one's Observation, that since the late Attempt made by the Pretender, this Principle of the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, has been espoused and maintained with more than ordinary Warmth and Zeal; and the Commons apprehend, that it can have no other Aim or Tendency than to blacken the Revolution, and thereby to shake the Foundation of our present happy Settlement.

Your Lordships will therefore, in your great Wisdom, consider the Consequences of this Assertion, in regard to her Majesty, the Protestant Succession, and the future Happiness of this Kingdom.

The Commons must always resent, with the utmost Detestation and Abhorrence, every Position that may shake the Authority of that Act of Parliament, whereby the Crown is settled upon her Majesty, and whereby the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, do, in the Name of all the People of England, most humbly and faithfully submit themselves, their Heirs and Posterities, to her Majesty, which this general Principle of absolute Non-resistance must certainly shake.

For, if the Resistance at the Revolution was illegal, the Revolution settled in Usurpation, and this Act can have no greater Force and Authority than an Act pass'd under a Usurper.

And the Commons take leave to observe, that the Authority of this Parliamentary Settlement is a Matter of the greatest Consequence to maintain, in a Case where the hereditary Right to the Crown is contested; for her Majesty's most bitter and implacable Enemies, the Friends of the Pretender, (who all assert the utter Illegality of the Resistance used at the Revolution) can advance his Title to the Crown, and call him King, upon no other Ground than the Pretence of an hereditary Right.

The Commons therefore, out of the most profound Duty and Allegiance which they owe, and shall ever pay to her Majesty, and to maintain the Security of her Government, and guard her Throne against every Insinuation that may promote or favour the Interest of the Pretender, think themselves obliged to take Notice of this Assertion, as tending to weaken the Authority of this Act of Parliament, whereby her Majesty's Title is declared.

Your Lordships will likewise consider of what Consequence the Dishonouring of the Revolution may be to Posterity, and the future Happiness of this Kingdom in a Protestant Succession to the Crown. For by the same Act, all Persons who shall hold Communion with the See of Rome, or shall marry Papists, are declared incapable to Inherit, Possess, or enjoy the Crown. And 'tis enacted, That the Crown and Government shall from time to time descend to, and be enjoyed by such Persons, being Protestants Protestants, that should have inherited and enjoyed the same, in case such Popish Prince were naturally dead.

And the immediate Protestant Succession in the illustrious House of Hanover, is likewise settled by an Act of the same Reign.

This shews of what Importance it is, to the present and future Happiness of this Kingdom, to clear his late Majesty and the Revolution from those black and odious Colours which this Gentleman has cast upon both.

But, my Lords, he makes it part of his Defence, that his Assertion is agreeable to the Common Law of England, and divers Acts of Parliament now remaining in Force.

The Gentleman that spoke before me, has shewn how far that Assertion is a direct Contradiction to several Acts of Parliament; and therefore I shall only say, that it can never be supposed that the Laws were made to set up a despotick Power to destroy themselves, and to warrant the Subversion of a Constitution of Government which they were designed to establish and defend.

This would be a strange, absurd, and contradictory Imagination, and was thought so at the Revolution by the wisest Men of that Time, by the best Friends to the Monarchy, and Men the most eminent for their Sufferings in the Cause of the Church.

And it appears, by the several Instances mention'd in the Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown, that at the Time of the Revolution there was a total Subversion of the Constitution of Government both in Church and State, which is a Case that the Laws of England could never suppose, provide for, or have in View.

And the same Answer may with equal Reason be applied to the general Doctrine of the Church, express'd in her Homilies.

This, my Lords, is what I have to offer to your Lordships in Maintenance of the first Article; I am sensible how defective I have been, but what I have fail'd in, will be abundantly supplied by the Gentlemen who are appointed to assist in maintaining this Article.

Sir John Holland. MY Lords, the present Consideration is of the greatest Importance; no less, than whether so many of your Lordships, and the Commons of Great Britain, who took up Arms at the Revolution, and were then thought Patriots of your Country, were really Rebels; whether our late Deliverer was an Usurper; and whether the Protestant Succession is legal and valid.

All these Considerations depend upon the Lawfulness of the Resistance at the Revolution. That there was a Resistance, is most plain, if taking up Arms in Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, Cheshire, and almost all the Counties of England; if the Desertion of a Prince's own Troops to an invading Prince, and turning their Arms against their Sovereign, be Resistance. But if Subjects be obliged to Absolute and Unconditional Obedience, the Convention of the States, the Settlement and Entail of the Crown by them, and the further Settlement in the Protestant Succession under that Settlement, must, from that Resistance, be unlawful and void.

The Criminal was aware of this just Objection to his general Doctrine, when applied to the Revolution; as appears from his endeavouring, upon second Thoughts, to conceal it by his marginal Note, to hint, that by Resistance he meant Conquest. And no wonder he endeavour'd to colour so bold a Stroke, which he could not but expect to hear of with the utmost Repentment from the Government.

But it so falls out, my Lords, that what he trusted to for a Screen, aggravates the Heinousness of his Crime; for it shews, that he instils into his Auditors those Notions from the Pulpit, which he dares not own in Print. Nothing can be more manifest, than that he could not by Resistance mean Conquest, even from his own Expressions: For in the very next Period, he says, And did they not, i. e. the Parliament, unanimously condemn to the Flames (as it justly deserved) that infamous Libel, that would have pleaded the Title of Conquest, by which Resistance was supposed? So that he knew them to be distinct Notions; and indeed so they must be, because one may be without the other.

It is an unaccountable Presumption, that he could suppose so weak a Pretence could pass upon the World; but much more surprizing it is, that he could apprehend so mean a Subterfuge could prevent your Lordships Justice. But from hence the Commons observe, that he is a concealed Man, and of a dangerous Spirit: And as such we have brought him hither to reform him, and to be an Example to others.

My Lords, The Commons would not be understood, as if they were pleading for a licentious Resistance; as if Subjects were left to their Good-will and Pleasure, when they are to Obey, and when to Resist. No, my Lords, they know they are obliged by all the Ties of social Creatures, and Christians, for Wrath and Conscience-sake to submit to their Sovereign. The Commons do not abet humour-some factious Arms: They aver them to be Rebels. But yet they maintain, that that Resistance at the Revolution, which was so necessary, was lawful and just from that Necessity.

We do agree, that the Laws concerning Obedience, both human and divine, are very express and positive; and no Wonder that the Homilies and Fathers, dead and living, follow the same way of expressing our Duty in general Terms. We readily grant this, but it does not follow that there can be no Exceptions from these general Rules in Conscience.

There is no Law more positive and express than that which enjoins the Observation of the Sabbath, for therein we are commanded to do no manner of Work. But yet we know, that Necessity makes an allowed Exception to that general Law. And the Reason why that Necessity is allowed as a just Exception to that positive Law, will guide us to know, what Laws will admit of Exceptions from Necessity, and what not. The Reason our divine Law-giver assigns is, because the Sabbath was made for Man, and not Man for the Sabbath; from whence plainly follows this Corollary; That where there is a positive Law, and that Law respects not some principal End for which Man was made, there Necessity may make a justifiable Exception, how express soever that Law is.

Now, my Lords, whether Government was made for Man, or Man for Government, will easily appear from this short Observation, that Man was made in a State of Perfection; and the Rectitude of that State supposes the Absence of all those Crimes, which are the Objects of Government, and which Government is to reform. And therefore Government could not be one End of Man's Creation; and these general Rules of Obedience may, upon a real Necessity, admit a lawful Exception; and such a necessary Exception we assert the Revolution to be.

'Tis with this View of Necessity, only absolute Necessity of preserving our Laws, Liberties and Religion; 'tis with this Limitation that we desire to be understood, when any of us speak of Resistance in general. The Necessity of the Resistance at the Revolution was at that Time obvious to every Man. Every one, who either was not, or did not find his easy Mind, prepar'd to be a Tool to Popery and Slavery, dreaded the Instances of that Necessity. The cancelling all the Security from Laws by a dispensing Power; the erecting Commissions to deprive Subjects of their Property, not according to Law, but Humour; the making the whole Government depend upon the arbitrary Pleasure of the then Prince, cannot but be a Justification of that Necessity before God and Man.

And thus, my Lords, it was thought, at the Time this Resistance was on Foot. For then, when the Time was most proper for Admonitions of this Nature, the Clergy were so far from averring the Unlawfulness of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, that the true distinguishing Characteristick of a Church-of-England-Man then was, wishing that Resistance good Luck, and rejoicing at its Success. And yet the Gentleman at the Bar makes this Exception the Instance of an unjust Resistance, by an ironical Assertion of the late King's solemnly disclaiming the least Imputation of Resistance in his Declaration; for ironical it must be, when every Body must believe that he himself knew the contrary; a Figure of Speech very well understood, and known to be the most biting Sarcasm.

My Lords, So much depends upon the Revolution, that the Commons are highly Jealous of the Honour of it. It is, indeed, twenty Years since the Revolution was settled; but it is within much less than twenty Years that a Pretender has attempted to invade our Country, to set this Revolution aside. That Person, even with his own good Opinion of his Right, knows, he can have no Pretence to the Crown, unless the Prisoner's Political Divinity be true, which we aver it is not. But lest this Pretender should apprehend that his Friends are much increased, when he hears that the Revolution is publicly branded in Sermons as black and odious; the Commons have impeached this Preacher, that he might not be guilty of this high Crime and Misdemeanor without Discouragement, and have brought him to your Lordships Bar for Justice, that he may not do it with Impunity.

Mr. Walpole. MY Lords, The Commons are now making good their Charge against Doctor Henry Sacheverell contain'd in the first Article, wherein he is accused for suggesting and maintaining, that the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable, and that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the Revolution.

By what has been already offer'd to your Lordships, I make no doubt but you are fully convinced, how injurious these Positions must be to the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, and how highly they deserve, and loudly call for your Lordships speedy and exemplary Justice.

The great Licentiousness of the Press, in censuring and reflecting upon all Parts of the Government, has of late given too just Cause of Offence; but when only Pamphlets and common Libels are Matters of Complaint; when none but Mercenary Scriblers, and the Hackney Pens of a discontented Party, are employ'd to vent their Malice, 'tis fit to leave them to the common Course of the Law, and to the ordinary Proceeding of the Courts below. But, my Lords, when the Trumpet is sounded in Sion; when the Pulpit takes up the Cudgels; when the Cause of the Enemies of our Government is call'd the Cause of God, and of the Church; when this bitter and poisonous Pill is gilded over with the specious Name of Loyalty, and the People are taught for their Souls and Consciences Sake to swallow these pernicious Doctrines; when instead of sound Religion, Divinity, and Morality, factious and seditious Discourses are become the constant Entertainments of some Congregations; the Commons cannot but think it high time to put a Stop to this growing Evil, and for the Authority of a Parliament to interpose, and exert itself, in Defence of the Revolution, the present Government, and the Protestant Succession. All which the Commons think so materially concern'd in this Question, that if the Doctrines advanced by Doctor Sacheverell, are not Criminal in the highest Degree, it will follow, that the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution were illegal, and consequently, that the present Establishment, and Protestant Succession, founded upon that Revolution, are void and of no Effect.

The Commons cannot but apprehend that the just Resentment and Indignation they have shewn upon this Occasion, will meet with the general Applause of all that are heartily and sincerely well affected to her Majesty, and her Government; but for all those, whose Principles and Practices render them most justly suspected to have other Views, they are not at all surpris'd to find them alarm'd, and under the greatest Concern, at this Trial.

I am very sensible, my Lords, of the Difficulty and Nicety that attends the speaking to this Point, and that whilst a loyal Subject and faithful Servant of the best of Queens, is speaking in Defence of the necessary and commendable Resistance used at the Revolution, his Arguments may be misconstrued, and misrepresented, as maintaining Antimonarchical Schemes.

But surely, my Lords, to plead for Resistance, that Resistance, I mean, which alone can be concern'd in this Debate, is to assert and maintain the very Being of our present Government and Constitution; and to assert Non-resistance in that boundless and unlimited Sense in which Doctor Sacheverell presumes to assert it, is to sap and undermine the very Foundations of our Government, to remove the natural Basis and fundamental Strength of our Constitution, and to leave it under set with imaginary Props and Buttresses, which do, at best, but ill support a shaken Foundation: And 'tis a most surprizing Assurance in the Enemies of our Government, that whilst they are striking at the Root, and digging up the Foundations, upon which our present and future Settlement is built, that they should hope to pass upon the World as Friends to either. But so irreconcilable are the Professions and Practices of some Men, so awkwardly do they speak well of what they do not in their Hearts approve, that in Vindication of his late Majesty (for that's a Part that sometimes they think useful to Act) they declare his most glorious Enterprize to save a sinking Nation, utterly illegal: To recommend themselves to the Queen, they condemn that Revolution, without which she never had been Queen, and we a most unhappy People: To testify their Zeal and Affection for the Protestant Succession, they invalidate all the Laws that have been made for securing that Blessing to Posterity: And lastly, to manifest their

Aversion,

Aversion, and for ever to blast all Hopes of the Pretender, they advance and maintain the Hereditary Right, as the only true Right to the Crown. But what Interest these Opinions may at one time or other be produced to support, and in favour of whose Pretensions these Insinuations are easily understood to be, and in favour of what Settlement they can hardly be constr'd, I submit to your Lordships Consideration.

The utter Illegality of Resistance, upon any Pretence whatsoever, is the general Position laid down in the Sermon, which, if it be strictly, and in the most extensive Manner true, the assuming and exercising a Power of dispensing with, and suspending the Laws; the Commitment and Prosecution of the Bishops; the erecting a Court of Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes; the levying Money by Pretence of Prerogative; the raising and keeping a Standing Army without Consent of Parliament; the violating the Freedom of Elections of Members to serve in Parliament; and all the Grievances enumerated in the Bill of Rights, were all meer Pretences, and not sufficient to warrant and justify what was then done, in Defence of the true, ancient, and indubitable Rights and Liberties of the People of this Kingdom; which are now again enacted, ratified and confirmed, and enjoined to be firmly and strictly holden and observed. By what Evasions, or Distinctions, the Doctor will explain himself off upon this Head, cannot easily foresee; unless he will be so ingenuous as now to confess, what there is too much Reason to believe will be his Opinion, if ever a proper Time shall serve for declaring, That the Acts of Parliament made upon, and since the Revolution, are only the Effects of a happy Usurpation, and no Part of the true Law of the Land.

Resistance is no where enacted to be legal, but subjected, by all the Laws now in Being, to the greatest Penalties; 'tis what is not, cannot, nor ought ever to be describ'd, or affirm'd, in any positive Law, to be excusable: When, and upon what never-to-be-expected Occasions, it may be exercised, no Man can foresee, and ought never to be thought of, but when an utter Subversion of the Laws of the Realm threatens the whole Frame of a Constitution, and no Redress can otherwise be hoped for: It therefore does, and ought for ever to stand, in the Eye and Letter of the Law, as the highest Offence. But because any Man, or Party of Men, may not, out of Folly or Wantonness, commit Treason, or make their own Discontents, ill Principles, or disguised Affections to another Interest, a Pretence to resist the Supreme Power, will it follow from thence that the utmost Necessity ought not to engage a Nation in its own Defence for the Preservation of the Whole? Or, on the other Side, because the greatest and most inexplicable Emergencies did sufficiently justify and warrant the Resistance of the Revolution, will it be a Consequence that therefore, upon every slight Pretence or common Occasion, the Laws that fence against Treason will be of no Effect? No, my Lords, I hope your just Judgment in this Case will convince the World, that every seditions, discontented, hot-headed, ungifted, unedifying Preacher, (the Doctor will pardon me for borrowing one String of Epithets from him, and for once using a little of his own Language) who had no Hopes of distinguishing himself in the World, but by a matchless Indiscretion, may not advance, with Impunity, Doctrines destructive of the Peace and Quiet of her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession, and prepare the Minds of the People for an Alteration, by giving them ill Impressions of the present Establishment and its Administration.

The Doctrine of unlimited, unconditional passive Obedience, was first invented to support arbitrary and despotick Power, and was never promoted or countenanced by any Government that had not Designs some time or other of making use of it: What then can be the Design of preaching this Doctrine now, unask'd, unfought for, in her Majesty's Reign, where the Law is the only Rule and Measure of the Power of the Crown, and of the Obedience of the People? If then this Doctrine can neither be an Advantage or Security to her Majesty, who neither wants nor desires it, to what End and Purpose must every thinking Man conclude 'tis now set on Foot, but to unhinge the present Government, by setting aside all that has been done in Opposition to that Doctrine; and when, by these Means the way is made clear to another's Title, the People are ready instructed to submit to whatever shall be imposed upon them.

It may be expected, after I have said thus much in general, that I should proceed to shew in what Parts of the Sermon these Aspersions are contain'd: But, my Lords, that Part has been so fully and distinctly spoke to, by those learned Gentlemen who are more proper, and a great deal more able, to manage that Province, that I will not mispend your Lordships Time, by repeating what has been already so fully and justly made out; but so much I will venture to say, That if we remove the Rubbage, with which the Doctor has an excellent Talent at puzzling Common Sense, and bring together the several Sentences, that can only be relative to one another, 'tis impossible for the Art of Man to make any Inferences or Constructions, so close and strong, as the plain and genuine Sense of the whole Scope of his Sermon must, at first View, suggest to every Man's Understanding. And all that the Doctor alleges in his Defence is, that in the Revolution there was no Resistance at all; and that the King did utterly disclaim any such Imputation. But surely, my Lords, it cannot be now necessary to prove Resistance in the Revolution; I should as well expect that your Lordships would desire me, for Form's sake, to prove the Sun shines at Noon-day. If then there was most undoubtedly Resistance used to bring about the Revolution, it will follow that all the Censures, which are so freely bestowed upon Resistance in general, must attend, and will be imputed to the Revolution: And if Resistance be utterly illegal, upon any Pretence whatsoever; if it is a Sin, which unrepented of, by the Doctrine of the Church of England, carries sure and certain Damnation; if, upon Repentance, there is no Remission of Sins without a steadfast Purpose to amend the Evil we have done, and to make all possible Restitution, or at least to do our utmost Endeavours for that Purpose; I beg your Lordships to consider what a Duty is here pressed, upon the Peril of Damnation, upon every Man's Conscience, that knows or believes that there was Resistance in the Revolution, and is conscious to himself of being any ways assisting, or even consenting to this damnable Sin; and what must be the Consequence if these Doctrines, without any Reserve or Exception, are with Impunity preach'd throughout the Kingdom. All which, my Lords, I hope is sufficient to satisfy your Lordships, that Doctor Sacheverell is guilty of the Charge exhibited against him in the first Article; and that he is an Offender of that Nature and Malignity, that this Court only could be the proper Judges of such High Crimes; and from your Lordships Justice, the Commons hope, That his Punishment will be adequate to the Heinousness of his Offence.

Sir John Hawles. MY Lords, I am commanded by the Commons of Great Britain to be assisting to the Gentlemen that spoke before me, for the proving the Prisoner at the Bar guilty of the Crime charged in the first Article of his Impeachment; which is, That he did suggest and maintain, in his Sermon preached at St. Paul's, That the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable; and that his late Majesty in his Declaration disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance; and that to impute Resistance to the said Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours on his late Majesty. In making good which Article against the Doctor, I hope the Gentlemen that have spoke before me will excuse me, if I make use of another Method than what they have done; which I shall do, not misliking the Course they have taken, nor that I think the Method I shall take is better than theirs, but only because I would not repeat what's said by them, which I am sure would come with a worse Grace from me, than it did from them; and because I am sure what was said is very well remembered by your Lordships. What I shall offer is, I think, somewhat to the Purpose, and was not mentioned by the Gentlemen before. As to the Passages taken out of the Sermon to prove the Doctor guilty of the Fact of this first Article, they have been so fully opened, and so very well applied, that I have very little to add to what has been said; I shall therefore only say, that the Clause of his Sermon, wherein he asserts, that "The grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar on which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever", he lays down not as a Doctrine he would teach his Congregation; but in order to draw an Argument from thence for some other Purpose; and what that is, appears plainly afterwards. For having alledg'd some Things not proper for the Occasion for which the Day upon which he preach'd was solemniz'd, he adds, "Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence; but certainly they are the greatest Enemies of that, and his late Majesty, and the most ungrateful for their Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such black and odious Colours upon both. How often must they be told, that the late King himself solemnly disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance?" By which 'tis plain, that the Position of the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power laid down, was only to shock and lay odious Colours upon the Revolution, or the Means whereby it was brought about; he knowing that the Means whereby the Revolution was brought about was by Force, and he knew it was so declared by the Act of Parliament made in the first Year of King William and Queen Mary, for preventing vexatious Suits against such as acted in order to the bringing in the late King and Queen. And tho' he would insinuate that the same was not done by Force, I must own he does not assert that either it was or was not done by Force; but he strongly insinuates it was not done by Force, when he asserts, tho' untruly, that the late King disclaimed any Resistance upon his coming. I'll say nothing more as to that Matter; and nothing as to that other, that has been largely open'd, relating to the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power; the rather, because, if it was doubtful, the Acts of Parliament mentioned in the Preface to the Articles, whereby the Revolution has been declared to be a glorious Enterprize, and the Means whereby it was brought about justified, have determin'd that Matter; and because your Lordships, as I think, will not suffer the Doctor, or his Counsel, to say any thing against the Revolution, or the Means whereby it was brought about.

The Commons of Great Britain own your Lordships to be the Supreme Court of Judicature in this Government, but yet they think that Acts of Parliament, whereof your Lordships are in part the Makers, are as binding upon your Lordships, as a Court of Judicature, as they are upon any Court of Westminster-Hall, where Matters determin'd by Act of Parliament are never suffer'd to be disputed afterwards; but I own, what is practis'd in Westminster-Hall is not a Rule whereby your Lordships ought to be govern'd, and therefore I rely only upon the Reason of what I assert; for altho' your Lordships are the Supreme Court, and from whom no Appeal lies to any other Court of Judicature, yet your Lordships, as you are Part of the Legislature, are greater than you are in your Judicial Capacity, in which you are subject to the Law; tho' in your Legislative Capacity, in Concurrence with two other Powers, you are above the Law. It is therefore incongruous, that a Court of Persons of less Power should judge otherwise than the Court of greater Power had determined; but this I submit to your Lordships, and am sure the Gentlemen of Counsel with the Doctor know their Duty so well in this Matter, that they will not give your Lordships the Trouble of an Admonition upon this Occasion. I won't add more upon this Subject, but proceed, with your Lordships Permission, to prove the Doctor Guilty of what he is charged with in this first Article, by the Doctrine by himself laid down in his Sermon, and admit for Argument-sake the same to be true; tho' this I must assert, that he carries the Doctrine somewhat farther than the Apostles did in some Respects, but in other Respects seems to restrain it more than they did. In the restraining Part he seems to confine the absolute and unconditional Obedience to Things lawful; which Restraint looks like something, but in Truth, upon Examination, is nothing; for suppose the Supreme Power commands the Subject to do something which it thinks is Lawful, but the Subject not willing to obey, pretending the thing to be Unlawful, the true Reasons being that they are chargeable, troublesome, hazardous, or the like; in this Case who is to be Judge, the Supreme Power, or the Subject? In the Reason of the thing, neither of them are proper Judges; for the Supreme Power will be byass'd, by Reason of the Command given by them at first, and will be ashamed to own what they commanded was Unlawful, and therefore will give Judgment on their own Side, to justify themselves in what they have commanded; and the Subject will be as much byass'd for the same Reason that he was at first dissatisfied with the Command. And there being no higher Power or Authority to appeal to than the Supreme Power, that must needs be the Judge, from whom there can be no Appeal. But perhaps the Doctor and I differ differ in the Persons in whom the Supreme Power is lodg'd; for the Doctor has not mention'd that Matter, either in his Sermon, or in his Answer to the Articles; but I hope, in the Answer he is to give to what's now objected against him, he will tell us in whom that Power is lodg'd. I'll tell him in whom I think it is lodg'd; I think it is lodg'd in the Queen's Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled; And I think when the Acts mentioned in the Impeachment did pass (except the Act for declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject) the Supreme Power was lodg'd in the late King William and Queen Mary, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled. But as the Doctor seems to have restrain'd his Doctrine of Non-resistance, he has as much enlarged his Doctrine of absolute Obedience; for, as I think, what hitherto written or asserted, upon the Occasion of that Matter, went no farther than Passive Obedience and Non-resistance; but the Prisoner's Doctrine extends to Active Obedience as well as Passive; because, as I think, the Words of the Apostles, from whom this Doctrine is taken, seems to restrain it only to Passive Obedience and Non-resistance; and the Reasons why the Apostles inculcated no other Obedience, as I believe, was, because that was sufficient to secure the Government under which the Apostles liv'd, which was the Roman Government, and which stood in Fear of no Foreign Force, and which Government was said and believ'd could not be ruin'd but by its own Subjects, which afterwards prov'd to be true. That that their Doctrine was the Doctrine of Christianity, and truly so called, I'll readily agree to the Prisoner; but I do not think that Christianity introduc'd that Doctrine into the World; for I think, as the Doctor does, that it was as antient as Government, because it was impossible that Government could subsist, unless supported by its Subjects; but how antient that Doctrine was, can't be asserted, without knowing how Government came to be introduc'd into the World. If it was Patriarchal, as some have asserted, it was as ancient as Adam; if it was introduc'd by Conquest, then its Date was no higher than Nimrod; if it was by Compact, then I can't say when it began; but this is certain, that it was as antient as the Roman people, which was above seven hundred Years before the coming of our Saviour; but how long before the Roman Name was known, I can't take upon me to say. But tho' this Doctrine was not introduced by Christianity, yet I think it may well and properly be call'd the Christian Doctrine; for tho' amongst the Heathens it was a political Law, and oblig'd (as other Laws did) for fear of Punishment; yet Christianity first press'd this Doctrine upon the Conscience of the Subject, which no other Religion did, and that was sufficient to intitle it to the Name of Christian. But the Doctor, as I said, has carry'd it farther than the Words of the Apostles did, extending it to an Active Obedience, which the Words of the Apostles do not warrant, in the Strictness of the Expressions. But yet I won't contest with the Doctor in that Matter; for if the Doctrine, as preach'd by the Apostles, was sufficient to secure the Government they liv'd under, as it was, and that Doctrine is not sufficient to secure the Government we now live under, as it is not; the Doctor might very well think, that what he now asserts, by the Equity, as we call it (that is) the Reason of the Doctrine preach'd by the Apostles, was well warranted.

Having thus stated the Matter of the Subjects Obedience to the Supreme Powers, in which I have agreed with the Doctrine set forth in the Sermon, I can't imagine how the Doctor can justify himself in declaring against the Revolution, as he has done; when he knows, as well as any, that the Revolution has been justified by the Supreme Power, in the Acts of Parliament mentioned: For certainly it must be granted, that the Doctrine that commands Obedience to the Supreme Power, tho' in Things contrary to Nature, even to suffer Death, which is the highest Injustice that can be done a Man, rather than make an Opposition to the supreme Power; because the Death of one, or some few private persons, is a less Evil than disturbing the whole Government; that Law must needs be understood to forbid the doing, or saying any Thing to disturb the Government, the rather, because the obeying that Law cannot be pretended to be against Nature: And the Doctor's refusing to obey that implicit Law, is the Reason for which he is now prosecuted; tho' he would have it believ'd, that the Reason he is now prosecuted, was for the Doctrine he asserted of Obedience to the Supreme Power; which he might have preach'd as long as he had pleas'd, and the Commons would have taken no Offence at it, if he had stopt there, and not have taken upon him, on that Pretence or Occasion, to have cast odious Colours upon the Revolution. If he is of the Opinion he pretends, I can't imagine how it comes to pass, that he that pays that Deference to the Supreme Power, has preach'd so directly contrary to the Determinations of the Supreme Power in this Government; he very well knowing that the Lawfulness of the Revolution, and of the Means whereby it was brought about, has already been determin'd by the aforesaid Acts of Parliament; and do it in the worst manner that he could invent. For questioning the Right to the Crown here in England, has procur'd the shedding of more Blood, and caus'd more Slaughter, than all the other Matters tending to Disturbances in the Government put together. If therefore the Doctrine, which the Apostles had laid down, was only to continue the Peace of the World, as thinking the Death of some few particular Persons better to be born with than a Civil War; sure it is the highest Breach of that Law, to question the first Principles of this Government.

It is not forgotten how much Blood was spilt upon the Account of the Title between the Houses of York and Lancaster, in which the Learned in the Law did differ; and the setting on Foot that Question of the Title of the present Government, which was above twenty Years ago determin'd, and that Determination acquiesc'd in from that Time till now, in all Probability, if not suppress'd, would tend to as great Mischief as that War intail'd on the Nation. But yet the Doctor, who preaches up the Subjects Submission to the Supreme Power, even to Death itself, thinks he hath not only a License, but a Command from God, to inquire into the late King and Queen's Right to the Crown; and to blow a Trumpet, to set his Fellow-Subjects to cut one another's Throats upon that Account. This surely is the absurdest Construction of a Text that ever was made; and yet this I'll say is the Case, if you'll compare the Prisoner's Practice with his Doctrine.

Methinks the Doctor ought to have consider'd what our Saviour and his Apostles did in their Time: We don't find that any of them ever question'd the Title of the Emperors under whose Government vernment they liv'd ; or ever said any Thing relating to their Titles, or that Power they exercis'd ; and yet if they had thought it lawful or expedient, they had just Occasions to have done it. St. John, the Survivor of the Apostles, liv'd (as 'tis said) to the Time of Trajan ; so that by that Account he liv'd under thirteen Emperors, including Augustus and Trajan ; and yet neither of them had so much as a Pretence of Right to the Empire, according to the Opinion we have of that Right now. The first and last of those Emperors were the very best the Romans had, except perhaps Titus Vespasian ; and yet Augustus came to the Empire by the worst Means of any of them, for he waded thro' a Sea of Blood, and was guilty of a great many Acts of Treachery and Cruelty : But after the World had reap'd so many Benefits by his Excellent Government, it forgot the Iniquity of the Means whereby the Empire was obtain'd. And the best Means of obtaining the Empire, by the following Emperors, till the Time of Titus Vespasian, were by Force, and most of them by treacherous Murders ; and yet we don't find, that either our Saviour, or his Apostles, reproach'd any of those Emperors with the Injustice of the Means whereby they became so. And Methinks it would have become the Doctor to have follow'd those good Examples. But the Doctor is of another Opinion, and thinks the aforesaid Words of Isaiab, to Cry aloud, &c. do well warrant that his Opinion ; not considering that that Prophet had that express Command from God, for reproving the Hypocrisy of the Jews : And if the Doctor had the like Command for Preaching as he has done, I think he has quoted a good Authority for so doing ; but he must give us a better Proof of such Command than hitherto he hath done.

If he thinks the Command given to Isaiab extends to him ; how came it to pass that the Apostles did not think that the same Command extended to them ? Did not they live nearer the Time of Isaiab ? Were not they acquainted with the Writings of Isaiab, as well or better than the Doctor, and so might have known the Authority given to that Prophet better than the Doctor ? but yet forbore to do as the Doctor has done : And their having forbore so to do, cannot proceed from any other Reason, than that they thought those Words did not extend to the Apostles ; or that they thought it was not lawful or expedient for them to question the Title of those Princes, or the Justice or Means whereby they obtain'd it.

I'll only add to this Matter, That if the Doctor had been contented with the Liberty he took of preaching up the Duty of Passive Obedience in the most extensive Manner he had thought fit, and would have stopp'd there, your Lordships would not have had the trouble, in relation to him, that you now have ; but it is plain, that he preached up his absolute and unconditional Obedience, not to continue the Peace and Tranquility of this Nation, but to set the Subjects at Strife, and to raise a War in the Bowels of this Nation ; and it is for this that he is now prosecuted ; tho' he would fain have it believed, that the Prosecution was for preaching the peaceable Doctrine of absolute Obedience.

I can't but take Notice of the Scandal the Doctor charges upon the late King, as if when he landed here, he had disclaimed all Manner of Imputation of Resistance ; than which nothing is more untrue, even by his own Confession in his Answer, and the Words of the Declaration mentioned in the Print of the Sermon, tho' no Part of the Sermon ; where-by he pretends to explain himself, by saying, he intended a Disclaimer of Resistance in order to a Conquest ; than which nothing could be more absurd : For never was a Conquest made, or ever will be made, by bare Resistance ; nor ever was there a weaker Thing charged upon a Prince, than to make him disclaim all Resistance, at a Time when he was actually making War : For his bringing an armed Force of that Number he did into this Kingdom, with a great Train of Artillery with him, was making War by the Law of Nations, and then and now by the Law of Great Britain : And he hath charged the Prince of Orange with an Act of the highest Treachery, in pretending Peace, when he actually made War.

The last Matter I shall take Notice of, are the Words in the nineteenth Page of the Doctor's Sermon ; viz. That old Leaven of their Forefathers is still working in the present Generation ; that this traditional Poison still remains in this Brood of Vipers, to sting us to Death, is sufficiently visible, as to the dangerous Encroachment they now make upon our Government, and the treasonable Reflection they have published upon her Majesty, God bless her ! whose Hereditary Right to the Throne they have had the Impudence to deny and cancel, to make her a Creature of their own Power ; and that by the same Principles they placed a Crown upon her, they tell us, they (that is, the Mob) may re-assume it at their Pleasure. Now I think it cannot be doubted who it is the Doctor means by the Word Mob, which is the People of England : For tho' the Word Mob is a Cant Word amongst a Sort of People call'd Gypsies, and with them signifies the Meanest, or the Scum or Dregs of the People, yet as the Doctor has used it in this Place, it can signify nothing else than the Body of the People of England ; of whom, I think, your Lordships do not think it beneath you to be thought a Part, and the chiefest Part : For he asserts, They say, that they placed a Crown upon her Majesty ; and from thence makes an Inference, that they may re-assume it at their Pleasure ; which can be intended nothing else than what was done in respect of her Majesty by the Bill of Rights ; wherein 'tis said, " That the " Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in " Parliament assembled, did declare her Majesty, " after the Death of the late King and late Queen, " without Heirs of her Body, was lawful and " rightful Queen of this Realm. Now, tho' her Majesty hath an Hereditary Right and Title to the Crown, and so she is not so much concerned in the Declaration by the said Act, as the last King and Queen, in what that Act conferred upon them, which was done only by the People of England, under the Denomination of Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled : And if that did not confer a Title to the Crown on the late King and Queen, they, who were in their Lives Time thought to be lawful and rightful King and Queen of these Realms, by the Doctor's Reasoning, were no better than the Usurpers of another's Right. And tho' that Bill of Rights was afterwards confirmed by an Act in the second Year of their Reign, yet that will not at all mend the Matter ; for if they did not obtain a Right, by the Bill of Rights, to the Crown of these Realms, they were no more King and Queen of these Realms, than they were before the said Bill of Rights. But the Truth is, that when a Government is brought out of Frame, by the extraordinary Steps of a Prince, 'tis a vain Thing to hope that it ever can be set right by regular Steps ; this never was done, nor ever will be done : But those Methods which were necessary to set set the Government in a right Frame again, have been always taken to be legal, tho' by the Nicety of Law it could not be well justified. Upon the Change of Government from Richard the Second to Henry the Fourth, the Parliament called in the Time of Richard the Second, and by his Authority, continued to sit in the Time of Henry the Fourth, and passed several Acts in the Time of Henry the Fourth; which was never practised before, nor warranted by any Laws that we know of; yet what was done, was allowed to be legal. To the same Purpose was that which was done in the Time of Henry the Seventh: For he and those of his Friends being attainted of High Treason, which, according to the Rules of Law at that Time, prevented the Descent of the Crown on him; and his Friends being mostly attainted, were incapable of Sitting in Parliament till those Attainders were reversed, which could not be done but by Act of Parliament, or the Court of King's Bench; and he did not care to have a Parliament, till his Friends were capable of sitting there; nor could he make Judges, till he was King; which Difficulty seemed to be insuperable: But the Judges made a Resolution according to the Exigence of the Thing, and declared that Sir William Stanley's placing the Crown upon the Earl of Richmond's Head, purged his Attainder, and he thereby became from thenceforwards King of England, and the King thereby enabled to constitute Judges, and the Judges to reverse the Attainder of all the King's Friends. 'Tis true, Henry the Seventh married the Heiress of the House of York, and was thereby (as we now think) King in Right of his Queen; but he never would own her Title to the Crown, nor ever suffered her to join with him in any Act of Government, nor ever declared by what Title he possess'd the Crown; but yet none of the Acts passed in his Time, nor any Thing then transacted, was afterwards question'd upon the Account of his Title to the Crown. 'Tis true, there was an Act passed in his Time, that indemnified such as should obey, or assist the King that was in Being, whether he had Right to the Crown or no: But if he had not been allowed to be King before the passing of that Act, the Acts of Parliament that passed in his Time would have been of no more Validity, than the Acts passed in the Time of Cromwell, or any other Usurper. Whereby 'tis plain, that the Doctor now, and the Persons who had the best Knowledge of Matters of this Kind in those Days, disagreed in Opinion. And I can't but take Notice, that the Doctor, notwithstanding his little Knowledge in the Matters he discourses of, makes the Declaration by Parliament of the Queen's Title to the Crown, to be the cancelling of her Title by Descent; and therefore he seems to advise her Majesty, to quit that Title she claims from her People, and to rely upon her Title by Inheritance. Whereas, if the Doctor had but known what our Laws allow, or if he had read any Thing of this Matter, he would have known that those Titles did by no Means disagree, but were consistent with one another; and that Princes that sometimes have claimed by several Titles, would not make their Choice of which they relied on. Henry the Eighth, who was Heir of the House of York and Lancaster, never declared on which Title he relied. Queen Elizabeth, after the Death of her Brother and Sister, claimed as Heir to Henry the Eighth, and was likewise Devisee of the Government of England by the Will of her Father, who was (by Act of Parliament) enabled to give it by his Will to whom he pleased: But notwithstanding that, she desired to have an Act of Parliament, which she had, declaring her to be Queen of England, &c. Which Act of Parliament was to the same Purpose, as was the Bill of Rights in respect of her Majesty's Title to the Crown. I'll trouble your Lordships with no more, to prove the Prisoner guilty of the Crimes charged upon him by the first Article of the Impeachment; but I cannot but observe some aggravating Circumstances of the Prisoner's Crime. As first, That the Doctrine in the Impeachment was preach'd by a Divine of the Church of England as by Law establish'd: For a Divine of the Church of England is a Person of that Credit, that the People are ready to assent to what he says, without considering what the same is, or how made out. In the next place, 'Twas preach'd in the Cathedral Church of the Metropolis of this Kingdom: Had it been preach'd in some obscure Country Town, 'twould have hardly been taken Notice of. In the third place, 'Twas preach'd before the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen of the City of London, and so far approv'd of by them, or some of them, as to be commanded to be printed; for which Reason, what he preach'd hath done more Mischief than otherwise 'twould have done; there having been about forty thousand printed, to vilify the Revolution, on which depend the Security of the Protestant Religion both at Home and Abroad, and the Succession of the Crown in the Protestant Line, the Union of the two Kingdoms, the Queen's Bounty to the poor Clergy, and several other Benefits we enjoy by the Revolution, and amongst others, that her Majesty was and is so peaceably possess'd of the Crown. For if the Force before the Revolution, which suppress'd her Majesty's Hereditary Right to the Crown, had not been removed by the Revolution, as 'twas, that her Majesty's Title would never have been able to have exerted itself: And if ever the Doctor, or any of his Accomplices, should ever be able so to shock the Revolution, as to remove what is built upon it, I doubt that Force which the Revolution removed, will return again, and oppress the Queen's Title to the Crown, as it did before.

I can't pass by the Doctor's Answer to the Articles, without taking Notice of one Passage in the same, viz. Hard is the Lot of the Ministers of the Gospel, if when they cite the Word of God in their general Exhortations to Piety and Virtue, the several Texts by them cited, should be said to be by them meant of particular Persons and Things. Now I must submit to your Lordships Judgment the Unreasonableness of this Complaint; and whether the several Texts and Passages cited by him in his Sermon, can bear any other Construction than what has been made; and whether it be not the Duty of the Preacher to deliver himself so in the Pulpit, that his Meaning should not be doubtful to his Congregation. The Commons of Great Britain don't go about to make him assent or swear to what the Supreme Power hath determin'd, tho' the Doctor in his Sermon has thought fit to impose Matters of that Kind upon other Persons, so as to make them swear to them: No, the Commons of Great Britain would only have him restrain'd from publishing any Thing, and especially in the Pulpit, which reflects upon the Supreme Power; or what they have or shall determine, which even the nicest Conscience never yet boggled at. I can add more Aggravations of the Doctor's Crimes, but will forbear to do it, rather following the Example of the Commons of Great Britain; who have, indeed, demanded Judgment against this Person of your Lordships, but they have done it in Mercy; for they might might have charg'd these Matters against the Doctor as High Treason, and so it has been done in Indictments against some Divines, in a Reign known to your Lordships, for Matters in their Sermons less Heinous than those for which he is impeach'd; yet the Commons have called the Matters of this Impeachment only High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and it is a Rule in our Law, that the Court in which a Prosecution is had, cannot call the Crimes greater than what the Prosecutor thought fit to charge them, and cannot adjudge a greater Punishment to the Crimes than usual; but in some Cases may lessen the Punishment for such Crimes; and whatsoever Censure your Lordships shall pass upon this Criminal, the Commons of England will acquiesce, and be well satisfied with the same.

Major-General Stanhope. MY Lords, The Gentlemen who spoke before me to this Article, have said so much to it, that they have left little to me, who am last in it. I shall therefore particularly apply myself to make out to your Lordships, that as the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of the Matter charged in this first Article, so he has done it (as the Preamble of the Article sets forth) with a wicked and malicious Intention to undermine and subvert her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession, as by Law establish'd; to defame her Majesty's Administration; to asperse the Memory of his late Majesty, and to traduce and condemn the late happy Revolution; as in the same Preamble to the Articles it is charged against him.

My Lords, if it be Truth, (as your Lordships have been told by most of the Gentlemen who went before me) that Non-resistance, asserted in general Terms, does destroy the Foundation of the Revolution, the present Establishment, and her Majesty's Title to the Crown, and the Settlement of the Protestant Succession; If that be true, it is as true, that the Doctor, who has advanced that Doctrine in general Terms, is guilty of that Charge of intending to subvert the Government: And then your Lordships ought to proceed against him, as an Enemy to the Government.

What has been said by the Gentlemen that spoke before me, concerning the Doctrine of Non-resistance, has been said with so much regard to Truth, to her Majesty and her Government, that I am persuaded, nothing that has been said on that Subject can justly be misconstrued. But on the contrary, to assert in general Terms the absolute Illegality of Resistance, on any Pretence whatsoever, (as this Doctor, and all the profess'd Enemies of the Government avowedly do) must be understood, by all impartial and thinking People, to overthrow her Majesty's Title and Government; since at the same Time that they screen themselves under the specious Notion of professing Absolute and Passive Obedience to the Supreme Powers, they cannot conceal their true Meaning; That the true and real Object of their darling Doctrines, such as Jus Divinum, Non-resistance, the Undefeasible, Unalienable, Hereditary Right, that (I say) the true Object of these Doctrines, is a Prince on the other Side the Water. They could not otherways be consistent with themselves. For in the same Breath, in the same Discourse, to preach Passive Unlimited Obedience to Magistrates, and to revile and defame the Magistrates; to preach Non-resistance on any Pretence whatsoever, and to encourage Sedition, by inveighing in the strongest Manner against the Administration; these are such Contradictions, as can no otherways be reconcil'd, no otherways than by concluding, what is very plain from their Conduct, that however they are pleased to colour and disguise their Discourses, their true End is only to disengage and alienate the Peoples Affections from their present Governors; to insinuate to them, that the Foundation of the Revolution was wrong; that the Revolution itself was an Usurpation; that whatever has been built upon that Foundation, can have no Weight; and to misrepresent those who had a Hand in it, as Rebels and Traitors.

As to the Doctrine itself of absolute Non-resistance, it should seem needless to prove by Arguments, that it is inconsistent with the Law of Reason, with the Law of Nature, and with the Practice of all Ages and Countries. Nor is it very material, what the Opinions of some particular Divines, or even the Doctrine generally preach'd in some particular Reigns, may have been concerning it. It is sufficient for us to know what the Practice of the Church of England has been, when it found itself oppressed. And indeed, one may appeal to the Practice of all Churches, of all States, and of all Nations in the World, how they behav'd themselves when they found their Civil and Religious Constitutions invaded and oppressed by Tyranny: I believe one may further venture to say, that there is not, at this Day, subsisting any Nation or Government in the World, whose first Original did not receive its Foundation either from Resistance or Compact: And as to our Purpose, it is equal, if the latter be admitted. For where-ever Compact is admitted, there must be admitted likewise a Right to defend the Rights accruing by such Compact. To argue the municipal Laws of a Country in this Case, is idle. Those Laws were only made for the common Course of Things; and can never be understood to have been designed to defeat the End of all Laws whatsoever; which would be the Consequence of a Nation's tamely submitting to a Violation of all their Divine and Human Rights.

That there is a Latitude left to the Subjects in such a Case, is allowed by the most strenuous Advocates of Passive Obedience: And I shall, on this Occasion, quote to your Lordships, the Sermon of a Reverend Divine, who, I am sure, is not thought to be a Favourer of Antimonarchical Principles, nor to deserve any of those pretty Epithets, which the Doctor so liberally bestows on those who differ from him in Opinion. 'Tis the Latin Sermon of Doctor Atterbury, preached to the Convocation. The Scope and Drift of that Discourse, my Lords, was to preach up absolute Obedience; yet such is the invincible Force of Truth, and such the Nature of this Argument, that the Doctor, not to betray his own Conscience, after having well thought upon it, is obliged to express himself in the following Words, which your Lordships will give me Leave to read to you out of his Sermon, which I have here in my Hand: Quando autem, quibusq; de causis Magistratum imperia detestare, Nosmetipsos in libertatem vindicare liceat, ne verbulo quidem indicant: nisi cum aliquid ab hominibus forte imperatum fuerit, latis à Deo legibus contrarium. Id ubi acciderit, quid agendum sit, Petri vox illa declarat, Obedire oportet Deo magis quam Hominibus.

The Sense of this Passage, my Lords, if I mistake not, is this: "But when, and upon what Causes it may be lawful to oppose the Power of the Prince, and assert our Liberties, the Scriptures do not say; unless in Cases when Men shall command

" command Things contrary to the Laws of God.
 " When that shall happen, St. Peter tells us what " we must do, We must obey God before Men.

To apply this, my Lords, to our present Argument; I appeal to the Memory of your Lordships, whether King James did not command Things contrary to the Laws of God; whether his Commands to the Reverend Fathers of our Church were consonant to the Law of God; whether his Commands to execute a dispensing Power; whether his Commands to all such of both Houses, as he could influence to vote for a dispensing Power, contrary to their own Consciences, were agreeable to the Law of God; or, in short, whether the whole Course of his Reign was not a Series of illegal Commands, calculated to destroy our Holy Religion, and to violate all our Religious and Civil Rights. Your Lordships thought so (my Lords); the Commons thought so; and the Nation thought so; and in Consequence of this Doctrine, preach'd by St. Peter, they chose to obey God before Men.

But to return to Dr. Atterbury's Sermon, he goes on thus, my Lords: Petenda sunt ista (si quidem peti necesse sit) à Jurisconsultis, à Theſium Politicarum tractatoribus; è legibus, è Rerumpublicarum Formis, cuiq; Genti propriis, tanquam è fonte suo, sunt haurienda.

In English thus:

" But in such Cases, you must advise with the " Lawyers, and those learned in Politicks; and " have Recourse to the Laws and Constitutions " peculiar to each Country, as to the Springs and " Fountains of this Knowledge.

My Lords, in Compliance to what is recommended by this Reverend Dean, I have endeavoured to follow his Advice, to consult with those learned in the Laws of Nations and Politicks. I have heard that Grotius is of as good Authority on those Subjects as any that have wrote about them; that he has ever been reckoned a Favourer of Monarchy, and held in great Repute amongst the Divines of our Church. I shall beg Leave, out of the many Passages to be found in his excellent Treatise de Jure Belli & Pacis, which support this Argument, to quote only one, for the saving of your Lordships Time. 'Tis in his first Book, the 4th Chapter, and 13th Section. Si Rex partem habeat summi Imperii, partem alteram Populus, aut Senatus, Regi in partem non suam involanti vis justa opponi poterit, quia eatenus imperium non habet: quod locum habere cenſeo, etiamſi dictum ſit, Belli poteſtatem penes Regem fore; id enim de bello externo intelligendum eſt, cum alioquin quique Imperii summi partem habeat, non poſſit non jus habere eam partem tuendi.

The Sense of this Passage I conceive to be this,
 " If the King had one Part of the Supreme Power,
 " and that the other Part is in the Senate, or People,
 " when such a King shall invade that Part that " doth not belong to him, it shall be lawful to " oppose a just Force to him, because his Power doth " not extend so far. Which Position I hold to be " true, even tho' the Power of making War should " be vested only in the King; which must be understood to relate only to foreign War: For as " for Home, it is impossible for any to have a Share " of the Supreme Power, and not to have likewise
 " a Right to defend that Share.

This Passage, my Lords, is exactly adapted to the Constitution of England; and the latter Part of it is perfectly agreeable to what I have always heard quoted as a Maxim of our Law, That where-ever there is a Right, there is a Remedy. That your Lordships have Rights, no Body will presume to deny; that the Commons have Rights, no Body will deny; that every Subject of Britain has Rights, no Body will deny. Now to say that, when a Prince shall invade all these Rights at once; to say that the whole collective Body of the Nation has no way to vindicate those Rights, is so inconsistent, so contrary to Reason, that 'tis to be wonder'd it could ever enter into the Mind of Man.

If I did not fear to tire your Lordships, I might, from many Passages out of *Fortescue, and Mr. Hooker†, evince beyond Contradiction, that the Constitution of England is founded upon Compact; and that the Subjects of this Kingdom have, in their several publick and private Capacities, as legal a Title to what are their Rights by Law, as a Prince to the Possession of his Crown.

Your Lordships, and most that hear me, are Witnesses, and must remember the Necessities of those Times which brought about the Revolution: That no other Remedy was left to preserve our Religion and Liberties; that Resistance was necessary, and consequently just. It was then by no good Man thought a black and odious Crime to take up Arms for the Defence of his Country. Many of your Lordships were Actors in that Resistance. The greatest Part of the Nation did either actually resist, or countenance, abet, and support those who set them the glorious Example. I hope we have all so much Gratitude to the best and greatest of Queens, as to retain for ever a grateful Memory, how great a Share her Majesty had in promoting that Revolution. When these Facts are so fresh in our Memories; What must we say to those who give the injurious Names and Epithets of Republicans, of Enemies and Traytors to Church and State, to those who were concerned in that Resistance which brought about the Revolution? Sure it might have become them to consider who were concern'd, and who had a Share in it. It is not only traducing the late King and Queen, our glorious Deliverers; it goes yet further: But I shall out of Respect forbear to mention what they not only think, but have frequently the Insolence to own.

My Lords, If it be true that this Doctrine of Non-resistance, asserted in so unlimited a Sense, as not to except the Revolution, does certainly sap the Foundation of the said Revolution, and the present Establishment which is built upon it; If it be true that to arraign as guilty of black and odious Crimes, all such as were concerned in the Resistance at the Revolution, doth involve the greatest Part of this Nation in the Guilt of Rebellion and Treason; If it necessarily follows, from the same Positions, that our Allegiance is not due to the present Government; I think we may as necessarily conclude, that this Sermon of the Doctor's before your Lordships, does tend, as is set forth in the Preamble of the Impeachment, to undermine and subvert her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession, which stands on the same Foundation.

My Lords, If the Doctor had in this Sermon only preach'd up Obedience to the Supreme Power, as a Christian Duty, without meddling with Politicks, he might have been allow'd perhaps to plead for Excuse, that he was ignorant of the Consequences that might be deduced from such general Propositions; that his only Aim was Charity, Peace, and Submission to the Magistrates in Being. We must therefore pray your Lordships to compare one Part of his Sermon with the other; and your Lordships will then, I am persuaded be of Opinion with us, not only that the Conclusion we have drawn from his Positions, does necessarily flow from them, but that the Doctor himself must have been conscious of it; and consequently that what he has done, must have been, as we set forth in our Charge, with a wicked and malicious Intention.

Had the Doctor, my Lords, in the remaining Part of his Sermon, preach'd up Peace, Quietness, and the like; and shewn how happy we are under her Majesty's Administration; and exhorted Obedience to it, he had never been called to answer a Charge at your Lordships Bar. But the Tenor of all his subsequent Discourse, is one continued Invektive against the Government. Passive Obedience is set down as an indispensable Duty: But 'tis evident, by the whole Sermon, that it is not due to Queen ANNE, or her Administration. Now what can that be, but to usher in a Rightful Title, (I think they call it) of one on the other Side the Water?

There is such an Affinity, my Lords, between this Sermon, and the Doctrines which are preach'd and propagated by a certain Set of Men, that I cannot but observe to your Lordships on this Occasion, how industrious they have been ever since the Revolution, to prepare a Way for another. They are the pure and undefiled Church of England! The only Men of loyal and steady Principles! They never took the Oaths to the Government; never bent their Knee to Baal! They have their own Archbishops, Bishops and Pastors, and constitute the only true and pure Church of England! We are all Schismatics, that is, all the rest of England are Schismatics, Hereticks and Rebels! Now pray, my Lords, What are the peculiar and distinguishing Characteristicks, the favourite and darling Tenets of these Men? What else but Passive Obedience, Jus Divinum, an Hereditary, Indefeasible Right of Succession, which no Necessity, no Act of Parliament, no Prescription of Time, no natural or legal Incapacity, can ever invalidate or set aside? If they are in the Right, my Lords, what are the Consequences? The Queen is not Queen; Your Lordships are not a House of Lords, for you are not duly summon'd by a legal Writ; We are no House of Commons, for the same Reason; all the Taxes which have been raised for this twenty Years have been arbitrary and illegal Extortions; all the Blood of so many brave Men, who have died (as they thought) in the Service of their Country, has been spilt in Defence of an Usurpation; and they were only so many Rebels and Traitors.

My Lords, If these Puritans (I think I may call them) these undefiled pure Church-Men, would confine themselves to their own Conventicles, to get Money from a few deluded Women; it may, perhaps, be consistent with the Indulgence of the mildest of Governments, to suffer them to enjoy the Benefit of that Toleration which is allow'd to Protestant Dissenters, how pernicious and destructive soever to the Publick may be their Principles. But when they shall come and vent their Treasons abroad; when they shall occasionally conform, and take the Oaths to the Government, in order the better to destroy it; when they shall abjure the pretended Prince of Wales, but not forget him; when they shall invade the Pulpits of the true Church of England; when the Pulpit of your Metropolis, instead of teaching the People to pay their Anniversary Tribute of Praise and Thanks to Almighty God for the many wonderful Successes with which he has bless'd those Arms which were taken up in Defence of the Revolution; when (I say) that Pulpit shall be prostituted and polluted by venting Sedition against the best of Queens; it is high Time for your Lordships to animadvert upon it, for the Honour of those glorious Princes who are dead; for the Honour of her Majesty, who so happily rules over us; and for the Peace and Tranquility of all her Subjects.

My Lords, If I was not afraid of being thought too tedious to your Lordships, I would offer to you a few Words concerning that Administration which the Doctor has so maliciously defamed; for as fond as this Gentleman, and those like him, are of meddling with Politicks in the Pulpit; and, as himself expresses it, of setting the People right in their Principles; I do not find they ever teach what the Ends of Government truly are.

My Lords, Tully, who takes it from Aristotle, states the ultimate End of Government, and the Mark which Rulers ought to aim at, to be Otium cum Dignitate, or Peace with Reputation. Towards attaining Oratio pro Publico Sextio, this End, he enumerates the several Particulars which it requires the greatest Application and Vigilance of good Governors to promote and maintain. And the chief Branches, as he states them, are, Religion; the just and legal Powers and Rights of the Legislative, and of the Magistrates subordinate to that; a due Administration of Justice; the Publick Treasure and Credit; Military Virtue; and concludes with Laus Publica; which, indeed, is the Result of a good Administration of the several Branches mention'd. For Praise both at Home and Abroad will never fail to attend good Management.

Now, my Lords, if any Man will but reflect on every one of these Particulars, and instance when in any Age there has been in this Island, a more universal glorious Administration, I will allow what the Doctor says to be true.

To begin with Religion, my Lords, let any one look upon that Reverend Bench, and say when it was ever filled with greater Examples of Piety, Learning, and Christian Charity. That truly Christian Moderation, and extensive Zeal, and Charity to the Protestant Religion, will, in all human Probability, my Lords, (if ourselves, by little Animosities, do not obstruct it) will, I say, raise the Lustre and Reputation of our Church to such a Degree, that, as the Glory of our Arms justly intitles our Nation at present to hold the first Rank, so shall our Church be look'd upon as the Mother of all the Reformed Churches in Europe.

As to the just Rights and Powers of our Legislative, your Lordships, and all of us know, whether ever any Prince on our Throne has had a more tender Concern for them than her Majesty; or whether at any time there has been a more due and impartial Administration of Justice.

For the Treasure and Credit of the Nation, I appeal to all that hear me, whether ever such large Sums were more chearfully given, or more justly administred. Never were there greater Demands than during this necessary War, nor ever Demands more freely complied with by the People. Such is the Confidence they have in the publick Management, and so ineffectual this Doctor, and his Brethren's sounding a Trumpet to Sedition.

As for our Arms and Reputation; the many unparallel'd Successes, during her Majesty's Reign, by Sea and Land, speak sufficiently, and do sufficiently proclaim, that her Majesty has far exceeded all her Predecessors. Our Henrys and our Edwards have justly left behind them immortal Fame, for having broke and subdued in their Times, the Power of France. Queen Elizabeth will be ever Glorious for having humbled the Pride of Spain. Those two great Monarchies have each in their Turn aimed at the universal Monarchy of Europe; and each hath been near compassing it, notwithstanding that the one always opposed the other. But it was never imagined, that if they once became united, any Force in Europe could have disputed with them. Yet, my Lords, we have lived to see those two formidable Powers united, and threatening Destruction to all the Liberties of Europe. It was a Task reserved for her Majesty to encounter this united Force. She has attack'd and reduced them to sue for Peace; and we are perhaps just now at that very decisive Period of Time, when we are to reap the Fruits of a long and expensive War, by the Conclusion of a solid and lasting Peace.

Now, my Lords, at such a critical Juncture, at a Time when it behoves us more than ever to preserve that Union amongst ourselves, upon which the Union of the whole Alliance does so much depend; upon which the happy Conclusion of this War, and consequently the Safety and Honour of our Church and State does depend; What does this Pious Son of the Church? What does this Loyal Subject, this Passive Obedience Gentleman do? He is preaching to the City of London, from whence we are to receive the greatest Part of the Supplies granted for carrying on the War: Does he say one Word to them to promote and carry on the Publick Good? No, my Lords: He does, to the utmost of his Ability, endeavour to create in them groundless Mistrusts and Jealousies of the Administration. And I will appeal to the Conscience of every one that hears me, and desire, that laying their Hand upon their Heart, they will truly determine within themselves, whether, if those Citizens who heard this Sermon had been byassed by it, we could have expected one Penny of Money from them, to support a Government, which was represented so odious. But those honest Citizens, my Lords, heard this Trumpeter of Sedition with Indignation. Their Affection to the Government is not to be shaken. Her Majesty is Absolute in the Hearts of her Subjects; which is the best way of being absolute: And all the artificial Suggestions of these False Brethren (to use his own Language) will never lessen their Affections to her.

But, my Lords, how impotent and weak soever the Malice of these Men may prove; yet when such Doctrines are broached, and publicly preached, as tend to inflame a free Nation, to foment Divisions and Parties, to seduce us from our Allegiance to the best of Princes; it becomes the House of Commons, who are Guardians of the Constitution and Liberties of the People, to bring such Delinquents to Justice; and it will become your Lordships, who are Guardians of the Constitution of the People, to prevent the growing of such an Evil. This Man, my Lords, is an inconsiderable Tool of a Party; no ways worth the Trouble we have given your Lordships: But we look upon it that your Lordships Judgment in this Case, will be giving a Sanction which shall determine what Doctrines of this kind shall, or shall not be preached. We are persuaded therefore that your Lordships, in giving Judgment on this Case, will have a Regard to the Honour of the late King and Queen, so highly aspersed; to the Security of her Majesty and her Government; to the Protestant Succession; to the Preservation of the Peace at home, and Reputation abroad; where, if it shall be heard that you have Men amongst you, insolent enough to vent such Notions, they may likewise hear that it has not been done with Impunity. For all these Reasons, we do hope that your Lordships will inflict such condign Punishment on this Offender, as may deter others from the like Insolence for the future.

Sir Peter King. MY Lords, The Gentlemen who have gone before me having finish'd the first Article of the Impeachment, by Command of the House of Commons, I proceed to make out the second, which relates to the Toleration, one of the principal Consequences of the Revolution. It is well known that great Severities had been formerly used against Protestant Dissenters, which were fomented by Popish Practices, in order to divide us, and thereby weaken the common Protestant Interest, and particularly that of the Church of England: This the whole Church of England plainly saw in the Reign of the late King James, when Popery was coming in like a Flood, and threatened an universal Ruin; and when they did universally profess their Readiness and Intention to shew all manner of Tendernefs to other Protestants, when it should be in their Power to do it.

The Seven Bishops, who, to their everlasting Honour, made so noble a Stand for the Liberties of the Church and Kingdom, did, in their Petition to King James, declare, That their not reading the Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, was not from any want of due Tendernefs to the Dissenters, in relation to whom they were willing to come to such a Temper as should be thought fit, when that Matter should be considered and settled in Parliament and Convocation.

And to the Glory of the Church of England, it must be remembred, that when the Revolution was afterwards effected, they were as good as their Word, and an Act pass'd, in the very first Year of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, intitled, An Act for Exempting their Majesties Protestant Subjects, dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties of certain Laws. This is that Act that is commonly call'd The Act of Toleration, and was confirm'd by another Act made in the succeeding Parliament. As this Act is agreeable in itself to the Profession of the Christian Religion, and particularly to the Doctrine of the Church of England; so it hath been found, by Experience so much for the Honour of the Kingdom, and for the Credit of the Church, that her Majesty has been pleas'd to declare from the Throne her Intention inviolably to maintain it; and both Houses of Parliament have done the same in the most solemn Manner.

Here the Duke of Buckingham moved the Lords to adjourn to their own House; which they did: And the Lords being returned to the Court, and Proclamation commanding Silence made:

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, you that are the Managers for the House of Commons may proceed in the Method you were in.

Sir Peter King. My Lords, The Act of Parliament that I was mentioning to your Lordships, is the Act relating to the Toleration, refer'd to in the Preamble to the Articles; your Lordships, and every one else, remember the Necessity there was for that Act; and having experienced the Benefit of it, her Majesty and both Houses of Parliament have concurred in a Declaration, that that Act shall be in-

violably observed: This being then not only a positive Law, but also a beneficial One, as well for the Benefit of the Church in particular, as the Welfare and Support of the Protestant Interest in general, it very ill became any private Person to endeavour to bring that Law, by any publick Discourse, into Contempt or Disrepute.

The Article the Doctor is charged with, in relation hereto, is, "That he suggests and maintains, "That that Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; "and asserts, that he is a false Brother, with relation to God, Religion and the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; that "Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbishop Grindall, whom he scurrilously calls a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, to the "Toleration of the Genevian Discipline; and that "it is the Duty of the superior Pastors to thunder "out their Ecclesiastical Anathemas against Persons intitled to the Benefit of the said Toleration, "and insolently dares and defies any Power on Earth "to reverse such Sentences.

My Lords, The first Part of this Article, which is the principal Part, contains a general Charge against the Doctor, for affirming and maintaining, "That the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable. The rest of the Article consists of particular Passages, taken out of his Sermon, tending to make good and prove that general Charge.

As to the general Charge contain'd in the first Part of this Article, of his maintaining the Toleration granted by Law to be unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable: His Answer is very observable, and is, That upon the most diligent Enquiry, he has not been able to inform himself that a Toleration hath been granted by Law; but admits, that an Act did pass in the first Year of King William and Queen Mary, intitled, An Act for exempting their Majesties Protestant Subjects, dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties of certain Laws. Which Exemption, he saith, he doth not any where maintain to be unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable; but hopes that he had prevented any such Misapprehension, by declaring in his Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, that he intended not to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence which the Government had given.

Indeed, it is almost difficult to be serious in giving a Reply to that Part of his Answer, That he cannot inform himself that a Toleration hath been granted by Law. 'Tis true, the Word Toleration is not mention'd in that Act, neither is the Word Indulgence to be found in that Law; but every Body knows that the Exemption granted by that Act is commonly called The Toleration, and the Act itself, The Toleration Act: What is the Intent of that Act, but to tolerate and allow Persons, qualified by that Act, to exercise their Religion, notwithstanding Penal Laws to the contrary. Toleration is really a Word of less Import than Indulgence, it is a bare Permission, and Allowance; and this Word has gain'd such a known and fix'd Notion and Signification in every one's Mind, that whenever it is mention'd, there is not any Doubt what is meant by it: It is now become a Word of Art, that not only in common Conversation, but even in the most publick Acts of State, the Exemption granted by the Act made in the 1st of King William and Queen Mary, is call'd The Toleration. Did not her Majesty, in her Speech to both Houses of Parliament from the Throne, in the Year 1705, declare that she would always inviolably maintain The Toleration? Did not both Houses of Parliament, in their several Addresses to her Majesty for that most gracious Speech, express their deep Satisfaction of her Majesty's Resolution to maintain The Toleration? In the free Conferences between the Lords and Commons about the Bill for preventing Occasional Conformity, in the Year 1702. Is not this Act of the 1st of William and Mary, called The Act of Toleration, and the Exemption granted by that Act called The Toleration? So that it seems strange the Doctor should not know that a Toleration had been granted by Law; and it is more strange yet, when he himself, in this very Sermon, call'd the Indulgence granted by that Act, The Toleration.

In the 14th Page of his Sermon, where he is complaining of false Brethren in the Kingdom, who are permitted and suffered to combine into Bodies and Seminaries, wherein Atheism, Deism, Trithemism and Socinianism, and a great many other wicked Principles are taught; he concludes thus, "Certainly, (says he) The Toleration was never intended to indulge and cherish such Monsters and "Vipers in our Bosom". What was it possible for the Doctor to mean in that Place, by The Toleration, but the Indulgence, as he calls it, granted to the Dissenters by the Act of 1 Gul. and Mar.

In the 19th Page of the Sermon, speaking of the Dissenters, he says, "Now they have advanced "themselves, from the religious Liberty our gracious Sovereign has indulged them, to claim a civil Right, as they term it, and to juggle the "Church out of her Establishment, by hoisting "their Toleration into its Place." What could he possibly mean here by these Words, but that Toleration, or that Indulgence, which was granted in the Time of the King and Queen to the Dissenters? So that it is plain, that when he made, and preached, and published this Sermon, he knew very well, that that Indulgence that was granted by the Law, made in the first Year of King William and Queen Mary, was commonly called The Toleration; and this Toleration, granted by that Law, is that which the Commons in their Impeachment say he maintains to be unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; and this is what I am now to make out and prove.

But I must do the Doctor Justice to own, that Page 20. of his Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, he doth use these Words, referr'd to by him in his Answer, viz. "I would not here be misunderstood, "as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government "has condescended to give them; which I am sure "all those that wish well to our Church, are very "ready to grant to Consciences truly scrupulous; "let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has "prescribed.

The Doctor, by putting in that Caution, seems himself to be apprehensive, his Words were otherwise in danger to be esteem'd a Reflection upon that Indulgence or Toleration that the Government had given. Having just before commended the Severities that were used in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth against the Dissenters; which could not be spoken in Commendation of the Toleration; but would reasonably be understood to be a Condemnation of it, because it removed and took away those Severities; he then subjoins the foremention'd Passage; which dry Caution will not excuse the Doctor, if in the other Parts of his Sermon he doth visibly and plainly condemn the Toleration, and censure it as unrea-

unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; which that he doth, I shall endeavour to prove from other direct and formal Passages in his said Sermon.

The first Passage that I shall cite to this Purpose is in the 10th Page of the Sermon, and is in these Words; "So that, in all those Cases before-mentioned, whosoever presumes to innovate, alter, or misrepresent any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be arraign'd as a Traytor to our State; Heterodoxy in the Doctrines of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring Rebellion and High Treason in the other, and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate, as much to punish, and restrain, as the Ecclesiastical." The beginning of this Passage is tied up to the Cases beforementioned, so that in all those Cases beforementioned, which being a Term of Relation, must be expounded in Reference to what went before.

This Passage is contained in his second Head of false Brethren, of those who are false Brethren with Relation to the State, Government, or Society of which they are Members. And on Perusal thereof, I do not find any one Article of the Faith of our Church beforementioned under that Head, to which these relative Terms do refer; for all that he saith before under that Head is, "That the Constitutions of most Governments differing according to their several Frames, and Laws, upon which they are built and founded, it is impossible to lay down any one universal Rule, as the Scheme and Measure of Obedience, that may square to every one of them: Only this Maxim in general, he presumes, may be establish'd for the Safety, Tranquility, and Support of all Governments, That no Innovation whatsoever should be allowed in the Fundamental Constitution of any State, without a very pressing, nay, unavoidable Necessity for it; and whosoever singly or in a private Capacity should attempt it, is Guilty of the highest Misdemeanour, and is an Enemy to that Politick Body of which he is a Member.

Then the Doctor applies this Maxim to our Government: "Our Constitution, saith he, both in Church and State, has been so admirably contrived, with that Wisdom, Weight, and Sagacity, and the Temper and Genius of each, so exactly suited, and model'd to the mutual Support and Assistance of one another, that 'tis hard to say, whether the Doctrines of the Church of England contribute more to Authorize and Enforce our Civil Laws, or our Laws to Maintain and Defend the Doctrines of our Church. The Natures of both are so nicely correspondent, and so happily intermixt, that 'tis almost impossible to offer a Violation to the one, without breaking in upon the Body of the other: So that in all those Cases beforementioned, whoever presumes to alter, innovate or misrepresent any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be Arraign'd as a Traytor to our State, &c.

I read your Lordships this whole Paragraph, to shew, that the Cases said to be beforemention'd, are not contained in this Head of the Sermon, but they are plainly contained in a former Paragraph, viz. in his first Head of false Brethren, with relation to God, Religion, and the Church in which they hold Communion; under which Head the Doctor enters into a long Description of such Kind of false Brethren, and enumerates several Articles and Rites of the Church, the Disbelievers or Deniers whereof are termed false Brethren; and amongst other of his Characters, in p. 8. he brands him for being false to the Interest of the Church, that gives up any Point of her Discipline and Worship; these are the exterior Fences to guard the Internals of Religion, without which they are left naked, without Beauty, Order, or Defence. Should any man out of Ignorance, or Prejudice to the ancient Rights and essential Constitution of the Catholick Church, affirm, "That the Divine Apostolical Institution of Episcopacy is a novel Doctrine, not sufficiently warranted by Scripture, and that 'tis indifferent whether the Church be Governed by Bishops or Presbyters: Is not such an one an Apostate from his own Orders? So that one of the beforementioned Cases of false Brotherhood is, the affirming that the Divine Apostolical Institution of Episcopacy is a novel Doctrine, not sufficiently warranted by Scripture, and that it is indifferent whether the Church be governed by Bishops or Presbyters. This is affirmed and held by all the Dissenters; and tho' they should be mistaken in their Opinion, yet still it is their Opinion; and they are notwithstanding tolerated, and are exempted by the Toleration Act from subscribing the 36th Article, that the Book of Consecration of Archbishops and Bishops, and of the Ordination of Priests and Deacons, set forth in the Times of K. Edward the Sixth, contain in it all Things necessary to their Consecration and Ordination, and hath nothing in it either superstitious or impious: Now notwithstanding this Innovation or Alteration of this Article of the Church by the Dissenters, the Law doth nevertheless tolerate and indulge them.

But the Doctor is of another Opinion, and he affirms, that whoever innovates, alters, or misrepresents this Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be arraign'd as a Traitor to the State, and ought to be punished, as well by the Temporal, as the Ecclesiastical Magistrate. For he goes on, and carries it yet a great deal further, by the Reason he gives for his Assertion, which is, "Heterodoxy in the Doctrines of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring, Rebellion and High Treason in the other; and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate, as much to punish and restrain, as the Ecclesiastical. Here's an Assertion to the Purpose; that Heterodoxy, that is, the holding a different Opinion from any Article of the Faith of our Church, naturally produces, and almost necessarily infers Rebellion and High Treason in the State, and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate to punish, as well as the Ecclesiastical. He himself, in the immediate subsequent Words, doth own, That this Assertion at first View may look like an highflown Paradox; and I believe it will still appear to be so upon a Review, That whosoever is of a different, or other Opinion, in any of the Articles of the Faith of the Church, is guilty of High Treason; and the Temporal, as well as the Spiritual Magistrate, ought to punish him as a Traitor for it. The Articles of the Church are in Number thirty-nine; some of the Dissenters are by the Act of Toleration exempted from subscribing three and a Half of them, viz. the 34th Article, which relates to the Traditions and Ceremonies of the Church, and the Power of the Church to ordain, change, and abolish Ceremonies and Rites: The 35th Article, concerning the Book of Homilies, and reading of them in Churches: The 36th Article, concerning the Consecration of Archbishops and Bishops, and the Ordination of Priests Priests and Deacons; and the former Part of the 20th Article, which asserts the Power of the Church to decree Rites and Ceremonies, and Authority in Controversies of Faith. Other Dissenters, who scruple the baptizing of Infants, are also exempted from subscribing that Part of the 27th Article which relates to Infant Baptism; and the Quakers are exempted from subscribing any of the Articles, and are only required to subscribe a short Declaration of the Trinity, and that the Scriptures are given by Divine Inspiration. All these several Sorts of Dissenters, notwithstanding their Heterodoxy in these Points, are exempted by the Toleration Act from the Penalties of the former Laws, and are by this Act preserved in the free Exercise of their Religion or Worship; and not only the Penalties inflicted on them by former Laws are taken away, but several Immunities and Privileges are given them, as an Exemption of their Teachers from Parish Offices, and a Penalty for disturbing their Congregations. Now when this is establish'd by a Law, and that Act of Toleration is in full Force, for the Doctor to affirm, notwithstanding all this, that Heterodoxy, or a different Opinion from any of the Articles of Faith of our Church, almost necessarily infers Rebellion and High Treason in the State, and is a Crime that Concerns the Civil Magistrate to punish, as well as the Ecclesiastical; What can be a more direct breaking in upon, and disavowing of the Toleration than this? Is not this to maintain the Toleration granted by Law to be unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable?

Another Passage that I shall cite to prove the general Charge against the Doctor, is in the 16th and 17th Pages of the Sermon: What could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church can't be pulled down, it may be blown up; and no Matter with these Men how 'tis destroyed, so that it is destroyed. In this Place the Doctor is speaking of the great Mischiefs and Perils of his False Brethren to the Church. And to prevent any mistaken Notions of the Church, he intimates, that we are to understand the true genuine Notion of it, as it stands contradistinguish'd in its establish'd Doctrine, Discipline and Worship from all other Churches and Scismaticks, who would obtrude upon us a wild negative Idea of a National Church, so as to incorporate themselves into the Body as true Members of it; whereas that Latitudinarian Heterogeneous Mixture would render it the most absurd, contradictory, and self-inconsistent Body in the World: And from thence he proceeds to shew that this Design of a Comprehension miscarried, and that that long projected Scheme of the Ecclesiastical Achitophel's was blasted; "But says he, since this Model of universal Liberty and Coalition failed, and these false Brethren could not carry the Conventicle into the Church, they are now resolved to bring the Church into the Conventicle, which will plausibly and sily effect her Ruin". And how is that to be done? Why, "What could not be gain'd by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish; if the Church can't be pull'd down by Comprehension and Toleration, it may be blown up by Occasional Conformity and Moderation; and "no Matter with these Men how 'tis destroy'd, so that 'tis destroy'd". Is not this calling the Toleration an open Violence to the Church? That it was an Attempt made to destroy the Church, tho' the Church itself came into, and settled this Toleration? I say, the Legislature in the Time of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and particularly the Bishops, the Fathers of the Church, were very well satisfied that this Toleration granted to the Dissenters, was no way prejudicial to the Safety and Security of the Church. Now for the Doctor to come and say, the Toleration was intended to pull down the Church, and that it is an open Violence to the Church; is not this to maintain, that the Toleration is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable?

My Lords, These Passages which I have cited to your Lordships, do prove the general Charge of this Article: There are other Passages in the Sermon, particularly referr'd to in the Article, which likewise prove this general Charge, to which I shall next proceed. And,

The next Part of the Charge in the second Article is, That he asserts, that he is a False Brother with relation to God, Religion or the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience.

These Words are contained in so many express Terms in the eighth Page of his Sermon, where after he hath copiously described his false Brethren, he comes and sums up the Whole in these Words: If upon all Occasions to comply with the Dissenters both in publick and private Affairs, as Persons of tender Conscience and Piety, to promote their Interests in Elections, to sneak to 'em for Places and Preferment, to defend Toleration, and Liberty of Conscience, and under the Pretence of Moderation to excuse their Separation, and lay the Fault upon the True Sons of the Church for carrying Matters too high; If to court the Fanaticks in private, and to bear them with Patience, if not Approbation, Rail at and blaspheme the Church, and upon Occasion to justify the King's Murder; If to flatter both the Dead and the Living in their Vices, and to tell the World, that if they have Wit and Money enough, they need no Repentance, and that only Fools and Beggars can be Damn'd; If these, I say, are the Modish and Fashionable Criterions of a true Church-man, God deliver us from all such False Brethren!

So that one Mark of these False Brethren, in this Part of his Sermon, is to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience. As to this, the Doctor gives two Answers, one by way of Inference or Presumption, and the other direct; that by way of Inference is, "That he having so plainly declared himself in Favour of the Exemption granted by Law; when he blames those who upon all Occasions defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, he cannot be thought to reflect on the Defenders of that legal Exemption or Indulgence, which he himself approves and defends.

Now if he had not in other Parts of his Sermon condemn'd the Toleration expressly, it might have pass'd for an Answer. But now, if the Doctor has more than once in other Parts of his Sermon directly inveigh'd against this Toleration, then his Meaning is more naturally to be understood by so many several Passages, than by one single Sentence, and with what View thrown in, the reading of the Sermon will plainly shew. And therefore the true Way to come at the true Meaning of his Words, is to take them as they stand in his Sermon, and that is what your Lordships will judge judge by. In the next Place he gives a direct Answer to this Part of the Charge, which is, that he does not mean by this Description of a False Brother, those who only defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and do no more; but he only blames those who upon all Occasions defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and to excuse their Separation, lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church for carrying Matters so high; so that I don't reckon him, says he, as a False Brother who barely defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; except that at the same Time that he is defending Toleration, he lays the Fault of the Separation upon the true Sons of the Church for carrying Matters too high. Now I submit to your Lordships, upon reading of this Passage, whether it is capable of such an Interpretation. If it be look'd into, it will be found that the several particular Characters there mention'd, are all of them so many particular Marks of a False Brother; it is not necessary that two, or three, or all of them meet together in one Person to make up the Character of a False Brother; but if any one of them be found in any Person, 'tis sufficient to characterize him a False Brother: Whoever is guilty of any one of these Acts, of which defending Toleration is one, is a False Brother; and his asserting the defending of Toleration to be a Mark of a False Brother, is an evident Declaration against the Justice and Expediency of the Toleration.

The next particular Charge upon him in this Article is for asserting, "That Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbishop Grindall, whom he scurrilously calls a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline". This Charge upon him is founded on those Words of his Sermon, in the 19th Page; these are his Words: Have they not, ever since their first unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, by the Intercession of that False Son of the Church, Bishop Grindall, always improv'd, and rise upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government? Insomuch that Queen Elizabeth, that was deluded by that perfidious Prelate to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline, found it such an Headstrong and encroaching Monster, that in eight Years she foresaw it would endanger the Monarchy, as well as the Hierarchy; and like a Queen of true Resolution, and pious Zeal for both, pronounc'd, That such were the restless Spirits of that factious People, that no Quiet was to be expected from them, 'till they were utterly suppress'd: Which, like a prudent Princess, she did by wholesome Severities, that the Crown for many Years sat easy and flourishing on her Head.

As to that Part of the Charge where he says, That Queen Elizabeth was deluded to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline by Archbishop Grindall, the Doctor's Answer is, "That he humbly conceives he hath good Authority from the Histories and Monuments of those Times for such Assertion; but whether he hath, or hath not, humbly apprehends such Assertion to be no Proof of his maintaining or suggesting, That the exempting of Protestant Subjects dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties of certain Laws, granted by an Act made in the first Year of the Reign of King William and Queen Mary, (which Exemption he supposes to be intended by the legal Indulgence, or Toleration granted to Dissenters, mention'd in the Preamble of the Articles, and by the Toleration " granted by Law mention'd in this second) is unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable.

My Lords, It might not perhaps be difficult to shew that there are some Mistakes in this Fact; but whether there be or no, will not now be worth spending your Lordships Time; for I do agree with him, That the material Point is what he puts it upon, Whether this Assertion, as printed and delivered by him in his Sermon, be a Censure or Condemnation of the Toleration Act. Now whether it be so or no, will appear by taking the whole Clause together. This Passage is in the 19th and 20th Pages, and is in that Part of his Sermon where he is shewing the great Perils and Mischief of his False Brethren to the State, and that they are destructive to our Civil Rights and Liberties; and in the Pursuit of his Argument he plainly shews that the False Brethren there meant are the Dissenters, who are tolerated by this Act of Parliament. "These False Brethren, says he, have now advanced themselves from the Religious Liberty our Gracious Sovereign has indulged them, to claim a Civil Right, and to juggle the Church out of her Establishment, by hoisting their Toleration into its Place". So that 'tis plain, these False Brethren here spoken of are the Dissenters, those who have the Benefit of the Toleration Act. And then he goes on; "And to convince us what alone will satisfy them, insolently demand the Repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, as an Ecclesiastical Usurpation, which indeed under her Majesty (whom God long preserve for its Support and Comfort) is the only Security the Church has to depend upon; and which they have so far eluded by their abominable Hypocrisy, as to have undermin'd her Foundations, and endanger'd the Government, by filling it with its profess'd Enemies. These Charges are so flagrant and undeniable, that a man must be very weak, or something worse, that thinks or pretends the Dissenters are to be gain'd or won over by any other Grants and Indulgences, than by giving up our whole Constitution: And he that recedes the least Tittle from it, to satisfy or ingratiate with these clamorous, insatiable and Church-devouring Malignants, knows not what Spirit they are of, or he ought to shew who is a true Member of our Church.

These Passages I have read to your Lordships, to shew that these False Brethren here spoken of are the Dissenters, who are now tolerated by the Law granted to them in the Time of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary; and of these Dissenters follows this Passage; "Have they not, ever since their first unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, by the Intercession of that False Son of the Church, Bishop Grindall, always improv'd, and rise upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government? Insomuch, that Queen Elizabeth, that was deluded by that perfidious Prelate to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline", id est, The Discipline and Polity of the Dissenters, so called because taken from Geneva, "found it such a headstrong and encroaching Monster, that in eight Years she foresaw it would endanger the Monarchy, as well as the Hierarchy; and, like a Queen of true Resolution and pious Zeal for both, pronounc'd, That such were the restless Spirits of that factious People, that no Quiet was to be expected from them, 'till they were utterly suppress'd; which, like “ like a prudent Princess, she did by wholesome Severities, that the Crown for many Years sat easy and flourishing on her Head.

In this memorable Passage he represents Archbishop Grindall as a False Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for deluding the Queen into a Toleration of the Genevian Discipline. Whether that Fact be true, or not, is not material to our Purpose; but this is, that he charges it for a Fault on the Archbishop, and for which he calls him a False Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for inducing the Queen to give a Toleration to the Dissenters in those Days: The Fault is not, that it was a regal Toleration only, but the Fault was in the Toleration itself, in consenting to a Liberty to the Dissenters. Now what is this in Effect, but to preach to the whole World, That the Parliament are in the Wrong to grant a Toleration to the Dissenters; That the Lords and Commons, who consented to the Toleration, are not true Sons of the Church; And that the Bishops, who are for tolerating the Dissenters, are neither Fathers nor Sons of the Church, but corrupt and perfidious Prelates!

That this Character of Archbishop Grindall was design'd for a Censure of the present Toleration, will appear more fully by the contrary Character he gives of Queen Elizabeth; he commends her Resolution and pious Zeal for “ the Monarchy and Hierarchy, in declaring that no Quiet was to be expected from the restless Spirits of that factious People, ’till they were utterly suppress’d; which, like a prudent Princess, she did by wholesome Severities, that the Crown for many Years sat easy and flourishing on her Head”. Now what can the English of all this be, but to inflame the Government against the Dissenters? What could be said more prevalent for this Purpose, than to recommend it as a noble Resolution and pious Zeal in Queen Elizabeth, utterly to suppress the Dissenters? And if that Resolution be to be followed, the Legislature must repeal the Toleration Act. And what could be said more contrary to the Toleration Act, than to recommend the Severities used in Queen Elizabeth’s Reign, because they were wholesome in themselves, and of happy Consequence to the Person and Government of that Renowned Queen. If there were not a Necessity for it on this Occasion, I would not mention what those wholesome Severities were, but rather cast a Veil over that Part of the Reign of that great and glorious Queen.

To give a short View of these wholesome Severities; some Hereticks were burnt, other Persons were hang’d, some had their Goods confiscated, others had their Persons imprison’d; and to mention more particularly a publick Act in Writing that cannot be falsified or misrepresented, and which is since relaxed by the Toleration Act, an Act passed in the 35th Year of Queen Elizabeth, Intituled, An Act to retain the Queen’s Majesty’s Subjects in their due Obedience; by which the Dissenters are, among other Penalties, to abjure the Realm in forty Days, or suffer Death without Benefit of the Clergy.

This Penalty of Abjuration of the Realm was taken from the antient Common Law of England in relation to Felony, by which if a Man committed any Felony, excepting Sacrilege, and fled to a Parish Church, he might within forty Days before the Coroner confess the Felony, and take an Oath to abjure the Kingdom for ever; and if he thus confess’d and took that Oath, he was thereby attainted of the Felony, and then he had forty Days from the coming of the Coroner to provide and prepare for his Voyage; and the Coroner assigned him such a Port as he chose for his Departure out of the Kingdom; and if he did not go straitway out of the Kingdom, or being gone out, did return without License, he had Judgment to be hang’d, except he was a Clerk, and then he had his Clergy.

This Practice was what the Law call’d Abjuration; and being by several Regulations (in the Time of Henry the Eighth) in Effect taken away, the Revival of this Practice was thought to be a wholesome Severity, fit to be inflicted on the Protestant Dissenters of those Times: And therefore the 35th of Queen Elizabeth doth enact, ‘ That if any Person, obstinately refusing to repair to some Church or Chapel, or usual Place of Common-Prayers, and forbearing by the Space of a Month to hear Divine Service, should after forty Days after the End of that Session of Parliament, willingly join or be present at any Conventicle or Meeting, under Pretence of Religion, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; that then such Person should be committed to Prison, till he should conform and come to Church: And if within three Months after Conviction he should not conform and come to Church, and make his publick Confession and Submission, being thereunto required according to the Form of the said Act; that then such Offender should abjure the Realm; and if, being thereunto required, should refuse to make such Abjuration, or after such Abjuration made, should not within the Time appointed him depart the Realm, or after such Departure should return without the Queen’s License; then in every such Case, every Person so offending, should be a Felon without Benefit of Clergy’. So that the Abjuration inflicted on Protestant Dissenters by this Act, was worse than Abjuration for Felony at the Common Law; in that they had the Benefit of the Clergy, in this they had not.

This is one of the Severities of Queen Elizabeth’s Reign. Whether it be a wholesome Severity or not, human Nature will determine: However wholesome it might have been esteemed in those Days, by those who had the Power and Will to punish others, yet the Legislature have in Terminus declar’d it unwholesome for these Times; and the Toleration Act doth expressly, and by Name, exempt the Protestant Dissenters from the Penalties of this Act of the 35th of Queen Elizabeth.

Now when the Toleration Act hath granted this Exemption, for the Doctor to come and publicly represent an Archbishop as a False Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for being for the Toleration of Dissenters in his Time; and at the same Time recommend the Resolution and pious Zeal of Queen Elizabeth, for declaring that she would utterly suppress them, and her great Prudence in exercising wholesome Severities against them, which were of happy Consequence to her Person and Government; What could be said more against the Toleration Act, than this is? The Toleration Act exempts the Dissenters from the Penalties and Severities inflicted in Queen Elizabeth’s Reign; the Doctor recommends them all again, as wholesome and necessary. Let any Person judge, whether this is not an express Declaration against the Toleration Act?

There is yet one Thing more charged upon the Doctor in this Part of the second Article; viz. That he scurrilously calls Archbishop Grindall a False Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for for deluding Queen Elizabeth to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline. Whether this, consider'd abstractedly by itself, be in Law a Crime, or not, is not necessary for me here to examine. The Doctor conceives, that no Words spoken of an Archbishop, above one hundred and twenty Years since deceased, will in Construction of Law amount to an High Crime and Misdemeanor: Whether it be so or not, in itself, I shall say nothing of at present; because I take it, that this is only taken Notice of as an Aggravation of the Crime charged upon him, and to shew his Zeal against the Toleration; that he was not contented with censuring the Toleration itself, but rakes into the Ashes of an Archbishop, that had been in his Grave one hundred and twenty Years, and blackens his Memory, because he was for the Toleration of those People who are now by Law tolerated.

My Lords, I would on this Occasion say a Word or two to the Memory of that Archbishop. The Doctor says, He was under the Displeasure of Queen Elizabeth; that is very true: And he pretends, the Occasion of his being under her Displeasure, was, for permitting Innovations to be obtruded upon the Church. Those Innovations were no other than what several other Bishops at the same Time likewise practis'd, and some Bishops since have done not much unlike: It was for encouraging the Meetings and Exercisings in those Days, call'd Propheysings; which were Meetings of the Clergy, to improve one another in the Knowledge of the Scriptures, and tended to make a learned and industrious Clergy. This was misrepresented to the Queen, and was the visible Cause of his Disgrace. But the true Reason of his Disgrace, as Historians say, sprung from the Hatred of the Earl of Leicester, who was then in great Power and Credit with the Queen, and her great Favourite. This Earl of Leicester cast a covetous Eye upon Lambeth-house, and would have had the Archbishop to have alien'd it, but he would not comply with him; which, as the Historians say, made the Leicester Party to malice him. The Earl was likewise provoked and incensed against him for another Reason, viz. for prosecuting one Julio, a Physician of the Earl's, an Italian Physician, for having two Wives, one of which was the Wife of another Man, with whom he lived in Adultery: For these two Offences against the Earl of Leicester, who bore a mighty Power at Court with the Queen at that Time, was this Storm raised against him. But, my Lords, for his Life and Doctrine, the Archbishop was one of the most pious, learned, and considerable Prelates of that Time. 'Tis very true, that he was one of those Bishops that look'd upon the Exercises used in those Times by the Clergy, call'd Propheysings, to be very necessary for their Improvement, and for the Benefit of the Church; and some of the best Bishops of those Times concurr'd with him in the same Opinion. He was a man of the most exemplary Life and Conversation, free from the Suspicion of a Crime. In his younger Days he was Chaplain, with Rogers and Bradford, to Ridley Bishop of London, who gave this Character of him, That he was known to be a Man of Virtue, Honesty, Discretion, Wisdom and Learning. In the Persecution under Queen Mary, when his Master and Fellow-Chaplains were burnt for Religion, he became an Exile on the same Account, and quitted his Ease, Preferments, and Hopes at Home, to enjoy the Liberty of his Conscience in a foreign Country, and went to Strasbourg: And when the famous Troubles begun at Frankfort, about the Use of the English Service, where the Foundations were laid of the Divisions that have since divided and rent the Church, he was so far from disliking the English Method, that he went from Strasbourg to Frankfort, to encourage and persuade the Congregation there to submit to the English Establishment; and he himself stuck close to it all his Life-time. At his coming Home, in the Beginning of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, he had a great Hand, and was very instrumental, in preparing the Liturgy and Book of Common-Prayer: And the first Time that the English Service-Book was introduced at St. Paul's in London, the Privy Council, and great Officers of State, for the greater Solemnity, came to St. Paul's; and Grindall was appointed to preach to that great Audience, upon that solemn Occasion. He was one of the first five Bishops made by Queen Elizabeth; and was first Bishop of London, afterwards Archbishop of York, and last of all Archbishop of Canterbury. And when afterwards, by the Earl of Leicester's Artifice, he was out of Favour, and under the Queen's Displeasure; yet he had so great an Interest in the Clergy, and their Esteem of him was so extraordinary, that even whilst he was under Disgrace at Court, and the Displeasure of the Queen, a considerable Number of the Convocation, then met, presented an elegant Petition in Latin to the Queen, to restore him; wherein they represent to her Majesty, 'That the Archbishop had led a Life free, not only from all Crime, but even from the Suspicion of a Crime: That he had preserved his Religion from all, not only Corruption of Popery, but Schism; and had suffer'd Persecution for Righteousness sake, having wander'd Abroad in other Countries for the Cause of the Gospel: And therefore they most humbly besought her Majesty, not only to lift up the Archbishop broken with Grief, but to restore the Church to the Archbishop, and the Archbishop to the Church, to her Subjects, to his Brethren, to foreign Nations, and, in a Word, to all pious People'. These were the Thoughts of the Clergy of the Archbishop at that Time, even when he was under the Displeasure of the Queen; so that there was no Reason for the Doctor to asperse him as a false Son of the Church, or a perfidious Prelate; for it appears on the contrary, that he was a Man universally esteem'd for his Virtue, Piety, and Learning.

The last Charge of this Article is, that he asserts, "That it is the Duty of Superior Pastors to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathemas against Persons intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration; and insolently dares or defies any Power on Earth to reverse such Sentences."

To which the Doctor gives this Answer; "That the Persons intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration, are not by him mentioned or intended: But if these Expressions in his Sermon must be determin'd to any one Sort of Persons, he conceives that the Connection of his Discourse will determine them to those Schismatical and Factious Persons, who take Permission for Power, and advance Toleration immediately into an Establishment."

Now be it so, that he means those Schismatical and Factious Persons; the next Question, which will set this Matter in a clear Light, will be, Who those Schismatical and Factious Persons are, who take Permission for Power, and advance Toleration immediately into an Establishment? And it is plain from the Passage itself, which is in Page 25.

of the Sermon, that he means the Dissenters, those which are intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration.

"If our Dissenters, saith he, had lived in the Times of St. Paul, they would have branded him as an intemperate, hot, furious Zealot, that wanted to be sweeten'd by the gentle Spirit of Charity and Moderation, forsooth. Schism and Faction are Things of impudent and incroaching Natures; they thrive upon Concessions, take Permission for Power, and advance a Toleration immediately into an Establishment; and are therefore to be treated like growing Mischiefs, or infectious Plagues, kept at a Distance, lest their deadly Contagion spread. Let us therefore have no Fellowship with these Works of Darknes, but rather reprove them. Let our Superiour Pastors do their Duty, in thundering out their Ecclesiastical Anathemas; and let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratified in Heaven". And indeed the Doctor doth, in the following Part of his Answer, in effect own it: For, saith he,

"As to the last Part of the second Article, where by the said Henry Sacheverell is charged with insolently daring, or defying any Power on Earth to reverse the Ecclesiastical Sentences there mentioned: He the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That the Sentence which he the said Henry Sacheverell dares any Power on Earth to reverse, is such, and such only, as is ratified in Heaven; and such Sentence he still affirms to be by any earthly Power irreversible: And hopes it will not be thought insolent in him to affirm, what he conceives would be Blasphemy in any one to deny: And doth further acknowledge himself firmly to believe, that some Sentences pronounced by the Pastors of the Church are ratified in Heaven; and that some Persons exempted from Punishment by the particular Laws of the Land, may yet by the Laws of Christ be justly liable to such Sentence; and that Schism, or a causeless Separation from a Church injoining no sinful Terms of Communion, is a Sin, which exposes the Person guilty thereof to the Censures of the Church.

The House of Commons charge the Doctor with Insolence, in daring or defying any Power on Earth to reverse the Ecclesiastical Sentences mentioned in his Sermon; and he, by Insinuation, retorts upon them the Charge of Blasphemy. This the House of Commons thought they had Reason to resent, and to call upon your Lordships for immediate Punishment of him, for treating them in this Manner; but they leave it to your Lordships, in what Manner you will think fit to do them Justice, in vindicating them against such a Charge. But as to this Passage now before you, he affirms, "That some Sentences pronounced by the Pastors of the Church, are ratified in Heaven; That some Persons exempted from Punishment by the Laws of the Land, may yet by the Laws of Christ be liable to such Sentence: And that Schism, or a causeless Separation from a Church injoining no sinful Terms of Communion, is a Sin, which exposes the Person guilty thereof to the Censures of the Church". Now what is this but to say, The Dissenters causelessly separate from the Church, which imposes no sinful Terms of Communion, and so are guilty of Schism? Tho' the Law of the Land doth exempt them from Punishment for this Schism, yet for this Sin they are expos'd to the Censures of the Church; those Censures, when inflicted, are ratified in Heaven: Therefore, notwithstanding the Law of the Land hath given them this Exemption, let the Ecclesiastical Superiors know their Duty, in thundering out their Anathemas against them, and let any Power upon Earth dare to reverse their Sentences if they can. As to the Power of the Church in censuring or excommunicating, it is not necessary for me to say any Thing of it upon this Occasion: But the Doctor is a Minister of the Church of England, who hath submitted to the Queen's Supremacy, and by the Canon is bound to maintain and preach the Queen's Supremacy; her Majesty is Supreme over all Causes, and over all Persons, as well Ecclesiastical as Civil; and by an Act of Parliament made since her Majesty's happy Accession to the Crown, viz. the Act relating to her Majesty's Bounty for the Augmentation of the Maintenance of the poor Clergy, she is owned and recognized to be the only Supreme Head on Earth of the Church of England: Her Majesty hath by Law a Supreme controlling Power over all the Censures and Excommunications of the Church; this Power she exercises according to the Rules of Law, by her several Officers and Ministers of Justice. The Exercise of the Church's Censures, Jurisdiction and Power, must be according to Law; and if any Person be excommunicated against Law, the Queen's Courts may and will command the Ecclesiastical Judge to absolve such excommunicated Person, and restore him to the Communion of the Church again: This is the Supremacy of the Queen, which is the Doctrine of the Church of England; and by Virtue of this Supremacy, if any Judge of the Spiritual Court shall pretend to excommunicate any of the Dissenters for any Thing which by Law they are not obliged to do, or which by Law they are excused or exempted from, the Courts of Justice in Westminster-hall will in such Case award a Prohibition, and compel the Ecclesiastical Judge to absolve him. Suppose that notwithstanding the Toleration Act, a Dissenter should, for not coming to the Church, be sentenced in the Spiritual Court by the Judge there, or be proceeded against there, in order to an Excommunication; a Prohibition will lye to that Judge from the Queen's Courts upon the said Act, and the Courts of Common Law will prevent him from such Proceeding; and if Sentence be pass'd, will compel the Judge to annul the Excommunication, and receive the Party again. Now, for the Doctor to come and say, That though the Dissenters are tolerated by this Act of Parliament, and though they are exempted by Law from Penalties, yet let the Law of the Land be what it will, let the Ecclesiastical Pastors do their Duty, let them fulminate their Excommunications, and thunder out their Anathemas, and let the Civil Magistrate, the earthly Powers, dare to reverse them, if they can: I submit this to your Lordships, whether this is not directly impugning the Queen's Supremacy, as well as weakening and censuring the Toleration, which is what he is charg'd with in this Article.

My Lords, I will not take up more of your Lordships Time; there are other Gentlemen to come after me, who will abundantly supply my Defects, and offer to your Lordships some farther Considerations to make out the Charge contained in the second Article.

Lord William Pawlet. MY Lords, the Charge against the Doctor in this second Article, is a Crime of a very Heinous Nature: It has always been esteem'd one of the happy Consequences of the late Revolution, that her her Majesty's Protestant Subjects, by a legal Indulgence granted to Dissenters, were united in Interest and Affection, in the Defence of her Majesty's Sacred Person and Government.

It is too well known, my Lords, how in former Times, when Popery had almost prevail'd in the Ruin of our State and Church, the Protestants of the Kingdom were, by the Artifice of Papists, set against each other, that by such Divisions Popish Tyranny might be established among us.

The Act of Parliament made in the first Year of the Reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, to exempt Protestant Dissenters from the Church of England from the Penalties of certain Laws, was made to defeat any such future Attempts of the Papists; the Preamble of the Act declares, that some Ease to scrupulous Consciences, in the Exercise of Religion, may be an effectual Means to unite her Majesty's Protestant Subjects in Interest and Affection.

We have seen, my Lords, the good Effects of the Wisdom of the Legislature in making this Act; her Majesty's Protestant Subjects are now all easy under her Administration; and how many Dissenters have we seen, who since the Toleration are become sincere Converts to the Church. And I may say, that by this Toleration the Prejudices of the Dissenters in general wear off, and their Number daily decreases.

And yet with what odious Colours, and Language unbecoming a Divine, does the Doctor paint out this Toleration, and how does he factiously endeavour to excite and stir up People against it?

'Tis, my Lords, a poor Shift which the Doctor makes in his Answer, that he knows of no Toleration granted by Law; and yet in the same Answer he owns there is an Indulgence which the Government hath condescended to give Dissenters. My Lords, the Word Indulgence is no more in the Act of Parliament than the Word Toleration; and it is well known that the Act of Parliament he alludes to is every where, not only in Courts of Justice, but even in Parliament, called The Toleration-Act; and is frequently so called by your Lordships in the Account of your Lordships Proceedings in Parliament, in Relation to the Bill against Occasional Conformity, which Account was publish'd and printed by your Lordships Order.

When the Doctor says, that he has not been able to inform himself that a Toleration hath been granted by Law, it plainly seems to import, as if the Doctor doubted of the Authority of Parliament that made that Law; it looks like the common Sophistry of Papists and Jesuits, who pretend to own the Church of England as by Law Established; because they disown the Authority of all our Laws made since the Reformation.

My Lords, her Majesty hath always been pleas'd graciously to declare she will defend this Toleration, and this her gracious Resolution has, among the innumerable Blessings of her Reign, united all her Protestant Subjects in their Loyalty and Duty to her.

The Commons rest assured that your Lordships will always assist these gracious Purposes of her Majesty, and that as there can hardly be any Instance given of so seditious and barefaced an Attempt against the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, as the Doctor hath been guilty of, so your Lordships will, by an Exemplary Punishment suitable to so high a Crime, vindicate the Authority of Parliaments, and give an effectual Discouragement for the future, to all such turbulent and seditious Preachers.

Mr. Cooper. I Think, my Lords, it is unnecessary at this Time to urge all the Arguments which might be made use of, to justify the Reasonableness of the Toleration granted to Protestant Dissenters, by exempting them from the Penalties of certain Laws. It may suffice to say, that this Indulgence is required from us as Christians, and as we are Men professing Humanity and good Will towards one another.

Whoever maintains, that the Toleration is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable, seems necessarily to assert, that the Exemption granted to her Majesty's Subjects from the Penalties of former Laws, ought to be reassumed; unless we are to suppose, that it can be reasonable to allow what is unwarrantable.

This Assertion therefore evidently Arraigns the Act of Toleration, a Law now in Being, a Law by which the People (throughout the whole Series of this dangerous War) have been more firmly united in Interest and Affection, than formerly; I mean, in the Days when the Penalties of those Laws were inflicted with intemperate Zeal.

My Lords, Before I proceed to make good the Charge contained in the second Article of the Impeachment exhibited against the Prisoner by the Commons, I must beg Leave to take notice of the Introduction to his Answer: It seems he cannot, upon the most diligent Enquiry, be able to inform himself, that a Toleration has been granted by Law. I take it, the Stat. 1 W. & M. which exempts Dissenters from the Penalties of former Laws amounts to a legal Indulgence, or Grant of Liberty of Conscience; for by that Repeal a Liberty is given, which was before restrained, so that without Impropriety it may be said, that Toleration is granted by Law. Doctor Sacheverell I find had rather it should be called an Exemption, for no other Reason, that I see, but because he has not said much, if any thing, of the Word Exemption in his Sermon, how free soever he has made with the Toleration.

Now taking it for granted (as I think with Reason I may) that Indulgence, Toleration, or Exemption from Penalties, signifies one and the same Thing, (especially as ordinarily made use of amongst us) Can any thing be more plain, than that many Passages in this infamous Libel cast black and odious Reflections upon the Toleration? They have been all read, and for fear (after what has been already said) of being too tedious, I will mention one only. The Words are these.

What could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church cannot be pulled down, it may be blown up; and no Matter with these Men how it is destroy'd, so it is destroy'd, &c.

Pray, my Lords, Is it reasonable to allow Toleration, or rather is not the Allowance of it unwarrantable, if it was the open and violent Means made use of to destroy the Church of England? And is not this a most uncharitable Censure, highly reflecting upon the Act of Toleration, and the Legislative Authority? Is not this maliciously and falsely suggested, with a wicked and seditious Purpose, to create Jealousies and Misunderstandings amongst her Majesty's People?

Comprehension and Toleration are represented as open Violence; Moderation and Occasional Conformity, as secret Treachery, by which the Church may be blown up, though it could not be pulled down by the violent Means of Comprehension and Toleration.

I should waste too much Time unnecessarily, if I should take particular Notice (after what has been already so well urged in Maintenance of the second Article) of all the Passages which seem to be equally liable to Censure.

The Antistasis throughout this Paragraph is so very plain, that I hope it is not one of those mentioned in the Doctor's Answer to carry a dubious Sense. The Prisoner seems to have taken care to explain himself, for fear his Meaning should have been doubtful; and therefore having said,

What could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; then he adds, that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by Treachery to accomplish.

Having thus inveighed against the Toleration, with much Ill-nature and Bitterness of Spirit, he is pleased in the next Place to assert, That he is a False Brother with Relation to GOD, Religion or the Church, who defends it.

The Answer to this Branch of the second Article is long, and, as I apprehend, seems to be Evasive. First, there is a Difference again taken, between Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and an Exemption or Indulgence; and under this Distinction, which, for the Reasons I have mention'd, is a Distinction without a Difference, the Doctor takes the Liberty to maintain and justify, that he is a False Brother who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience.

I must own he endeavours to evade the Charge, by saying he means those only, who at the same Time they defend Universal Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, do also excuse the Separation, and lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church, by carrying Matters too high.

Whatever he is pleased to say he meant, in Answer to this Part of the Article, surely no such Meaning can be collected from his Sermon. Throughout the whole Libel, I presume to say there is not one Word of Universal Toleration, or Universal Liberty of Conscience; this is another kind of Toleration, never heard of, till it was new coined, in order to extenuate his vile and uncharitable Assertions.

Here he is pleased to sum up the modish Criteria, as he terms them, of a true Church-Man, in a figurative and ironical Manner, and plainly asserts they are the several Characteristicks of a False Brother; amongst the rest, to defend Toleration is said to be one; and under Pretence of Moderation to excuse the Separation (i. e.) of the Dissenters, of whom he had next before spoken, is another; and concludes the Paragraph with this pathetick Expression, God deliver us all from such False Brethren.

Having thus treated those who defend Toleration, his Superior Pastors are in the next Place to be admonished of their Duty, which is to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against the Persons intitled to legal Indulgence; which Anathema's are stiled Sentences ratified in Heaven, and such as no Power on Earth dare reverse.

Far be it from me to say, that Sentences ratified in Heaven can be reversed by the Powers of this World. But if Doctor Sacheverell were a Superior Pastor, and should Anathematize, or, in plain English, Curse and Sentence all those who enjoy the Benefit of Toleration, to Damnation, he must excuse, if I could not believe that such a Sentence would be ratified in Heaven.

And as to any Ecclesiastical Censure not ratified in Heaven, it is downright Insolence to say, there is no Power upon Earth that can reverse it.

But since our Superior Pastors will exercise a truly Christian and noble Spirit of Charity and Moderation, and indulge scrupulous Consciences, the Doctor is pleased however to bear his Testimony against it, and is not contented with delivering over to Satan those only who enjoy the Indulgence, but they who defend Toleration must also bear them Company.

His indeed is a very comprehensive Anathema, and is conceiv'd in these Words; viz. And as he chose it in this World, appoints him in the next his Portion with Hypocrites and Unbelievers, with all Liars, that have their Part in the Lake which burns with Fire and Brimstone, with the grand Father of Falshood, the Devil and his Angels. And so here we leave our False Brethren, in the Company they always kept Correspondence with.

This, my Lords, is a most dreadful unchristian Sentence, a Sentence so barbarous, so astonishing, that I am at a Loss to imagine, how it could enter into the Mind of Man to conceive it.

Perhaps, my Lords, it may be equally dangerous to defend the Athes of the venerable Prelate Archbishop Grindall; he, it seems, was a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, because he deluded Queen Elizabeth to a Toleration of the Genevian Discipline. Here we may observe the Doctor's great Aversion to all kind of Toleration.

Methinks, for the Sake of the Reformation, better Language should have been given, and more decent Expressions should have been bestow'd upon a Man we all know bore so considerable a Part in the Establishment of it.

Here likewise we may observe the Doctor's Inclination to wholsome Severities, such as Queen Elizabeth made use of, which were such as I hope will never be seen more in this Kingdom. And by the Way, what a Spirit is this Man of, who can find nothing to commend in the Reign of that glorious Queen, but the blackest and worst Part of it.

I cannot agree, that these harsh Expressions, as the Answer owns they are, are the rather to be excused, because the Remains of the Archbishop were so long since deposited, especially when we consider that his Memory has been had in the highest Esteem and Veneration by all the Reformed Churches in Christendom, from that Time down to the Fifth Day of November last.

For my own Part, I think it very Immoral to cast Reflections upon the Dead, how ill soever they may have deserved from us; and the longer a Man has been so, in my Opinion, rather aggravates than lessens the Immorality.

I am free to own, he whose Morals will permit him to reflect upon the Departed, is not therefore to be impeached for it, as for an High Crime and Misdemeanor; but that is not the present Case. Archbishop Grindall is thus severely treated upon a Supposition he deluded the Queen to a Toleration; and all the hard Words which are falsely and unreasonably bestowed upon him, are evidently levelled at at the present Toleration, and designed maliciously to Asperse and Traduce it, by representing it as injurious to the Character of all concern'd in it, dangerous to her Majesty, and destructive to the Constitution both in Church and State.

By these Means, my Lords, and others (if possible worse than these) one Part of the People, through groundless Fear and Jealousy, unreasonably and maliciously instilled, are to be stirred up to Arms and Violence; others, upon the Peril of Damnation, are not so much as to utter one Word in Defence of Toleration; whilst the third and last Part are to have the Doctor's wholesome Severities executed upon them.

My Lords, 'Tis too Notorious that this Incendiary, for so the Articles of the Commons of Great Britain have called him, has already stirred up unaccountable Feuds and Quarrels throughout the Nation; the Commons are too sensible of it, and have therefore brought the Offender before your Lordships in Justice and Judgment.

Many are the Seeds of Sedition which he has sown; and the Fruit to be expected, is Civil Discord and Confusion, unless some Remedy shall be applied to prevent it.

The Commons, for her Majesty's Safety, and for the Security of the Constitution, have thought it absolutely Necessary to bring him to answer for these High Crimes and Misdemeanors before your Lordships Tribunal; conceiving his Offences to be of so exorbitant a Nature, that they deserve the Solemnity of this Proceeding.

And then the LORDS adjourned to their House above.

Wednesday, March 1. The Third Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly Charge and Command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed in your Evidence.

Mr. Thompson. MY Lords, Your Lordships having heard what has been produced in Maintenance of the two first Articles of this Impeachment, I shall take the Liberty to proceed, and endeavour to discharge the Trust reposed in me by the Commons, to support the third Article, and the Accusations contained in it. I will not waste your Lordships Time, by making any Apology for my Inabilities, and being unequal to this Undertaking; not doubting but that I shall find from your Lordships a candid Interpretation of whatever I shall offer on this Occasion.

This Article, my Lords, is founded on a Vote or Resolution of your Lordships, and the Commons, in Parliament assembled, which is recited in the Preamble of these Articles, and the Occasion of which it may be necessary to mention to your Lordships. It was some few Years ago that there were many scandalous and seditious Rumours spread Abroad, of the Danger of the Church of England, as established by Law. There were several Libels dispersed over the Kingdom, reviling her Majesty's Administration in Church and State; and among the rest, one intitled, The Memorial of the Church of England. Her Majesty was pleased to take Notice of these seditious Reports from her Throne to the Parliament; and thereupon your Lordships and the Commons, on the 17th of December, 1705, came to the Vote or Resolution mentioned in the Preamble, and an Address, which is recited to this Effect; "That your Lordships, and the Commons, in Parliament assembled, did address and lay before her Majesty a Vote or Resolution, That the Church of England, as established by Law, and which was rescued from the extremest Danger by his late Majesty, of glorious Memory, was, by GOD's Blessing, under her Majesty, in a safe and flourishing Condition; and that whoever should go about to suggest and insinuate that the Church is in Danger under her Majesty's Administration, is an Enemy to the Queen, the Church, and the Kingdom."

"And that your Lordships, and the Commons, by their said Address, did humbly beseech her Majesty to make the said Vote or Resolution publick, and to take effectual Measures for the punishing the Authors and Spreaders of such malicious and seditious Reports. And that on the 20th of the same December, her Majesty was pleased to issue her Royal Proclamation accordingly."

"Now, my Lords, this Article charges "That in Opposition to, and Defiance of, and in order to arraign and blacken that Vote or Resolution, Doctor Sacheverell, in his Sermon preached at St. Paul's, does suggest and assert the Church of England to be in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under her Majesty's Administration." The Article further says, "That he wickedly and maliciously insinuates, That the Members of Parliament, who passed that Resolution, were themselves conspiring the Ruin of the Church, which they voted to be out of Danger: And this by way of Parallel, or Allusion to that Assembly, who voted the Person of King Charles the First to be out of Danger, at the same Time when they were conspiring his Destruction."

My Lords, I will now do the Doctor the Justice to take Notice of what he says in his Answer, and alledges as his Justification. He denies that he asserts the Church to be in Danger, under her Majesty's Administration; or otherwise than from Vice and Infidelity, Blasphemy and Profaneness. And as to the Parallel in the Vote, and the Insinuation of the Members conspiring the Ruin of the Church; He says, he never mentions that Vote, nor did he design the Parallel as laid to his Charge. He only meant, That while some Men were conspiring the Death of the King, others, not privy to this Design, voted him out of Danger: So, though the Members voted the Church to be out of Danger, yet others were conspiring against the Church, and by their Vice and Infidelity were drawing down Vengeance on the Church and Kingdom. And as to that Vote made four Years ago, He says, it concerns only those who did then insinuate the Church of England to be in Danger under her Majesty's Administration.

Now,

Now, my Lords, having stated the Charge, and the Defence, I shall proceed to acquaint your Lordships with the several Passages of the Sermon, which the Commons apprehend will make out their Accusation. And here, my Lords, I shall take Leave to say, That no strained or forced Constructions can be desired by the Commons, or expected from your Lordships, or any Inferences to be deduced, but what naturally arise from a fair, impartial, and candid Interpretation.

My Lords, The first Passage which the Commons apprehend is for their Purpose, is in the 5th Page; the Doctor just before, enumerates St. Paul's Misfortunes that befel him, whilst he was propagating the Gospel, and says, "There is a very observable Gradation in his Sufferings; but that, of all his Calamities, the highest of them proceeded from False Brethren." And taking Notice of the Condition of the Church of Corinth, then follow these Words; "Though it were very obvious to draw a Parallel here betwixt the sad Circumstances of the Church of Corinth formerly, and of the Church of England at present, wherein her holy Communion has been rent and divided by factious and schismatical Impostors, her pure Doctrine has been corrupted and defiled; her primitive Worship and Discipline profaned and abused; her sacred Orders denied and vilified; her Priests and Professors (like St. Paul) calumniated, misrepresented and ridiculed; her Altars and Sacraments prostituted to Hypocrites, Deists, Socinians and Atheists; and this done, I wish I could not say, without Discouragement, I am sure with Impunity, not only by our professed Enemies; but, which is worse, by our pretended Friends, and False Brethren.

It may be observed, that the Doctor is very free in his Parallels; and when either Church or State is to be represented by Comparisons, he is pleased to make use of the worst he can find. He says, The Church of Corinth was in the utmost of Perils; and then it was to his Purpose to make the Allusion, and bring the Church of England into the same Condition.

Here are many Particulars in this Passage, whereby the Church is said to be in sad Circumstances, and I cannot tell how to apply them according to the Doctor's Way of Interpretation; for he says, all these Enormities are practised, not only without Discouragement, but with Impunity; not by professed Enemies, but by False Brethren: So he plainly shews who he aims at, as the Authors of these Calamities. He excludes vicious Infidels, Blasphemers, and Hereticks, who are professed Enemies, and lays it upon False Brethren: And he explains what Sort of False Brethren he means; For who can prostitute Altars and Sacraments to Deists, Atheists, and Socinians, but some of his own Order? And who are to punish such Offences among the Clergy, but their spiritual Superiors? And whether they are not Part of her Majesty's Administration, I submit to your Lordships.

But, my Lords, supposing the Fact to be true, That there are erroneous Doctrines publish'd; to what End must the World be told in this Manner that they are vented with Impunity, but to reflect on those who should punish them? And can that be done without a Prosecution? If the Doctor had produced any of his undeniable and ample Proofs of these Matters, (which he mentions in his Answer) before any Court that had a proper Conscience of them, and been denied Justice, he might have had more Reason for Complaint: But to blame his Superiors for not punishing what they might be ignorant of, and which, he says, he was not, (and for which he might have promoted a Prosecution) seems to retort the Guilt upon himself, which he would lay upon them.

My Lords, The second Passage is in Page the 16th. He is talking of a Comprehension which was designed, not long since, to unite the Church and Dissenters; and complains of the Persons who were concerned in that heinous Intention; and then he asserts, "That since this Model of an Universal Liberty and Coalition failed, and these False Brethren could not carry the Conventicle into the Church, they are now resolved to bring the Church into the Conventicle, which will more plausibly and slyly effect her Ruin. What could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, What they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church can't be pull'd down, it may be blown up; and no Matter, with these Men, how it be destroyed, so that it is destroyed". Now, my Lords, who were these False Brethren that were concern'd in this Design of Comprehension, which failed, and who introduce worse Mischiefs? Do these Dangers proceed from Vice and Infidelity, from Blasphemy and Erroneous Doctrines? No, my Lords, these False Brethren are described in the Page before, under his Second General Head, to be in Church and State: Which must be Persons in Power and Authority; the Expression itself imports it; nor could they otherwise be capable of accomplishing that Design, of uniting the Dissenters and the Church: To which Design, and the Authors who intended it, he is pleased to give the most vile and scurrilous Names imaginable; and afterwards he lays to their Charge an Intention to blow up the Church by Moderation. And this, I suppose, is one of the Vices which the Doctor mentions in his Answer, as one Means of Danger to the Church. If Moderation be a Vice, I will do the Doctor the Justice to acquit him from the least Tincture of it, in any of his Works that I have ever met with.

My Lords, The Third Passage is in Page the 18th. He is continuing his Observations of the Danger from the same False Brethren in Church and State; and then his Words are, "Falshood always implies Treachery; and whether that is a Qualification for any one to be trusted, especially with the Guardianship of our Church or Crown, let our Governors consider". This, my Lords, must relate to Persons, who (as he would insinuate) are not fit to be trusted with the Guardianship of the Church or Crown: And whether this Reflection does not seem to aim higher than the Administration, I submit to your Lordships.

The next Passage is in Page the 20th: The Words are these; "And now we are under no Danger in these deplorable Circumstances? Must we lull ourselves under this sad Repose, and in such a stupid Lethargick Security embrace our Ruin? When Elisha, the Great Prophet of God, was surrounded with an Host of Enemies that fought for his Life, his blind Servant beheld not the Peril his Master was in, till his Eyes were opened by a Miracle, and he found himself in the midst of Horses and Chariots of Fire. I pray God we be out of Danger; but we may remember, that the King's Person was voted to be

"be so at the same Time that his Murderers
"were conspiring his Death.

Now, my Lords, the Doctor, to excuse this Passage, says, the deplorable Circumstances we are in, proceeds from the Maturity of National Sins, &c. as in his Answer. But who are mention'd in his Sermon as the Occasion of the Maturity of National Sins but the Dissenters, who, he says, are plotting the Ruin of the Church, and False Brethren join with them? So that here neither is the Danger asserted from Vice and Infidelity, but as it is occasioned by the Dissention from the Church, which the Law has thought fit to apprehend as no Danger to the Church; and therefore it did not become him to assert the contrary. Then as to the Parallel of the Assembly who voted King Charles the First out of Danger, and of the Members who made the Vote about the Danger of the Church Four Years ago, he says, he meant no Reflection on any of the Members who passed that Vote, because he never mentioned that Vote; and as to the Vote about King Charles, others were conspiring his Ruin than those who voted him out of Danger; so while the Parliament voted the Church out of Danger, there were other Enemies conspiring her Ruin. If the Doctor intended no Reflection upon that Vote, Why was Voting in any Case mention'd? Can any one imagine that the Doctor did not know of that Vote, since the Danger of the Church is so much his Topick? Nor can I presume him ignorant of the Time when that Vote about King Charles was passed; which, as far as I can observe from the History of that Time, was in November 1648, that he was voted out of Danger; and when he was Tried and Beheaded, I need not mention to your Lordships: And whatever Alteration might be made in that Assembly after the Vote, and before his Death, was done by those Persons who conspired his Destruction, and who were Part of that Assembly who voted him out of Danger. So that it seems plain, that the Vote of Safety, and the Conspiracy of Ruin, came from most of the same Persons; and it does not seem very strange to suppose the Doctor intended his Allusion in the same manner.

And as to the Scripture he quotes to this Purpose, "That the blind Servant beheld not the Peril his Master Elisba was in, till his Eyes were opened by Miracle, and he found himself in the midst of Horses and Chariots of Fire." My Lords, these Horses and Chariots of Fire were not the Prophet's Enemies but his Friends; nor was there any Danger to be feared from them; on the contrary, they were a Security from his Enemies; so that he plainly perverts the Sense of that Text, to make a stronger Impression, and more effectually to delude the People.

My Lords, The last Passage is in the last Page: He is still talking of the Danger of the Church, and quotes a Text as in the Lamentations (viz.) "Though she lies bleeding of the Wounds she received in the House of her Friends". Indeed, my Lords, I can't find it there; therefore it seems to me to be a Lamentation of the Doctor's own making. Then he goes on, "Though the Ways of Sion may mourn for a Time, and her Gates be desolate, her Priests sigh, and she in Bitterness, because her Adversaries are Chief, and her Enemies at present prosper; though among all her Lovers she has few to comfort her, and many of her Friends have dealt treacherously with her, and are become her Enemies." My Lords, I mention these Passages only to shew, that the Doctor, by the most pathetic Expressions of his own, mix'd with these Texts of Scripture, endeavours to represent the Church of England to be in the utmost Danger.

I shall trouble your Lordships no further with the Passages in this Sermon; but should not omit to take Notice, that there is a Suggestion in the Doctor's Answer, that the Vote four Years ago did not concern him; but that it related only to them that then did assert the Church to be in Danger: If he had minded the Words of the Vote, he would have found there was no Pretence for that Objection; for it is, "Whoever shall go about to insinuate, that the Church is in Danger under her Majesty's Administration;" which must relate to any Time during the Continuance of her Majesty's Reign.

And now, my Lords, I beg Leave to observe some Circumstances attending this Offence, which give it the highest Aggravation. That Memorial which was published some Years ago, and was the chief Occasion of the Vote in Parliament, was a Libel that reviled her Majesty and her Administration, as the Occasion of the Danger of the Church. The Author was pleased to conceal himself, and durst not avow his Doctrine; but the Book had the Fate it deserved: And from the Ashes of that Phoenix arose another Memorial, with many of the same virulent Expressions against her Majesty's Administration, agreeing in the whole Scope of it, as to the same scandalous Purpose; but far exceeding it in Malice and Inveteracy.

And this new Memorialist has presumed to publish his Seditious Reflections in the most open manner imaginable; first at the Assises at Derby, and afterwards in the great Church of this Metropolis; and has thought fit to print and disperse about forty Thousand of them over the Kingdom. From whence could this extraordinary Zeal proceed? Was it to exhort Men to revere their Governors, and to submit to those in Authority over them? Was it intended to preserve Peace and Good-will amongst Men? To promote Charity, Brotherly Love and Affection? No, my Lords, there is plain Evidence to the contrary, Ex ore suo judicabitur. He tells you the Reason of his Topicks in that Place; he says, he intended "To open the Eyes of the deluded People in that great Metropolis; to set the rich and powerful Inhabitants right in their Notions of Government in Church and State." They were obliged to him for his pious Design, and for instilling those Doctrines, which, as your Lordships were told Yesterday, would make their Religion, Liberty, Property, and all that is dear and valuable, Precarious: He tells you further, "That our Constitution of Church and State is vigorously attack'd from without, and lazily defended from within; that there are Attempts upon the Friends of the Church, to shut their Eyes and Mouths, in order to undermine and destroy them; that he thinks the Pulpit a proper Place for Politicks; and that it is the Business of a Clergyman to sound a Trumpet in Sion, to cry aloud and spare not." And in his Preface to the Derby Sermon he explains himself still further upon this Topick, "That the Church is shamefully betrayed and run down; that there are some still who will defend it with their Lives and Fortunes." And states the Case as if there was an immediate Necessity to take up Arms for a Holy War upon this Occasion.

My Lords, This Crime is more heinous, for that there is the least Reason for these Seditious Murmurs, that has been in any Reign whatever. Is there any Invasion or Attempt upon the Liturgy, even the least Ceremony of the Church, or any Part of the Ecclesiastical Constitution? Are her Revenues impaired, or any of her Temporal Rights violated? No, my Lords; but our Royal Sovereign has distinguish'd her Care for this Church in a more peculiar Manner than any of her Predecessors; she has given from her own Revenue to increase that of the Clergy, for their more creditable Support, and to enable them to preach sound Doctrine for the Welfare of her Subjects; nor is her Majesty wanting to promote Religion, Piety and Virtue, by her own Royal Example, the most effectual Encouragement. These are the true Basis of the Church, and the best Pillars to support it. And what Occasion was there for these Reflections on her Majesty's Administration? Has not that venerable Bench given the World abundant Proof of their Care and Vigilance to preserve that Church, of which they are the Guardians, by their Learning and unblamable Conduct; by their zealous and resolute Defence of her in the worst of Times, and against all her Enemies? It is very surprizing that a Gentleman, whose Education has been in the Fountain of Learning and Religion so many Years (who cannot be presum'd to err through Ignorance) that he should presume in his private Capacity to contradict the Sense of the whole Nation, and cast such Aspersions on his Superiours. To what End could he so zealously disperse his Notions, if not to animate a deluded People to the Execution of seditious Designs.

It were to be wished, that a Government could be supported by Mildness and Clemency; but such is the State of depraved Nature, even these most Passive-Obedience Natures, that they are not contented to be only ungrateful for the Benefits they enjoy from the Church and State, but they must rebel against Principle, and fly in the Face of that Government from which they receive their Support and Protection.

The Doctor cries aloud, and there are many others that spare not: Some have presumed to censure this very Proceeding before your Lordships, as a Persecution of the Church. And what must be the Consequence of tolerating such bold and daring Spirits to go on in their seditious Practices!

If your Lordships do not vindicate your own Resolutions, and exert your Power and Authority to suppress that audacious and unparall'd Insolence, that daily flies Abroad from the Pulpit and the Press, (which, as the Doctor says truly, are become the Mints of Faction and Sedition) I may take Leave to say, there will be too much Reason for his Assertions of Danger both to Church and State: But the Commons are so well satisfy'd of your Lordships true Concern for the Preservation of our Constitution, that they cannot imagine you will suffer any Attempts that may be pernicious to the Welfare of the Government, to pass without condign Punishment; and therefore they intirely rely on your Lordships Wisdom and Justice.

Mr. Compton. MAY it please your Lordships, I am commanded by the Commons to assist in maintaining the third Article of their Impeachment against Doctor Henry Sacheverell, which has been fully opened to your Lordships by the learned Gentleman that spoke before me.

My Lords, The Commons think they have good Reason to assert, that Dr. Sacheverell, in his Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, doth falsely and maliciously contradict and arraign a Resolution of both Houses of Parliament, approv'd of by her Majesty, and made publick by her Royal Proclamation.

My Lords. Your Lordships cannot but have observed, that it has been one of the constant Artifices of the Enemies of the present happy Establishment, who very well know the just Value the People of this Nation have for the established Church, to suggest and insinuate, that this Church is a Condition of great Peril and Adversity, in order to foment Animosities, and to cover Designs which they dare not publickly own. But how frequent soever this has been, I believe I may safely affirm, that this scandalous and seditious Assertion was never so boldly maintained, nor with such invidious and aggravating Circumstances, as by the Criminal at your Lordships Bar.

The learned Society, of which he is a Member, reaped such signal, such immediate Advantages from the Revolution, that he could not be unmindful, he could not be ignorant of the extreme Danger from which our Laws and Liberties, our Church and Constitution were rescued by his late Majesty. But such is his Ingratitude to our Great Deliverer, such is his Inveteracy to the Revolution, that he makes that very Revolution the Period of Time from whence the Enemies of our Church first had Hopes to deliver her up to her worst Adversaries. Nor does his Malignity cease there, but he endeavours to persuade the People, that from the Revolution to the present Time, there has been a continued Series of Contrivances to ruin and destroy the Church: At the Revolution, by open Violence; but Now, that is, under her Majesty's Administration, by secret Treachery; and since neither the late nor the present Reign can escape his Invectives, for what Person he relieves his Panegyrics, is submitted to your Lordships to determine.

My Lords, I would not take up any of your Lordships Time unnecessarily; but I must not conclude, without expressing the Indignation the Commons have at his traducing and vilifying the last Parliament, by that odious Parallel in the twenty first Page of his Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's.

My Lords, the Parliament he thus endeavours to blacken, was opened with so full an Appearance in both Houses, that her Majesty observ'd it with Satisfaction from the Throne; and at the same Time her Majesty with Grief observed the Malice of such Persons, who suggested the Church was in Danger; and desired the Assistance of her Parliament to discountenance and defeat such Practices. And in Duty to her Majesty, to secure the Quiet and Peace of the Kingdom, and to disappoint the Designs of the Enemies of our Church and Constitution, both Houses of Parliament came to the Resolution, set forth by the Commons in the Articles of the Impeachment which have been read to your Lordships. And the same Parliament proceeded in this and other Matters which were before them, with so much Vigour as well as Prudence, that in less than six Weeks her Majesty graciously took Notice, that their Proceedings had had a good Effect all over Europe. And at the Conclusion of the Session, her Majesty, with great Goodness, declares how much she was pleas'd to observe their Unanimity and Zeal throughout the whole Session, against every Thing that tended to Sedition. It was this Parliament that so cheerfully concurr'd with her Majesty in promoting and completing the Union of the two Kingdoms. And it was the Gentlemen that compos'd this Parliament, join'd by the Representative of the other Part of the united Kingdom, who readily and unanimously assisted her Majesty in disappointing the Attempt of the Pretender to her Crown, whose chief Dependence was in the restless and arbitrary bitrary Principles of some of her Majesty's Subjects, ill-affected to their Country.

And now, my Lords, is there any Ground to compare the dutiful Proceedings of such a Parliament, with what was done in those unhappy Times, with which he would maliciously draw a Parallel? No, my Lords. And I may safely venture to say, that 'tis impossible to find the least Resemblance between her Majesty's glorious Reign and that unfortunate Administration, except that there were

then, as there are now, Ministers of the Church, who by their Function, being Messengers of Peace, set up to be the Trumpeters of Sedition, and Incendiaries to Rebellion. But, my Lords, the Commons hope, That the happy Period is now come, when even this Resemblance shall have its Determination; for they intirely rely on your Lordships Justice to inflict such an exemplary Punishment on this Offender, as may deter others from endeavouring to distract the Kingdom with such groundless Distrusts and Jealousies for the future.

Lord Coningsby. MY Lords, I am commanded by the Commons of Great Britain to assist, and endeavour to make good, the important Charge they have exhibited against the Criminal at the Bar: And because I am least able, among all the Gentlemen that have that Honour, out of Indulgence to me I am assigned to the third Article, that wants least to be supported.

The Sermon preached by the Doctor at St. Paul's, and which has been read to your Lordships, from the first Word in the Title Page, to the last Line in the Conclusion, is one false, malicious, and seditious Assertion, That the Church of England was under the last Reign, and is under the present, in the utmost Peril and Danger.

The Proclamation which your Lordships have heard mentioned, and which was designed by our glorious Queen, from whose Speech it took its Rise, by your Lordships, and the Commons who concurred in it, to be a Warning to such Incendiaries, as the Criminal, not to trumpet amongst the People Suggestions so seditious, in order to cover Designs more dangerous, and which, God be praised, they are not yet strong enough, nor never I hope will be, publickly to own; shews this malignant Offender committed this Offence in Defiance of her Majesty, your Lordships, and the Commons.

The Proofs, which almost every Gentleman has brought to the two preceding Articles; and those particular Instances that have been so fully opened by these Gentlemen who have spoke before me to the present, shews that it would be vain in me, and mispending your Lordships Time, to pretend to enforce those Points, already so fully made good.

I shall therefore very shortly, tho' I hope very plainly, lay before your Lordships what are those pernicious Designs the Doctor intends to cover, and at last hopes to bring to pass, by his Preaching, Printing, and Publishing, not only round this Kingdom, but amongst his Friends on the other Side of the Water, this seditious, I may say, rebellious Discourse, for which he stands at present impeached by the Commons.

And as it has been shewn your Lordships, by the Gentlemen that made good the first Article, that the Doctor, by reflecting on the necessary Means to bring about the Revolution, the Foundation on which our present happy Establishment is built; by asserting that her Majesty ought to depend upon no other Title to the Crown but her Hereditary one; design'd, by such destructive Positions, to bring back the Pretender, with Popery and French Tyranny attending him, to govern the State.

So it is as plain, from the whole Scope of his Sermon, that the Doctor, and all those in Combination with him, have nothing more at Heart than to destroy the present Church, as established by the wholesome Laws of this Land, and that because it's most consonant in its Doctrine and Discipline to that of the primitive Christians, of any since the Time of the Apostles; and consequently less agreeable with the flaming Opinions of such Firebrands, who know not of what Spirit they are of: And this in order to set up a Scheme of a Church, agreeable to the tyrannical one they have projected for the State: A Church, the Doctor's I mean, though in Pretence Protestant, that would be ready soon to be turned into a Monster, by adding to itself a Popish Head.

A Church that will destroy all those that brought about, and have since supported the happy Revolution.

A Church, which upon Anti-Christian Principles professes Burning for Conscience sake; which the Doctor, like those wicked Men whose Mercies are cruel, calls wholesome Severities.

A Church that will turn all the Blessings we enjoy under the present Administration, into all those Miseries we got rid of by the late glorious Revolution.

I cannot doubt therefore but your Lordships will out of Duty to the best of Queens, and in Justice to your Lordships and the Commons, deter others from ever being guilty of the like heinous Offence.

Mr. Dolben. MY Lords, This Article of the Commons Impeachment contains one Criminal Position, That the Church of England is now in a Condition of great Peril and Danger under her Majesty's Administration, aggravated by an odious Parallel that affords a Pregnant Proof of the true Spirit and Designs of this bold offender.

The Accusation has already been fully made out by plain and positive Words in his Sermon; from which, as well as from many other Passages, I shall beg Leave to submit to your Lordships Judgment, whether that wicked Parallel may not justly be turn'd upon him; Whether there is not more than Suspicion that he, and all his Abettors, are conspiring the Ruin and Destruction of the Church, when under the Disguise of a False Zeal they prostitute her sacred Name, to carry on dark and deep Designs, fatal both to Church and State.

I shall only briefly take Notice to your Lordships, that the Guilt of this Offence arises from a plain Contempt of her Majesty's Proclamation, and of the Resolutions of both Houses of Parliament; moved by no Inducement, but an Eagerness and Industry not to let any Shadow or Colour escape, that may contribute to his Part in the grand Design, to be only effected by fomenting Divisions and Distractions amongst us.

But, my Lords, in order to unveil the Doctor's Pretences, and to take away his trivial Excuses, I beg Leave to represent to your Lordships, that if the whole Legislature had not, from a full Conviction of the Church's Security and Safety, laid a severe Injunction against the publishing such a false and pernicious Suggestion, yet evident Truth ought to have taught him not to have transgress'd in so notorious a Manner.

4 U

My

My Lords, When it appears that the Church has the Sanction of so many and so good Laws to establish and defend it; when the Veneration and Devotion to it, of so great a Majority of the People, is so visibly fix'd in their Hearts, that the bad Examples and provoking Behaviour of this False Brother, and of several others of the same Stamp, have not made the least Abatement, or Impression to its Disadvantage; when the Parliament on all Occasions appears so forward and unanimous in their Zeal and Affection for it; when 'tis recommended and illustrated by the Learning, Piety, Wisdom, Charity and Christian Moderation of so many of its chief Pastors; but above all, when 'tis under the Protection and Government of a Supreme Head, a true and constant Defender of its Faith and Discipline, who having already exposed her Royal Person to Hardships and Dangers, to rescue it in a Time of its utmost Peril, does continue daily to manifest the same Devotion, Piety and tender Concern for it: Under this powerful Alliance for its Support, can ought but Malice and Envy at its Prosperity, can any one but an Incendiary or disguis'd Enemy insinuate, that the Church of England is not fenced and fortified with an impregnable Barrier against all Danger, from open Attacks or Violations?

'Tis true indeed, my Lords, that no human Care or Policy can prevent the Attempts and secret Conspiracies of intestine Traytors. Vipers in the Bottom may sting, though the Body be covered with the strongest Armour. All that can be done is, to be watchful to discover and expose the Hypocrite, to detect and punish his Crimes. The Commons, on this Occasion, are here exerting their Part of this Duty, fully assured of Success from your Lordships equal Zeal and Justice.

My Lords, You have now brought to your Bar a Clergyman, bound, by the strongest Ties and Duty of his Function, to instruct and propagate the necessary Means for the Peoples true Happiness in this World, as well as the next; yet your Lordships will find him proved to be a Trumpeter Itinerant of Sedition and Rebellion, first at Derby, then in London; an Agent detach'd from that dark Cabal, whose Emissaries appear in all Shapes, and almost in all Places; an Asserter of such pestilential and unparallel'd Doctrines, as at once overthrow the whole Constitution both of Church and State. He may perhaps urge a Precedent, in which it has been pleaded, and from the Pulpit, that an urgent Necessity can justify the Breach of Laws; and from others, that in particular Cases they may be dispensed with; but this Gentleman must be allowed the Infamy, to have stretched and improved those pernicious Tenets to the exalted Height of making all our Laws, Liberties, Religion, and Lives, held only at the precarious Pleasure of any bold Invader; for nothing can be a plainer Exposition or Consequence, when 'tis taught, that no Oppression, no Violation can justify an Opposition to it.

My Lords, The Commons have brought this Offender before you, with a View, not only to detect and punish his Offence, but to obtain an Occasion in the most publick and authentick Manner to avow the Principles, and justify the Means, upon which the present Government and the Protestant Succession are founded and established; and this more out of a generous Concern for Posterity, than for our own present Security. My Lords, we are so happy as to have a Sovereign on the Throne, whose Goodness, Justice, and Piety, leaves no Room for the least Fear or Jealousy; but we hope the Record of this Proceeding will remain a lasting Monument, to deter a Successor, that may inherit her Crowns, but not her Virtues, from attempting to invade the Laws, or the Peoples Rights; and if not, that it will be a noble Precedent to excite our Posterity to wrestle and tug for Liberty as we have done. My Lords, I doubt not but her Majesty will with the greatest Satisfaction, see the Government thus put upon a right and equal Foot, since thereby those Blessings will be secured to future Ages, which her happy Reign has planted amongst us, since thereby she will intail a lasting Felicity on her People, and prevent those real Dangers both to Church and State, which at this Time are so falsely insinuated. But, my Lords, if this should not now be effectually obtained, and by such wholesome Severities as the Doctor applauds and recommends, give me Leave to conclude, with a juster Complaint than that in his Answer, That hard is the Fate of that People, who after having been twenty Years in War, in Conjunction with so many great Allies, with the Expence of so much Blood and Treasure, contending only against Tyranny and Oppression, and which we may justly hope is at last subdued, shall then see all Europe enjoy the Fruits and Benefits of our Labours; and at the same Time, tho' her Majesty's well chosen General shall at last bring home Peace, as he has so often the Laurels of Victory, to lay with humble Duty at her Royal Feet, yet we, only we, must be rendered incapable of the common Blessing, betrayed at home to a perpetual Condition of Bondage, by such False Brethren as are at your Lordships Bar.

Then the Lord Haversham moved to adjourn to their House above; and being returned, and seated as before, Proclamation for Silence was made by the Serjeant at Arms.

Lord Chancellor. Mr. Dolben, the Lords have taken Notice, that at the Conclusion of what you spoke, you us'd this Expression, * as are at your Lordships Bar; which words are so general, that their Lordships are of an Opinion that they want an Explanation.

Mr. Dolben. My Lords, those Words had relation only to the Prisoner at the Bar.

Serjeant Parker. MY Lords, Your Lordships have heard the three first Articles of this Charge largely spoken to; it is my Duty, in Obedience to the Command I have been honoured with by the Commons, to make good the Charges in the Fourth. I am sensible how unequal I am to such a Work, both from my want of Capacity, and my present Indisposition; but however, in such Manner as I can, I shall endeavour it.

This Article sets forth, That He the said Henry Sacheverell, in his said Sermon and Books, does falsely and maliciously suggest, that her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution; and that there are Men of Characters and Stations both in Church and State, who are False Brethren, and do themselves weaken, undermine, and betray, and do encourage and put it in the Power of others, who are professed enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment: And chargeth her

* Exception had been taken, that the Word are might carry the Reflection to the Counsel and Solicitor assigned by the Lords to assist Dr. Sacheverell, who were also at the Bar.

Majesty, and those in Authority under her, with a general Male-Administration; and as a publick Incendiary, he persuades her Majesty's Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Factions and Parties, instills groundless Jealousies, and foment destructive Divisions among them, and excites and stirs them up to Arms and Violence: And, that his said malicious and seditious Suggestions may make the stronger Impressions upon the Minds of her Majesty's Subjects, he the said Henry Sacheverell does wickedly wrest and pervert divers Texts and Passages of holy Scripture.

This Article in general, is a Charge of Sedition under several Aggravations, and made good by almost every Part of the Sermon and Dedications, read before your Lordships in Evidence.

The avowed Design of the Sermon, is to represent the extreme Perils and Distresses of the Church and Constitution from False Brethren, that are in the Administration, and countenanced by it.

He represents the Church in the utmost Extremity, those Fences broken down, without which she is naked and unguarded, her Altars and Sacraments prostituted, herself deserted, betrayed, undermined, and persecuted with open Violence, bleeding of her Wounds, her Enemies openly calling for her Destruction.

The Nation, sunk into the lowest Degree of Corruption, swarming and over-run with Atheists, Deists, Socinians, Hypocrites, Villains, Rebels, Traytors, Correspondents with the Devil, nay, with Men that are themselves the worst of Demons.

The Government, so far from applying a Remedy, that all this is done openly, with Impunity, without Discouragement: Nay, the Persons from whom the Mischiefs arise, are suffer'd to form themselves into Seminaries, to propagate Atheism and other bellish Principles, are let into the Administration, they are in Places, Places are given them as the Reward of betraying their Parties, they engross all Places, they are Persons of Characters and Stations, nay, they are Chiefs.

Nor is this done in any Representation to those, that by making new Laws, or putting in Execution the old, might regularly cure the Mischiefs; but in a popular Harangue from the Pulpit: Not in Terms of Lamentation, not as Grounds of Humiliation, or in a Language that might become one that thought the only Arms of the Church to be Prayers and Tears; but with all Malice, Bitterness, Reviling, Insolence, endeavouring to raise in his Auditors the Passions himself puts on, and pointing out (as far as he dares) to Arms and Violence for a Cure, and not so much as offering any other.

These are the Colours in which he paints our Condition, and thus he chuses to shew the Zeal and Duty he professes to the best of Queens.

But since he pretends in great Measure to deny or evade the Charge, it may not be amiss to look a little more particularly into his Sermon, and take a View of the Scheme of it, and of several Passages therein.

The Crime he professes to shew the Mischiefs of in his Sermon, is false Brotherhood: The Method he proposes to treat it in is,

1. To describe the Crime, and to show who are False Brethren, and upon what Accounts; and he considers it both with Respect to the Church and to the State.

2. To show the Dangers: And,

3. The Guilt and Folly of this Sin. And,

VOL. V.

4. (That it may appear that all the Crimes and all the Treacheries he mentions are not mere Suppositions, but Realities, at this Time,) He undertakes, as a Consequence of all, to shew what mighty Reason we have at all Times, more especially AT PRESENT, to stick to the Principles of our Church and Constitution, and to beware of, and mark all those false Brethren who desert or betray them.

I believe the first Clause of this Article will so clearly be prov'd from the Passages that more directly concern the Second and the Third, that I desire, for saving your Lordships Time, to begin with those two Clauses, and then to return to the First afterwards.

I begin therefore with the second Clause, That the said Henry Sacheverell, in his Sermon and Books, doth falsely and maliciously Suggest, that there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, who are False Brethren, and do themselves weaken, undermine, and betray, and do encourage and put it in the Power of others, who are professed Enemies, to overthrow and destroy the Constitution and Establishment.

To make this out, I beg Leave to observe, that in entering upon his second Head, that is, to shew the great Peril and Mischiefs of these False Brethren both in Church and State, he asserts, pag. 15. That they weaken, undermine, and betray in themselves, and encourage and put it in the Power of our profess'd Enemies to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment of both. This therefore runs through his whole Discourse; and, being affirm'd of False Brethren in general, must be applicable to every sort of false Brother. If then there be any Persons of Characters and Stations whom he represents as False Brothers, then he has, in the Place mentioned, affirm'd of THEM, and undertaken to prove, that THEY weaken, undermine and betray, and put it into the Power of others to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment.

And as to that, he comes under his third Head, pag. 21. to show the Malignity and Guilt of this Sin, in respect of the World, and begins it thus, (pag. 21, 22.) "What a vast Scandal and Offence must it be, to all Persons of Piety and Integrity, to see Men of Characters and Stations thus shift and prevaricate with their Principles, and starting from their Religion, upon any Occasion of Difficulty or Trial, and like the Disciples flying from and forsaking our Saviour, when his Life lay at Stake; to see Mens Opinions sit as loose almost as their Garments, to be put on or off for Convenience; what can unwary Persons conclude from this Tergiversation and Hypocrisy, but that all Religion is State Craft and Imposture? That all Godliness is Gain, and that the Doctrines of the Church lie not so much in her Articles, as her Honours and Revenues?"

This is a full Charge of False Brotherhood upon those Persons of Characters and Stations, and exemplifying in them the Malignity of that Crime, which is the Subject of his Discourse: The Consequence is plain, that he here charges them with False Brotherhood, and having before asserted, That all such False Brothers weaken, undermine, and betray, and put it into the Power of others to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment; he has not only suggested but maintained, that there are Persons of Characters and Stations that weaken, undermine and betray, and put it into the Power of others to destroy the Constitution and Establishment.

In his Answer, put in before your Lordships to the Articles of Impeachment, he would divide the Charge in this Clause; and (1.) as to the suggesting that there are such Persons who are False Brethren; he says, That if he had said there are Persons of Characters and Stations that are False Brethren, not restraining it to the bigbest, it would not be either false, malicious, or highly criminal.

(2.) As to the weakening, undermining, and betraying in themselves, and putting it into the Power of professed Enemies to overturn and destroy the Constitution, he says, he has not suggested that of Persons of Characters and Stations; but the mention of those Persons, and the Expression of weakening and betraying in themselves, and enabling others to destroy the Constitution, are twelve Pages asunder.

(3.) He mentions some, which he thinks do weaken and betray the Constitution, but has not said any of them are Men of Characters and Stations.

In answer to these Glosses, I might say, that if this were meant, not of the bigbest Characters and Stations, nay though it were true too, the affirming this of them would be criminal, and in the Manner he does it, highly so. All subordinate Magistrates, of whatever Station, may be regularly complained of, and called to account; but the Meanest are not to be traduced and libelled, nor the Government upon their Accounts.

But this I offer. The Words, if not restrained to those of bigbest Characters and Stations, neither are they restrain'd to the lowest; and, in Truth, strike all, and so were intended, as other Parts show.

It is no Excuse, if he scandalizes Persons of the bigbest Characters and Stations, that he does not scandalize them only.

It is no Excuse, when he speaks opprobriously, in general Terms, of Men of Characters and Stations, without distinguishing to his Auditory, to distinguish upon his Defence, and pretend he meant only some few of the meaner Sort; that is, that when he was speaking of the Mischief and Malignity of this Crime, and showing how Great it was, his Assertion concerning Men of Characters and Stations in general, was meant only of those, in whom the Mischief and Malignity is least.

No, it is a general Arraignment of the Government throughout, and as such he must answer for it. And to put this out of Doubt, he has told us, Page 26. in Scripture Words, That the Church's Adversaries are chief.

For what he talks of several Senses, in which he says he takes False Brethren in the Sermon, 'tis not at all material in what Sense he charges those Persons with False Brotherhood, if in Consequence thereof he charges them with betraying the Church, and empowering its Enemies to destroy it. The charging them with being False Brethren, had been a Fault, as that is a Term of Reproach, which, with him, carries just as much Malignity as he pleases, even to something analogous to the Sin against the Holy Ghost, and rendring them the worst of Demons. But the Stress of this Accusation, is the Treachery they are charged with as False Brethren.

2. In the next Place, therefore, he denies that Part of the Charge; and for this shew'd Reason, that the two Expressions are twelve Pages asunder: An Answer I admire to see put in upon so solemn an Occasion! As though the False Brotherhood he shows the Danger of, and the False Brother- hood he shows the Malignity of, had no Relation to one another, because twelve Pages asunder.

3. He mentions some that he affirms to be Weakners and Betrayers, &c. but says he does not suggest those to be Men of Characters and Stations. All the Inference to be drawn from that, is, either that there are, besides those, some other Weakners and Betrayers, that are Men of Characters and Stations; or that some of those are Men of Characters and Stations, though he hath not said so; which is no Excuse for him. For though he hath not describ'd every Sort of Weakner or Betrayers; and though he hath not told us which Sort of Weakner or Betrayers he ranks the Men of Characters and Stations under; yet he has in general charg'd Men of Characters and Stations with False Brotherhood, and as False Brethren to be Weakners and Betrayers, &c.

IN the next Place, I would lay before your Lordships the Proof of the third Clause of this Article, which says, That Dr. Sacheverell charges her Majesty, and those in Authority under her, with a general Male-Administration. Every Part of the Sermon makes out this, representing the whole Nation in the utmost Disorder and Confusion, and the Magistrates, instead of applying a Remedy, rather increasing the Distemper.

Page the 14th is a very home and direct Charge upon the Government. It comes under that Part of the Sermon, where he is describing False Brethren with Relation to the State, and when he has declared very largely what they do, and what they bold; he goes then to what they are suffer'd to do: He says, "These false Brethren in our Government do not singly, in private, spread their Poison; but (what is lamentable to be spoken) are suffer'd to combine into Bodies and Seminaries, wherein Atheism, Deism, Tritheism, Socinianism, with all the hellish Principles of Fanaticism, Regicide and Anarchy, are openly profess'd and taught, to corrupt and debauch the Youth of the Nation in all Parts of it, down to Posterity, to the present Reproach and future Extirpation of our Laws and Religion."

The suffering these Things is a direct Charge upon the Administration; and he in Effect declares it so, when he concludes, that this is to the Reproach of our Laws and Religion; that is, of those that do not mend, or do not execute the Law: And he brings it Home to the first Clause, when he declares the Consequence to be the Extirpation of our Laws and Religion.

The Passage I before read, Page 22. concerning Persons of Characters and Stations, likewise proves this: For, what can be a greater Charge upon the Administration, than to accuse the Ministry of putting into publick Stations False Brethren, that betray the Church, and impower others to destroy it? That the Expression there is so general, as to reach all in publick Stations, I have before observ'd; and that it is so meant, may be thus made plain. In the same Passage he is apprehensive that those Persons Behaviour should give Occasion for believing Religion to be but State Craft; that is, a Stratagem us'd by the State to serve its own Ends: "That the Doctrines of the Church lie not so much in its Articles, as its Honours and Revenues"; which Honours and most tempting Revenues are in the Hands of the Crown, and those that are byas'd by them, must be byas'd by the Crown and the Administration.

"traying his own Party for the little sordid Lucre of a Place or Preferment". Here is a plain Representation of a Villain, selling his Conscience; the Price is Place or Preferment, the Buyer that pays him that Price, must have the Disposal of those Places and Preferments; so that those False Brethren are not only suffer'd, but made such by the Administration.

That the False Brethren, which he mentions, as put into Places, are put in by our Governors, he plainly suggests, Page 18. when he bids the Governors consider whether they are fit to be intrusted, especially with the Guardianship of our Church and Crown: For to what Purpose is that qualified Admonition, if the Governors put such Persons into no Places at all? Admonitions to Temporal Governors, with respect to meer Matters of Government, tend only to affront 'em, if present, but can have no other Effect, when they are absent.

Let the Preface to the Derby Sermon, without any Observation or Comment upon it, conclude this Head: "Now when the Principles and Interests of our Church and Constitution are so shamefully betray'd and run down, it can be no little Comfort to all those, who wish their Welfare and Security, to see, that notwithstanding the secret Malice and open Violence they are persecuted with, there are still to be found such worthy Patrons of both, who dare own and defend them as well against the rude and presumptuous Insults of the one Side, as the base undermining Treachery of the other". For I omit to repeat what has been observ'd upon the third Article, or upon the former Clause spoke to by myself.

I RETURN now to the first Clause of this Article, which runs thus: "That he suggests that her Majesty's Administration, both in Church and State, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution."

This is made out from what has been said on the other two; for, if Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, that betray our Constitution, and encourage and enable others to destroy it, come into their Places through the Administration; if the general Male-Administration of her Majesty and those in Authority under her, consist in Part, in preferring and encouraging, at least not discouraging those Persons that betray and destroy the Constitution; the necessary Consequence is, that all those fatal Mischiefs complain'd of arise from the Administration, which therefore plainly tends to the Destruction of the Constitution.

Besides, having involv'd all those, in this Description of False Brotherhood, who defend Toleration; and having declar'd the Church's Adversaries chief: Considering who is chief, and what Promises have been made for Continuance of the Toleration; his Insolence ought to be treated rather with Indignation and Contempt, and a just Punishment, than vouchsaf'd an Answer.

As to the next Clause; "And as a publick Incendiary, he persuades her Majesty's Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Factions and Parties, in stills groundless Jealousies, and foment destructive Divisions among them, and excites and stirs them up to Arms and Violence"; 'tis sufficient in short to say this:

What he advances against the Foundation of the present Establishment, and against the Administration, is as an Incendiary.

That he persuades Men to keep up Distinctions, and instils groundless Fears and Jealousies among them, is plain, from the Drift of all he says; from his Language of forsaking old Friends and Principles, betraying their Party, which he makes to be the great Crime of those in Places, and goes to shew the Folly of it, pag. 23.

And though he pretends, in his Answer, that he invites Schismatics into the Church, it is only on those Terms, that they comply with his Notions to a Tittle: He makes no Allowance for human Frailty, for Prejudice or Ignorance, and in some Instances expressly disallows 'em; and those who are so weak as to fancy the Church in any Particular not to be in the right, though in all others they would sincerely and constantly conform to it, even they must continue Schismatics still: If, with these mistaken Opinions, they communicate with the Church, they are False Brethren, and as such to be abhorr'd: And yet if they do not, they are not to be tolerated.

Nay, whoever has so much Compassion for such a Cause, as to think it might be tolerated, is a false Brother too, as defending Toleration, which is giving up one Point of the Discipline of the Church, and encouraging the Schism.

For, though he seems in Words to approve of an Indulgence to Consciences truly scrupulous, yet in Reality he approves none; since he admits not any one to have a Conscience truly scrupulous that differs from him, but all such are False Brethren, Villains, and to be stigmatiz'd with all the other Names of Reproach he is so liberal of.

As to Fears and Jealousies, those are naturally produc'd by these Representations of the Dangers the Church and Constitution are in; and as those Dangers are meerly imaginary, those Fears and Jealousies are groundless.

As to his inciting her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence, that he does it, is most manifest.

The spreading among the People such hideous Representations of an evil Government, such Outcries of the Church and true Religion being undermin'd, betray'd and expos'd by those in the Administration, naturally tend to Rebellion. And therefore at Common Law, as we find it express'd in our Law Books, to * bear the People in Hand (I give the very Words) that the King's Government was erroneous, heretical or unjust, whereby the Manner of the Government was arraign'd or impeach'd, was High Treason.

The Passion, Heat and Violence in this Sermon preach'd in publick, could be intended for nothing else but to raise the Passions of those that heard it.

The People are call'd upon to put on Resolution and Courage; they are assur'd the Cause at present requires the bravest Resolutions; he exhorts them to contend earnestly for the Faith; having elsewhere shewn against whom, against False Brethren, against the Enemies he had describ'd, such as have Places and Preferments, are Men of Characters and Stations; such as are Chief and at present prosper, and denounces Woe against the fearful Heart and faint Hands.

The Expression of standing by her Majesty with Lives and Fortunes, and of sacrificing them in her Service, being now become a familiar Phrase, for assisting her in War, those Expressions are affected.

In the Dedication of the Derby Sermon he extols those, who are for maintaining what he calls forsaken Truth, with their Lives and Fortunes.

And in the Sermon at St. Paul's, pag. 9, 10. the Readiness to sacrifice Lives and Estates in Vindication of the Church, is represented as so Noble a Resolution, that in Comparison to that, Obedience to her Precepts, that is, a good Life, is but as the one thing necessary in the Gospel, only an extraordinary pitch of Perfection, only as the selling all his Goods, and giving the Price to the Poor, was to an exact Observance of the whole Moral Law.

But in the Dedication of the St. Paul's Sermon he seems to avow this Design; he pretends not his Sermon to be Christianity, but owns it to be Politics, not preaching Peace, but sounding a Trumpet. For he states the Objection, that the Pulpit is not a Place for Politics, and that 'tis the Business of a Clergyman to preach Peace, and not to sound a Trumpet. What's his Answer? Does he deny the Objection to extend to himself? No, he admits it and justifies it by Pretence of a Divine Command, and treats the Maxim laid down in the Objection with Scorn, as contrary to the express Word of God.

In his Answer to this last Part of this Clause, he seems first to represent it as inconsistent with his Position of the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power on any Pretence whatsoever, and with his Professions of Loyalty to her Majesty; and then attempts to confute it (as his Expression is) by a Passage in the Derby Sermon.

As for the latter, I think it rather a Justification of the Charge; for the Passage asserts, That every Man has, by God and Nature, a Commission to ENGAGE the Enemies of the Constitution; that is, (as he has painted them) the Queen and her Ministry.

The other is founded on a Supposition that he is never inconsistent, a very civil Compliment to himself, but as it happens, very false.

But to consider this Part of the Answer a little more particularly. As he has here managed the Matter, I own there is in this Particular no Inconsistency. We say, he has stirred up her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence: He says, he has declar'd all Resistance unlawful; yes — all Resistance to the Supreme Power; but he has never declar'd Resistance to her Majesty unlawful. He maintains the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever to the Supreme Power, but no where says, that in the Supreme Power he includes her Majesty, or that it is illegal to resist her. The utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power upon any Pretence whatsoever, her Majesty's professed Enemies will come into, and labour for; meaning only to condemn the Resistance that was made against King James the Second, which brought about the Revolution, and any Resistance that shall be made against the Pretender, whenever he comes; and Dr. Sacheverell goes no further.

Those Enemies of her Majesty, have ever since the Revolution, made it their Business, to blacken it to raise Scruples in Peoples Minds about it, and to make the Administration odious: The same Methods are advanced by Dr. Sacheverell into the Pulpit; and if those Methods are to appear in the greatest Assemblies, on the most solemn Occasions; if the Revolution must be attack'd on a Day when her Majesty has appointed it to be Commemorated; if her Majesty's Reign is to be arraign'd in Publick, and an Appeal made to the Passions of the People; let it be attended with what Professions it will, it equally strikes at her Majesty and the Establishment; and the Commons could not but think themselves oblig'd, in Duty and Gratitude to her Majesty, and in Justice to the whole Nation, to call him that us'd 'em thus to a publick Account:

And let this Gentleman commend his own Loyalty, as much as he pleases, 'tis plain that in this Sermon he is doing the very same Work, and in the very same Method, with those that disown Allegiance to her Majesty.

My Lords, Permit me to observe a little his Management of this Text: Supposing the Doctor to be right as to his Doctrine, and that he believes himself to be so; and that he is sincere in his Professions of Loyalty to the Queen. For I am not now going to dispute or limit the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, which was the Business of those Gentlemen that spoke to the first Article.

By False Brethren in the Text of this Sermon were meant, those who pretended to be Christians, but really were not. Dr. Sacheverell seems so to understand it; and therefore to declare those to be False Brethren in the CHURCH, that pretend to be of the Communion of the Church of England, but are not; that live in its Communion, but own not its Doctrines and Authority. By like Analogy, False Brethren in the STATE are such, that perhaps swallow the Oaths to the Queen; or if they go not so far, yet take the Benefit of her Laws, her Courts, her Protection, yet deny her Allegiance, and are for another Prince. A just and well-managed Reproof of these had been a noble Topic for one that pretends all this Zeal for the Queen. But they are wholly pass'd by, they are not to be blam'd, there's no Danger from them either to Church or State. Who then, according to the Doctor, are False Brethren in the State? (He was hard put to it to substitute some others in their Place.) They must be only those who one Way or other oppose the Doctrine of Non-Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, whom he describes in several invidious Instances, and in all possible Terms of Reproach. This seems strange.

1. This being, as he states it, an Error in a Doctrine of the Church, the holding it is only one Branch, one Instance of False Brotherhood in the CHURCH; and therefore not so proper to stand for a distinct Head of False Brethren in the STATE.

2. The bare denying or not believing the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, supposing it true, does not denominate a Man a False Brother in the STATE.

Suppose then a Man own the Queen's Title, be satisfied with her Administration, in Love with her Reign, convinc'd that she has principally at Heart his Interest, and the true Interest of all her Subjects; believes that upon the Continuance and Quiet of her Government depends the Preservation of our Liberties, and those of all Europe, and accordingly obeys and serves her with Sincerity and Zeal, and thinks all Resistance to her utterly unlawful; is this Man a False Brother in State, a Rebel, a Traitor, because he thinks Resistance was lawful at the Revolution, and may be so whenever the same Breaches of the Constitution are repeated?

Is he a Rebel to THIS QUEEN, because there possibly may happen a Case, wherein he may resist another Prince, if that Prince should do what he's sure SHE never will?

At most, that Mistake only exposes such a Person more easily to be misled: He may be in more Danger of becoming a Rebel to a Prince he shall be dissatisfied with, but is not therefore a Rebel to a Queen he loves.

How then comes this single Instance of False Brotherhood in State to be insisted on, which at most shews, not that the Person is, but only that perhaps he may become a False Brother; and those Instances stances pass'd over, where Persons plainly are False Brethren in State?

Further, This Doctrine being, as the Doctor says, a fundamental Doctrine in State, urged with Warmth and Vehemence, one would expect some Inference to be drawn from it: One would expect that he, who had so great a Zeal as the Doctor professes for her Majesty, and had so triumphantly established absolute Non-Resistance, would have fallen in so far with the Business of the Day, and have made so much use of his Favourite Doctrine, as to dissuade from Rebellion; and when he had taken Notice of these false Steps in the Administration, that he should have persuaded the People to make proper Applications for Redress, but to be careful not to let the Faults of the Ministry cause 'em to forget their Duty to the Queen. But there's not the least Exhortation to that purpose.

All this seems strange, taking it for granted that the Doctor is sincerely zealous for the Queen.

Give me Leave therefore to make another Supposition: Suppose this Zeal is but pretended to the Queen, but really for another, and that he thinks the other his rightful Prince; your Lordships will find, all consistent, every Expression, and the whole Procedure, exactly just.

In Consequence of that concealed Sentiment, tho' he dare not directly commend those who own the Pretender, yet neither will he reprove them as False Brethren in the State; they being, according to his Opinion, the only Persons who perform their Duty in it. Therefore the true Notion of False Brotherhood must be dropt; and instead of it, they that hold Resistance lawful in Cases of Extremity, and particularly in that of the Revolution, are to be fallen upon; for they are really Rebels and Traitors in his Sense, because they directly overthrow all the Title which the Disaffected here would fancy for the Pretender.

As long as the Revolution stands un-impeach'd, that Person can have no Title, let his Pretence be as favourable as he pleases: If the Revolution stand, the Laws which are founded upon it stand too, and those Laws concerning the Right and Succession of the Crown, are absolutely binding; and therefore whatever Right he could wish People to believe him to have, all that Right, all that Pretence of Right is as effectually barr'd, as all the Right which those who stand in the Course of Descent before the Princess Sophia of Hanover would have had but for the Act of Settlement, will be bound, whenever GOD, for our Sins, shall take from us her Majesty, without Issue.

This Principle therefore is fundamental to the Pretender; and, taking the Matter thus, accounts for all that Rage against those that dispute this Doctrine, as extended to the Case of the Revolution, for his so often repeating this to be the Basis, the fundamental Principle of the Constitution.

This shews clearly, why neither in the Sermon, nor Defence, he has once maintain'd the Illegality of Resistance to her Majesty.

This shews, why this fundamental Principle is so totally forgot to be press'd by him upon the People; no Inference from it, that those Mismanagements ought not to make them forget their Duty to the Queen; not one Persuasive to Obedience to her; not one Admonition against the Consequence of False Brotherhood in the State, that it was apt to make People rebel; no cooling the People, with telling 'em that Prayers and Tears were the only Arms of the Church; that they ought to do their own Duty, submit wholly to the Queen, and those in Authority under her, and leave the rest to GOD. These were the natural Consequences of this Doctrine of Non-Resistance, so violently contended for, but not one of them pursu'd or mention'd.

And perhaps this made him chuse to describe the Case of our Church, p. 26. in the Words of the Prophet in the Lamentations, which are in ch. i. ver. 4, 5. (tho' not truly cited in his printed Sermons) The Ways of Sion mourn for a time, and her Gates are desolate, her Priests sigh, and she in Bitterness, because her Adversaries are chief, and her Enemies AT PRESENT prosper.

My Lords, That Book was wrote just after Nebuchadnezzar's taking Jerusalem; and the Condition of the Jews then, which is thought proper by him to give an Image of ours now, was this:

They were enslav'd, their King in a Foreign Country, stripp'd of his Crown, and the Prince then Reigning was an Oppressor, that had no other Title, but Possession and Force.

Thus has the Doctor, out of his tender Concern for her Majesty's Person and Government, thought fit to express his Sentiments.

THE last Part of this Charge is that of Wresting and Perverting divers Texts and Passages of Holy Scripture. This may not perhaps seem to proper for me to speak to, but being part of my Province, I shall apply to it without any Apology.

My Lords, As wicked and corrupt as Doctor Sacheverell would represent this Nation, he very well knew, that the Holy Scriptures are had in that just Veneration and Regard, that whatever is cited thence has a particular Influence upon the Minds of the People; whatever Story can be brought thence as a Parallel, whatever Expressions taken thence are made use of, to paint the Beauty, the Deformity, the Dangers of the Preacher's Subject, give a strong Impression, fire the Zeal of the People, alarm their Passions, and make 'em fancy they hear the Voice of GOD, when they hear His Words repeated.

This the Doctor knew, and your Lordships will see what use he makes of it.

When he speaks of the Perils of the Church, which her Majesty, your Lordships, and the Commons, could not see, the Scripture is to be search'd for a Story, that may be brought to match the Case, and to give an Opportunity, under other Names, to speak a bold Falshood concerning all these.

It happens, there is one remarkable Story in the Holy Scripture about a Mistake of Danger, but unfortunately it suits not the Case, as told there, however it gives a Handle, and he can make from it a Story to his Purpose.

Accordingly he says, pa. 21. "When Elisha the great Prophet of GOD was surrounded with an Host of Enemies that sought for his Life, his blind Servant beheld not the Peril his Master was in, 'till his Eyes were opened by a Miracle, and he found himself in the midst of Horses and Chariots of Fire.

This Story thus told is extremely happy for him; for hence the People are to understand him to be the inspired Prophet; and the Queen, Lords, and Commons, blind at least, tho' not his Servants.

But the Story in Holy Writ is directly contrary; and it was only the blind Servant fancied they were in Danger, when really they were not.

The Story is in 2 Kings, Chap. vi. and, as told there, is thus: The King of Syria, at War with Israel, being inform'd, that what he said in his Bed Chamber was told to the King of Israel by Elisha Elisba the Prophet, resolved to seize Elisba; and hearing he was at Dothan, Ver. 14. (I now give your Lordships the very Words) He sent thither Horses and Chariots, and a great Host, and they came by Night, and compass'd the City about. Ver. 15. And when the Servant of the Man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold an Host compass'd the City both with Horses and Chariots: And his Servant said unto him, Alas, my Master how shall we do? [This is the blind Servant, that the Doctor says, saw no Danger.] Ver. 16. And he answer'd, Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. Ver. 17. And Elisba pray'd, and said, Lord, I pray thee open his Eyes, that he may see. And the Lord open'd the Eyes of the young Man, and he saw; and behold the Mountain was full of Horses and Chariots of Fire. The Doctor's Exposition is, That this Heavenly Guard, these Horses and Chariots of Fire, which were there only to defend the Prophet, were to destroy him; and from them arises the Danger, which the Doctor fancies the miraculous Opening the Servant's Eyes disclosed to him.

I think I may give the Doctor his Choice, what this proceeded from, whether from his not knowing this Passage, but taking it upon Hearsay, or his Resolution knowingly to pervert it.

The next Passage is, pa. 26. the Words of St. Paul, Eph. vi. with which, after a Discourse where all the social and good-natur'd Virtues are taught in the highest Perfection; where he had recommended, Chap. iv. Ver. 2. Lowliness, Meekness, Long-suffering, forbearing one another in Love; endeavouring to keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace: Where he had commanded, Ver. 31. that all Bitterness, and Wrath, and Anger, and Clamour, and Evil speaking be put away, with all Malice: And Ver. 32. that those to whom he writes, should be tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's Sake had forgiven them: Ver. 27. That had forbidden giving place to the Devil, but not to any other. The Apostle concludes, that in this Spiritual Warfare, and that they might be able to withstand the Wiles of the Devil, they should put on the whole Armour of God; because they wrestled not against Flesh and Blood; but against Principalities, against Powers, against the Rulers of the Darkness of this World, against Spiritual Wickedness in High Places.

This Gentleman, after a Discourse full of Bitterness, Reviling, Wrath, Clamour and Evil speaking, forbearing no Man in Love, nor forgiving any that differs from him one Tittle; and having shewn other Devils incarnate, (page 23, 25.) the worst of Demons, other Powers, others in Places and Stations, against whom his Auditors were to contend earnestly; repeats those Words, not in the Spiritual Sense the Apostle used them, but (as the whole Subject and Drift of his Discourse shews) as an odious Description of the Government, in Scripture Words: And whether he meant the Armour in the Apostle's Spiritual Sense, any more than any of the other Words there, or whether he intended it a Literal Earthly Armour, which the Cause would make the Armour of God, I leave to your Lordships to determine. However, 'tis no Defence for him, what he says, That the Arms of Resistance to Princes, is no Part of the Spiritual Armour recommended by St. Paul; because he has plainly departed from St. Paul's Spiritual Meaning.

And that this is his Meaning, to paint here our present Circumstances in Scripture Language, is further plain from what follows; That the Church is bleeding of the Wounds which she has received in the House of her Friends; borrow'd from Zech. xiii. Ver. 6. That the Ways of Sion may mourn for a Time, and her Gates be desolate; though her Priests sigh, and she in Bitterness, because her Adversaries are Chief, and her Enemies AT PRESENT prosper. I have before observ'd, from what Circumstance of the Jews this Image is borrow'd; and your Lordships will take notice, what Changes in the Expressions he has made, to render them more Emphatical.

My Lords, There can be no greater Perverting of Scripture, than to make use of the Language of the Holy Ghost, to revile our Neighbours; to scandalize the Government, and to raise Wrath, Sedition, and Rebellion in the People.

The last I shall mention, is that in the Dedication of the St. Paul's Sermon; where proposing it as an Objection, that it is the Business of a Clergyman to preach Peace, and not to sound a Trumpet in Sion; he affirms that to be expressly contrary to the Command of God; and to prove that Command, cites these Words, Cry aloud, and spare not, which are in Isa. lviii. 1.

My Lords, This I apprehend to be not only Perverting, but that to Men of Understanding it will seem ridiculing Scripture. To infer, that because they were to speak loud, they were to sound a Trumpet, seems ridiculous.

Or if he had cited the rest of the Words, Cry aloud, and spare not; lift up thy Voice like a Trumpet, and shew my People their Transgression, and the House of Jacob their Sins; he had indeed found the Word Trumpet, but little to his Purpose: For because the Prophet was to imitate a Trumpet in the Loudness, that the People might hear; was he to imitate it too, as it is an Instrument of War, that they might prepare themselves for Battel? Because he was loudly to tell them their own Sins, that they might repent; was he likewise to trumpet to them the Faults of the Government, that they might take up Arms, and redress them by Rebellion?

If he find any other Place in the Old Testament to command the Priests to sound a Trumpet, I shall refer him to the 10th of Exodus, where he'll find the Priests were literally to sound the Silver Trumpets in the Army, in the Field; but he'll not find, they ever founded it from the Pulpit.

My Lords, I shall offer nothing further to your Lordships on this Head, though there is room for it.

But there are Two Things in the Answer to this Article, I cannot omit taking Notice of.

The first is in his Answer to the first Part of this Article, that charges him with suggesting, That her Majesty's Administration, in Church and State, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution; where he takes great Comfort, that in this Article he is charg'd not with Suggesting and Maintaining, but Suggesting only; and hopes that bare Suggestions, or Insinuations, shall not involve an English Subject in the Guilt and Punishment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors. I don't envy him his Comfort, nor shall labour to take it from him, tho' it seems strangely founded: For tho' it is expressly said, that he charges her Majesty with a General Male-Administration; tho' the Accusation be positive, that as a Publick Incendiary, he persuades the Subjects to keep up Parties, foment Divisions amongst them, and stirs them up to Arms and Violence, and perverts divers Texts of Scripture; notwithstanding all these posi-fitive Charges, yet the first Expression happening to be only, Suggest, and not Maintain, it seems he is very happy in it.

But, my Lords, this is an extraordinary Step; that let a Man cast never so many Scandals and Reproaches on the Government, tho' in never so publick a Manner, yet if it be done by way of Suggestion and Insinuation, and the Charges not expressly maintain'd and avow'd, there is no Crime in it, or not any high one. That is, in short, Sedition, and Exposing the Government, is lawful; only the Manner is to be taken care of. Don't do it directly and avowedly, for that would be dangerous; but do it by Suggestions that every body will understand, and which will have their full Effect, and all's safe: For those that come to judge you, are not to understand you, tho' every body else does.

My Lords, Here are two extraordinary Claims of Right before your Lordships, and of great Consequence, if you allow them; one, that the Clergy may found a Trumpet in Zion, in a Military Sense, and are not to be restrained to the preaching of Peace; the other, that every Englishman is at Liberty to aspersion the Government at Pleasure, by whatever Suggestions and Insinuations he pleases; and these made by a warm Advocate for Passive Obedience, the most peaceful and submissive Doctrine in the World.

My Lords, In the Cafe de Libellis Famosis, in the Fifth Report, there was a Prosecution for a Libel, not indeed set forth at large in the printed Book, (as was not fit) but thus far particularly taken notice of that it traduced and scandalized one Person dead, and him an Archbishop too, by Descriptions and Circumlocutions, and not in Express Terms; and no body ever doubted but it was Criminal. But tho' there should be a greater Strictness observed in respect of private Persons, yet when the Queen and Government are concern'd, when All lies at Stake, a Man ought to guard himself, and his Expressions, not to touch in the least there: And every Man that's truly Loyal, and desires the Peace of his Country, will do it. And knavish Designers against the Publick Peace, are not to be suffer'd to go on in overthrowing it, because they have contriv'd crafty Ways of doing it.

I mention this only to oppose the present Claim; though in our Cafe, the Reflections are plain and full.

The other is his Lamentation at the Close, which I cannot but take notice of, as an insolent Reflection on the Honour and Justice of the House of Commons. "Hard is the Lot of the Ministers of the Gospel, if when they cite the Word of God in their general Exhortations to Piety and Virtue, or in the Reproofs of Mens Transgressions, or when they are lamenting the Difficulties and Conflicts, with which the Church of Christ, while Militant here on Earth, must always struggle, the several Texts and Passages by them cited shall be said to have been by them meant of particular Persons and Things, and shall be consider'd in the most Criminal Sense, and be made (by such Construction) one Ground of an Impeachment for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

My Lords, This was put into the Answer, not by way of Defence, but to make that Use which has been made of it, to print it before it came to be consider'd, and lay hold of that as an Handle, as has been done, to say Dr. Sacheverell has been prosecuted only for doing his Duty as a Clergyman, which is a scandalous Reflection.

VOL. V.

Is the Story of Elisba, as told by him, an Honest Citation of a Passage of Scripture?

Are Enemies that are Chief, and the Adversaries that at present Prosper, no particular Persons now in Being; though to the Scripture Expression he has added the Words, At present, for fear the Application should not be close enough.

Is this Sermon an Exhortation to Piety and Virtue? Or is it not manifestly a Trumpet to Rebellion? Is it a shewing the Audience their own Faults, that they may cure them, and amend their Lives? Or is it not plainly the Exposing the Faults of others, the Faults of their Governors, that they may base the Persons?

Even the Doctrine of Passive Obedience, is it here so warmly contended for, that People may be dutiful and submissive; or that they may be enraged against those that deny it? In short, Is there one Christian Virtue taught in it? Except your Lordships will honour with that Name the sticking, not to the Church and Christianity, but (according to the Doctor's own Expression in another Place) to a Party; and Courage, not only a Passive, (which he no where recommends) but an Active against the Government, to which the whole Discourse incites.

My Lords, The Commons have the greatest and justest Veneration for the Clergy of the Church of England, who are Glorious thro' the whole Christian World for their Preaching and Writing, for their Steadiness to the Protestant Religion, when it was in the utmost Danger. They look upon the Order as a Body of Men, that are the Great Instruments, thro' whose Assistance, the Divine Providence conveys inestimable Advantages to us. They look upon the Church Establish'd here, as the best and surest Bulwark against Popery; and that therefore all Respect and Encouragement is due to the Clergy: And it is with Regret and Trouble, that they find themselves oblig'd to bring before your Lordships in this manner one of that Order.

But when we consider Dr. Sacheverell, stripping himself of all the becoming Qualities proper for his Order, nay, of all that peaceful and charitable Temper, which the Christian Religion requires of all its Professors, deserting the Example of our Lord and Master, and of his Holy Apostles, and with Rancour and Uncharitableness branding all that differ from him, (tho' thro' Ignorance) with the Titles of Hypocrites, Rebels, Traitors, Devils; reviling them, exposing them, conducting them to Hell, and leaving them there; treating every Man that falls in his way, worse than Michael the Archangel used the Devil; coming himself more near the Character in St. Jude, (Part of which he would apply to others) despising Dominion, speaking evil of Dignities; like raging Waves of the Sea foaming out his own Shame; forgetting (when his Text and his Doctrine led to it) to recommend the Peace of his Country, in a Time when all Europe is in War, and nothing can preserve us from falling into the Hands of the Grand Enemy and Oppressor, but our Unanimity under her Majesty: Then labouring to sap the Establishment, and railing and declaiming against the Government; crying To Arms, and blowing a Trumpet in Zion, to engage his Country in Seditions and Tumults, and overthrow the Best Constitution, and betray the Best Queen that ever made a People happy; and this with Scripture in his Mouth!

The Commons look'd upon him by this Behaviour, to have sever'd himself from all the rest of the Clergy, and thought it their Duty to bring to Justice such a Criminal; and are in no Fear of being thought Discouragers of those who preach Virtue and Piety, because they, in the Supreme Court of Justice, prosecute him that preaches Sedition and Rebellion; or to have any Design to lessen the Respect and Honour that's due to the Clergy, by bringing him to Punishment that Disgraces the Order.

Justice

Mr. Secretary Boyle. MY Lords, I am commanded by the House of Commons to have a Share in Maintaining the Articles of Impeachment against Doctor Sacheverell; and it falls to my Lot to speak to this Fourth Article, which contains no less a Charge than Endeavouring to Excite and Stir up her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence.

The Ground of this Accusation, is the Dedication of a Sermon preach'd at Derby at the last Assizes; and another Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's the Fifth of November last, a Day set apart to commemorate the Preservation of the King and Parliament from the Gunpowder-Treason; and to give Thanks to Almighty God for the Deliverance wrought by his late Majesty, in rescuing these Kingdoms from Popery and Arbitrary Power.

The whole Nation doth now enjoy the Benefit of that happy Revolution, and all the good Subjects of her Majesty are thankful for it. One would have thought, that on such a Day, that Matter should not have been so handled as only to be expos'd; and I am persuaded, that whoever goes about to asperse and vilify the late Revolution, would rejoice to see another.

I shall not trespass upon your Lordships Patience so far as to repeat the many Passages in the Sermon that make good our Accusation, they having been so fully laid before your Lordships already by a Gentleman that spoke before: And indeed there is the less Reason to defend into Particulars, since the whole Scope and Design of the Sermon is to instill groundless Jealousies into the Minds of People, and to cast the most virulent Reflections imaginable upon her Majesty's Administration.

One might suppose, from the Doctor's Discourse, that the Church of England was now suffering under the most severe Persecution; that the Laws were no longer in Force; and that the whole Government was unhinged. Aspersions more violent could not be used, if we lived in the Reign of the worst of Heathen Emperors, while we are Partakers of so many Blessings under the Government of the best of Queens.

The Prisoner at the Bar lays some Strefs upon the Word Suggest, as expressed in the Fourth Article, which has already receiv'd an Answer; and would insinuate that there are no plain Words in the Sermon to support the Charge. But if that Objection were true, which we are far from admitting, and the Consequences drawn from it were allowed, I must say, hard would be the Case of the Government, if Men might make the most odious Suggestions against it, and cast Reflections with Impunity, under the Shelter of some doubtful Expressions, and equivocal Sentences, at the same time that the Sense and Malice of the Reflections are plain to be understood, and can hardly be mistaken.

He doth indeed affect in his Answer, and in one Part of his Sermon, to profess great Duty to her Majesty; but let those Expressions be compared with the Calumnies that are heaped upon her Administration, and I conceive they will not mitigate his Crime, and will avail him no more than the Pretence that he makes to be for Liberty of Conscience, when he condemns the Toleration. I believe these Excuses will equally weigh with your Lordships, and his Sincerity in both will equally appear.

My Lords, It is no new Thing among those who design to stir up Sedition, to bestow great Encumbrances on the Person of the Prince; it has been a common Practice, and the same Method was pursued in the late unhappy Times. The Incendiaries of those Days pretended that the Protestant Religion was in Danger under that Government, as the Enemies of our Constitution cry the Church is in Danger under this.

But, my Lords, every thing is in Danger from such seditious Discourses. What a Scene of Distraction and Wickedness is here display'd to the Understandings of the People, to excite and inflame them to Sedition and Rebellion? Who can sit still, if they are persuaded that the Altars and Sacraments of our Church are prostituted to Hypocrites, Deists, Socinians and Atheists; and this done with Impunity, and without Discouragement? What can be more provoking to all good Christians and good Subjects, than to be told that People are suffer'd to combine into Bodies and Seminaries, wherein Atheism, Deism, Tritheism, Socinianism, with all the Hellish Principles of Fanaticism, Regicide, and Anarchy, are openly professed and taught.

No Man can think he is long to enjoy his Religion, Liberties or Property, if he can be made to believe that the Foundations of the Church are undermin'd, and the Government endanger'd, by filling it with its profess'd Enemies. What is the Meaning of all this, but only to make out, that her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution? And what must be the Consequence of such an Opinion instill'd into the Minds of the People, but black and melancholy Thoughts, seditious Practices, and at last open Force and Violence?

The Priests must cry aloud and spare not, they must blow the Trumpet in Sion; and we are told there are those that have Lives and Fortunes to maintain such Truths as Doctor Sacheverell has laid down. What those Truths are, may be seen thro' the whole Course of the Sermon; they are such, my Lords, as we apprehend do not at all tend to the strengthening the present Government, tho' they may be serviceable towards setting up another.

This is not the Spirit of the Gospel, nor agreeable to the Principles of the Church of England; and we submit it to your Lordships Judgment, whether this Sermon is not Seditious, and whether the Prisoner at the Bar is not guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. MY Lords, I am commanded by the Commons of Great Britain to bear my Part in the Management of the Impeachment against Doctor Henry Sacheverell, and particularly on this Article. My Lords, I believe, after what you have heard already, you will think there is little Need for me to say any thing on this Head; yet I shall take the Liberty to mention a few Particulars.

I cannot but take Notice, that in a Sermon preach'd on a Day appointed to commemorate the Blessings we enjoy by the late happy Revolution, there is not one particular Clause to shew forth those Blessings, or the Mischiefs that were then likely to come upon us. There is a little, indeed, upon the Gunpowder-Treason; but upon the Revolution there is nothing, nor doth he take Notice of the Dangers we were in before it, in order to raise the the Devotion of the People, and their Thanks to God for their Deliverance. But all the Tenor of his Discourse is to show the Male-Administration of the Government, and the Dangers that have been coming upon the Church ever since the Revolution; so that it is plain, that he had no Thoughts of the Blessings of that Deliverance, nor any Dislike to the Conduct of those Times.

My Lords, This Sermon was preach'd in a Place well chosen to attempt Mischief in. He well knew that if he could raise an evil Spirit in this great City, it would do more Mischief than in another Place where he had often attempted it: But, God be thanked, he was disappointed; and he own'd himself in another Place, that he did not expect the Thanks of the Court of Aldermen for it.

I shall take Notice of his Dedication, where he carries on the same Design, and owns it on second Thoughts. He's not only warm in preaching the Sermon; but in his Dedication he shows with what Spirit he compos'd it: He says, That if honest Gentlemen will sit still, and give up their Cause for want of Courage, or a just Sense of the dangerous Attempts of our Enemies, without the Spirit of Prophecy we may foretel what will become of our Constitution, when it is so vigorously attack'd from without, and so lazily defended from within.

My Lords, I shall not explain the Meaning of those Words, Sitting still, and Want of Courage; but I cannot but take Notice of these Words, The vigorous Attack from without, and the lazy Defence from within. I would desire to know who the Doctor takes to be the Defender of the Faith; and who under that Defender is to protect the Church? It must necessarily be meant as a Reflection on her Majesty, and upon those that under her Authority are to take Care of the Church. The next Passage is a plain Confession of his seditious Intentions. He tells us his Business was not to preach Peace, but to sound the Trumpet. If a Minister will declare it, not to be his Duty to preach Peace, your Lordships will easily judge what his Intentions were.

I know it is the Business of those that are Profelytes to this Gentleman, to give out that we design to narrow our Obedience to her Majesty. But, my Lords, we are far from it; and own the greatest Duty and Submission to our Sovereign: But we cannot bear, that a Reflection should be cast upon the Resistance that was us'd at the Revolution; and we hope your Lordships will never admit a Question to be rais'd of the Legality of it.

My Lords, The Acts of Settlement of the Crown depend upon that Legality: If that be illegal, the others in Consequence are void; and tho' her Majesty has an hereditary Right to the Crown, yet I take those Acts to be her great Security; and I can make no Question, but that if the Foundations of those Acts were shaken, the Doctor would soon find another hereditary Right to resort to.

My Lords, The Toleration is certainly grounded upon the best Principles, upon a Principle of Religion and a Principle of Policy. I think every Body will allow, that nothing can establish Peace in a Kingdom so well, as the granting Ease and Quiet to Mens Consciences. If they pay due Submission to the Government, they ought not to be persecuted for their Religion: It is for her Majesty's Interest and Honour. For how can her Majesty be the Head of the Protestant Interest Abroad, if Protestants are not protected at Home?

It was the Observation of the Lord Clarendon, in his History, that some eminent Clergymen press'd King Charles the First to make Distinctions among

Vol. V.

Persons; and that by their Advice, his Ambassador in France was order'd not to go to the Hugonot Churches there, as he us'd to do. He lays it as an Imputation on those that gave the Advice; and makes this Remark, That it was with a Design of an Union with the Church of Rome; which prov'd of very ill Consequence to his Affairs at that Time.

My Lords, We take it, that it is contrary to the Duty of any private Man to find Fault with a Law in Being, or to declaim against the Reasonableness of the same; it is raising in the People an ill Opinion of the Lawgivers, and the Administration.

My Lords, There are some People, and I wish their Numbers do not increase, who will not allow the Church to be out of Danger, whilst the Civil Magistrate has the Government of the Church. These appear publicly; and in Print; they cancel the Queen's Supremacy, deny the Authority of the Laws, and erect a Church independent on the Civil Government. Of this Church I take the Doctor to be, and very properly for his Purpose; for here he may thunder out his Bulls and Anathema's without Controul: Here is a Field for him to open his Commission in, where he may sound his Trumpet, and not preach Peace.

But, my Lords, the Commons can never admit the Church, as established by Law, to be in any Danger during her Majesty's Administration; it being guarded by her Majesty's Piety and Care of it; by the Reverend Bishops, who are so diligent and watchful in their Functions; and which will always have the utmost Assistance of the Commons and your Lordships, to support and maintain. As for their independent Church, I hope it will ever be in Danger; and cannot but think that wholesome Severities were very proper to be apply'd to the Broachers of such seditious Doctrines; they are Popish Principles, and if they should obtain here, would certainly bring in Popery along with them.

My Lords, I cannot conclude, without taking Notice of a very unjust Reflection made upon the Commons in the Doctor's Answer, wherein he charges them with designing to restrain the Ministers of the Gospel from doing their Duty, in recommending Piety and Virtue to their Auditors. These are Doctrines so proper to come from the Pulpit, that those that recommend them, will always meet with the Countenance and Encouragement of the House of Commons. But when a Clergyman acts contrary to his Function, and instead of reproving Vice and Immorality, takes upon him to reproach the Government; when instead of preaching Peace, and Charity, and other moral Virtues, he takes upon him to raise Jealousies, foment Divisions, and stir up Sedition, 'tis high Time for the Justice of the Nation to put a Stop to it: As such a Person, we charge Dr. Sacheverell, and think we have made good our Charge, and cannot doubt your Lordships Justice upon the Offender.

And then the LORDS adjourned to their House above.

Thursday, March 2. The Fourth Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

4 X 2

Our

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly Charge and Command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed in your Evidence.

Mr. Lechmere. MY Lords, Your Lordships adjourned Yesterday, when the Commons were proceeding on their fourth Article, a Share of which Service was appointed to me: The Proofs, we insist on, in Maintenance of this Part of our Charge, have been laid before you with great Exactness; and all the Enforcements they can well receive, have been already offer'd to you, by those Gentlemen, that have gone before me; so that I find myself acquitted from giving your Lordships much Trouble upon it.

The Charges contain'd in the precedent Articles, are particular and distinct; of so high a Nature in themselves, and of such eminent Consequence to her Majesty and her Government, that we have held ourselves obliged, to treat each of them, with all imaginable Clearness and Solemnity; and this, my Lords, from that true Zeal and necessary Concern, with which the Commons, upon this great Occasion, are so justly inspir'd, for the Honour of her Majesty, and the Prosperity of her Kingdoms.

The Subject of this Article is laid down in general Positions, some of which are the Result and Consequence of the former Articles; and this will make it necessary to remind your Lordships of the Passages produced in Support of them: The Application of them, to the several Branches of this Charge, is easy and obvious: The further Passages, that were Yesterday pointed out to you, are many in number, and the Assertions positive, scarce liable to any Constructions more innocent in themselves, or more favourable for the Prisoner, than what hath been put upon them: But tho' the more flagrant Parts of the Prisoner's Discourses have been distinguish'd to you, your Lordships can't fail of discerning that implacable Enmity that runs through the Whole: How little will your Lordships find in it of the Spirit of the Gospel, of the Temper of a Christian, or a good Subject, much less of a Messenger of Peace? No, my Lords, when the Heart is poisoned, the Corruption will be diffus'd throughout; when Principles are delivered from the Pulpit, that strike at the Root of the present Government, and our future Establishment, and are taught as fundamental Rules both of Law and Conscience; what Kind of Proofs, what Exhortations are to be expected from such a Preacher? Surely, such only, as you have heard from this Man, such only, as may create universal Dissatisfaction, will disquiet the Minds, and tend to pervert the Obedience of the Subjects; such only, as shall be most likely to cherish and cultivate those Seeds of Sedition, which, when sufficiently propagated, and brought up to their full Growth, can terminate in nothing less than a total Destruction.

My Lords,

I am now to acquaint you, That the Commons have gone through their Charge, wherein they have been heard by you with great Candour and Patience: And that imperfect View, which was the best I was able to give you, in opening the Charge, has been amply supply'd by the great Sufficiency of what has follow'd: And from thence, I think, I have good Grounds to say to your Lordships, that this Impeachment of the Commons in every Part of it, is substantially and effectually maintain'd.

And now, my Lords, craving Leave of the Doctor to borrow a Phrase which stands at the Head of the last Paragraph of his Sermon, What is the Result of this Proceeding hitherto? In opening the Charge, we consider'd him in the Condition of a Person accus'd; but the Proofs having been produc'd, and the Evidence being unquestionable, even from his own Mouth, and by the Endeavours of other Gentlemen, to whose Provinces the several Tasks have fallen, the false Colours of his Discourse being taken off, and his Scheme reduced to its true Consistency, give me Leave to represent him to your Lordships in a true Light, and in his proper Colours.

Your Lordships now see this Gentleman, under the Reign of the greatest and best of Princes, that ever wore a Crown, whose Title to the Throne stands upon a more solid and indisputable Foundation than that of any Prince upon Earth, guarded and defended by the best Laws in the World, and the intire Affection of all her true Subjects, and which none can draw in question with any other Design than to weaken its Support:

You see him, under an Establishment and Constitution, excellently contrived and adapted to answer all the good Ends of Government, and which has withstood the open Assaults of arbitrary Princes, and the more crafty Attempts of Papal Encroachments; and which, since the true Religion was established among us, has been preserved in despite of the Dangerous Endeavours of Papists, by dividing Protestants, to make Way for its Destruction: A Constitution, which happily recovered itself at the Restoration, from the Confusions and Disorders which the horrid and detestable Proceedings of Faction and Usurpation had thrown it into, and which after many Convulsions and Struggles, was providentially saved at the late happy Revolution; and by the many good Laws pass'd since that Time, stands now upon a firmer Foundation: Together with the most comfortable Prospect of Security to all Posterity, by the Settlement of the Crown in the Protestant Line.

Your Lordships have found this Person, at a Time when the Church of England as by Law establish'd, is in perfect Prosperity and Safety at Home, and in higher Reputation Abroad, than in any Age that has gone before it; at a Time when the Nation enjoys Peace and Tranquility, and all the good Effects of a prudent and successful Administration, demonstrated by the Harmony and unanimous Endeavours of all her Majesty's true Subjects to support it;

In the most solemn and publick Manner, leveling the most virulent Discourse against her Majesty's Title to the Crown, and against our present Establishment, and calculated to favour the Pretension of another.

Your Lordships find in it the same Principles reviv'd and avow'd in the same dangerous Extent by him, as in a late Reign by the profess'd Instruments of Popery and Arbitrary Power, and apply'd in Condemnation of the glorious Work of the late happy Revolution, which delivered us from them.

Your

Your Lordships have found him arraigning the Honour of her Majesty and her Parliament, aspersing her Administration both in Church and State, and with all imaginable Ardour and Vehemence stirring up Sedition, and exhorting to Rebellion; and that in the Name of Almighty God, as a Person commissioned from Heaven to that End, and in the most profane and prostitute Manner abusing and wresting Scriptures to those impious Purposes.

'Tis on those Grounds, that the Commons have charged the Crimes to have been committed by him with an Intent to undermine her Majesty's Government, and to stir up Arms and Violence: And do your Lordships want further Evidence of this? Let us remind you of the Rebellion that has been rais'd, and that High Treason that was committed, the last Night, by those Persons who abet the Prisoner!

I can't aggravate the Offence; your Lordships will duly consider the Height and Quality of it, you will think of a Satisfaction suitable to that, and to the just Expectation of the Commons.

My Lords,

The Nature and Length of this Proceeding having occasion'd many Interruptions, we are yet assur'd, that no Misconstruction will be permitted by your Lordships, of what may have fallen from any of us. We likewise take Notice to your Lordships, that the Commons have very readily acquiesced in your Appointment of Counsel to assist the Prisoner. Your Lordships informed us in the Beginning of the Cause, that you did this in great Benignity to him, in assigning him those Counsel which he himself had ask'd, and doubtless such as are according to his own Heart's Desire: And the Commons are assured, that those Gentlemen will understand that Regard which is due to the Nature of this Cause, and to the Dignity of a Proceeding wherein the Commons of Great Britain appear as Prosecutors.

The Commons conceive, they have Reason to take great Satisfaction from this Proceeding, whereby they have the Opportunity in the most solemn Manner, before the most August Judicature in the World, to assert the Freedom and Excellency of our Government, and the Justice of the present Establishment: This single Consideration shews your Lordships of what Malignity the Prisoner is capable, who has thus set himself to disorder and destroy so happy and so beautiful a Constitution.

We desire to put your Lordships in Mind of those Felicities, which in our Opinions, accompany this Prosecution; when we see so many of your Lordships the Judges of this great Cause, who had so great a Share in that Deliverance which we are now called upon to vindicate; so many others of your Lordships, the Sons of those Fathers, who joined in it; and who have the same Blood still running in your Lordships Veins. And when we consider that firm and steady Zeal which every one of your Lordships have shewn in Support of the present Settlement, what Doubt can we entertain of your most impartial Justice?

We further observe it, as the great Security of our Impeachment, That no Endeavours can prevail to prevent your Judgment upon it, nor any Means succeed to defeat its Effects.

And on t'other Hand, we have before our Eyes the many good Consequences, which that Part which the Commons have taken on themselves, will certainly produce; that Strength and Vigour

'twill add to the great Affairs of the Kingdom, and of all Europe, at this critical Juncture, when the World shall see that the Commons of Great Britain, who have been so unanimous in Defence and Support of the common Cause of Peace and Liberty Abroad, are thus zealous to find out and extirpate that malignant Humour, which alone can endanger it at Home; that whilst the common Oppressor feels the Effects of her Majesty's Arms, the intestine Enemies of the Nation, and of her Government, (in the Instance of the prisoner) may see and consider the Force and Weight of the highest Repentment of the Commons.

Those good Effects will receive yet greater Enforcements from your Lordships Judgment; which, when it becomes publick, will be an effectual Confutation, or an unanswerable Treatise against the pestilent Doctrines advanc'd by the Prisoner.

The Firmness of your Proceedings will give the same Steadiness and Vigour to all other Parts of the Administration, which will henceforward strive to imitate your Lordships in so great an Example; and 'twill strike due Terror on those Minds, in which the same destructive Errors have taken Root.

And, my Lords, What Comfort and Peace must it bring to all her Majesty's faithful Subjects, to see her Majesty's undoubted Title, the Wisdom of her Administration, and the Protestant Succession, so effectually supported by your Lordships Judgment?

My Lords, We have thought it necessary, in Discharge of the great Trust reposed in us by the Commons, to go through the whole Charge together, that your Lordships might have it intire. I am now only to add, That they do reserve to themselves the Liberty of replying to what shall be offered on behalf of the Prisoner, and of every other legal Advantage that shall arise to them in the Progress of their Impeachment.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Have you gone through the Charge?

Mr. Lechmere. My Lords, we have.

Lord Chancellor. Then you that are appointed Counsel for Doctor Sacheverell, may proceed to his Defence.

Sir Simon Harcourt. My Lords, There having been already three whole Days spent by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons in Maintenance of their Charge; and this Day being so far spent, I am bound in Duty humbly to represent to your Lordships, that it will be impossible for us to go through the very first Article, so as to finish in any reasonable Time. My Lords, We humbly expect your Lordships Commands.

Lords. Go on, go on.

Sir Simon Harcourt. My Lords, We must receive your Lordships Commands. We think it of great Importance to go through the first Article at once, if your Lordships please to give us Leave.

Then the LORDS adjourned to their House above.

Friday, March 3. The Fifth Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-hall, and being seated in the Manner before-mention'd, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Our

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly charge and command all Manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, you that are Counsel for the Prisoner, may proceed to his Defence.

Sir Simon Harcourt. MAY it please your Lordships, I am Counsel for Doctor Sacheverell, who stands impeached in the Name of all the Commons of Great Britain of High Crimes and Misdemeanors. The Crimes supposed to have been committed by him are contain'd in four Articles. I beg leave to postpone the three last, without mentioning any Thing of them, 'till we have all concluded what we have to offer and lay before your Lordships, as to the several Charges contain'd in the first; and endeavour'd to satisfy your Lordships, That notwithstanding what has been objected by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons against the Doctor, in Maintenance of that Article, he is an innocent Man. The first Article contains three distinct Charges; we shall proceed on them as they lie in Order. The first of them is, "That he suggests and maintains, that the necessary Means used to bring about the late happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable". Your Lordships have been inform'd, that by this Expression of, The necessary Means, mention'd in the first Article, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons intend his late Majesty's glorious Enterprize for delivering this Kingdom from Popery and arbitrary Power, and the Subjects of this Realm well affected to their Country, joining with, and assisting him in that Enterprize. In a shorter Description, it has been explain'd, that these necessary Means were the Subjects Resistance to their unfortunate Prince then upon the Throne. Of this Resistance the Doctor has made no Mention in his Sermon. He has, indeed, affirm'd the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever to the Supreme Power; but it can't be pretended, there was any such Resistance used at the Revolution. The Supreme Power in this Kingdom is the Legislative Power; and the Revolution took Effect by the Lords and Commons concurring and assisting in it. Whatever therefore the Doctor has asserted of the utter Illegality of Resistance, his Assertion being applied to the Supreme Power, can't relate to any Resistance used at the Revolution; and consequently can't be an Affirmance, that such Resistance, or such necessary Means, were odious and unjustifiable. One of the learned Gentlemen, who spoke the third Day of this Trial, in Maintenance of the last Article, concur'd with me in this; and objected it to the Doctor, That he had guarded himself, by confining his Assertion to the Supreme Power; and that he had not averr'd the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Queen: But had he in express Terms affirm'd the Unlawfulness of such Resistance, yet by the same Arguments which have been used, the Doctor would have been told, he had been preaching a slavish Doctrine. My Lords, another Gentleman of the House of Commons (I think there were but two of them who took Notice of this Expression of the Doctor's of the Supreme Power) observ'd, that the Doctor had asserted the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power on any Pretence whatsoever; which Power he admitted was the Legislative; and declared, if the Doctor had really meant that Power, he should not have differ'd from him; and without doubt, your Lordships and all Persons will concur with him in this, that 'tis utterly unlawful to resist the Supreme Power. But that Gentleman being satisfy'd, that tho' the Doctor expressly mention'd the Supreme Power, which is the Legislative, yet he certainly intended the Supreme executive Power, concluded he was guilty of this Charge in the first Article; and mention'd it as an Instance of the great Mercy and Lenity of the House of Commons, that they had not proceeded against him for High Treason, as a Parson in one of the late Reigns was prosecuted for Words which he thought less offensive and dangerous than this Assertion preached by Dr. Sacheverell. And yet that Gentleman was pleas'd to say, That had a Dissenter, whose Affection to the Government was unsuspected, express'd himself as the Doctor did, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons would not have thought fit to have prosecuted him. That Case which was alluded to, I take to be the Case of Mr. Roswell, a Nonconformist Minister. He was indicted in the 36 Car. II. for Words spoke by him in a Sermon preach'd at a Meeting-house. 'Twas a Prosecution carried on through the Violence of those Times, and generally detested. He was convicted; but on cooler Thoughts, and Consideration of the Uncertainty in his Expressions, that they could not amount to such a Crime as he stood charged with, Judgment was arrested, and Mr. Roswell was discharg'd. Another learned Gentleman who open'd the Charge, was of Opinion, that the Doctor, in his Assertion of the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, does really neither mean the Legislative nor executive Power, but that he had the Pretender in his View. This is diving into the Secrets of his Heart, and searching into his Thoughts, which God only knows. This was urg'd, to avoid the strange Inconsistency, in concluding, that the Doctor was endeavouring to undermine the Government, by preaching up the utter Illegality of resisting it.

My Lords, If there be a double Sense, in either of which those Words are equally capable of being understood; if in one Sense the Doctor's Assertion be undeniably clear, but in the other some Doubt might arise, whether his Words be criminal or not, the Law of England is more merciful than to make any Man a Criminal, by construing his Words against the natural Import of them, in the worst Sense. This is the great Justice and Clemency of our Law, in every Man's Case. But some Persons are intitled to have a more favourable Construction put on all their Words and Actions, than others are; such as Persons acting in the Execution of their Offices, in Obedience to Authority, or by a Commission from the Crown; such Persons are look'd upon as under the immediate Protection and Care of the Law: How much more reasonable is it, that Ministers of the Gospel, who have their Commission from God, and speak in the Name of God, should have the most candid Interpretation made of whatever they say? This, I am persuaded, was one of the chiefest Reasons which in the Case of Mr. Roswell allay'd the Rage of that Reign; and at that Time obtained Mercy for him, though a Nonconformist Minister under a Conviction of High Treason. 'Tis a hard Fate attends this unhappy Gentleman, if he must inevitably lie under the Imputation of being thought an Enemy to the Revolution, and to our present happy Establishment on that Foundation. What

What Evidence will your Lordships expect he should produce to clear himself? He has shown his Submission to the Revolution, from the first Moment his Years made him capable of doing so. He has given all the publick Testimonies of his Fidelity and Affection to the last Reign, as well as the present, which the Government has at any Time requir'd from the most suspected Persons. He has taken the Oath of Allegiance, signed the Association, and took the Abjuration. 'Tis a miserable Case any Man is in, if after he has taken the Abjuration, the utmost which is requir'd, he shall still be told, he hath indeed abjur'd the Pretender, but hath not yet forgot him. If neither the Inoffensiveness of the Doctor's Behaviour, neither his Words, nor Oaths can satisfy; if after all these Demonstrations the Doctor has given of his Fidelity, he is still liable to be censured, what Satisfaction is it possible for him to give?

My Lords, If the Manner of this solemn Prosecution has not alter'd the Nature of Things, I hope I may insist, without putting in a Claim of Right in Behalf of all the factious and seditious People in the Kingdom to revile the Government at Pleasure, That by the happy Constitution under which we live, a Subject of England is not to be made criminal by a labour'd Construction of doubtful Words; or when that can't serve, by departing from his Words, and resorting to his Meaning. Too many Instances there were of this Nature before the late happy Revolution; but that put an End to such arbitrary Constructions.

I might trouble your Lordships on this Head with Multitudes of Authorities; but I shall mention only one: 'Tis an Authority of your Lordships, upon a Writ of Error, immediately after the Revolution; Sir Samuel Barnardiston's Case; and I beg Leave to refer to your Lordships Journal, May 14, 1689. 'Twas that Gentleman's Misfortune to be called in Question in the Reign of King Charles the Second (Hill. Term 1683.) for writing some Letters supposed to be seditious, and highly reflecting on the Government, and the publick Justice of the Nation at that Time. Upon his Trial he was represented as a seditious Man, and one of a turbulent Spirit; and being so painted by the Chief Justice who try'd him, tho' his Actions were inoffensive; notwithstanding his Innocence, a Verdict was obtain'd against him; and when he came to receive Judgment, not being look'd upon as an inconsiderable Man, nor as a Tool of his Party, but as one of the Heads of it, a Fine of ten thousand Pounds was set on him. I beg Leave to lay before your Lordships what you did in that Case. Your Lordships reversed that Judgment; and as a glorious Instance of your Justice, not contenting yourselves with the Right you had done in the Case then before you, at the same Time provided, as far as was possible, that no innocent Person, in After-Ages, might suffer Wrong. Your Lordships therefore, in an extraordinary Manner, order'd the Reasons of your Judgment to be entered in your Journal, and they are enter'd in the following Words: "First, The Information in this Case being grounded upon Letters, which in themselves were not criminal, but made so by Innuendo's, your Lordships declared, that Innuendo's, or suppos'd, or forc'd Constructions, ought not to be allow'd; for all Accusations should be plain, and the Crimes ascertained". My Lords, I hope it's unnecessary to my present Purpose, to read to you the second Reason; but as it was another Instance of your Lordships Justice, which ought never to be forgot, I shall take the Liberty of doing it: It relates to the Fine of ten thousand Pounds. Tho' Sir Samuel Barnardiston was a Gentleman of a very considerable Estate, your Lordships declared, "Secondly, That this Fine of ten thousand Pounds is exorbitant, and excessive, and not warranted by legal Precedent in former Ages; for all Fines ought to be with a Salvo contentamento suo, and not to the Party's Ruin". These were your Lordships Declarations in that Case. If there be any Uncertainty or Doubt in the Doctor's Expressions, your Lordships, I hope, will put the most favourable Construction on them. What I have hitherto offer'd is, with Relation to these Words, The Supreme Power; but that which I take to be the main Objection in this Case, is, that the Doctor's Assertion of the Illegality of Resistance must be necessarily understood with Reference to the executive Power. And if it be utterly illegal, in any Case, upon any Pretence whatsoever, then 'twas unlawful at the Revolution; and from thence the Consequence is drawn, That the Doctor is guilty of this first Charge, of maintaining, That the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable. This I take to be the Force of the Objection.

My Lords, I admit the Doctor has in general Terms asserted this Proposition of the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power on any Pretence whatsoever; and yet I am not altogether without Hopes, but that I shall be able to satisfy even the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, whether that Expression be understood of the Legislative, or Executive Power, that he is an innocent Man, notwithstanding that Assertion.

My Lords, There is nothing further from our Hearts, nor is any Thing less necessary to the Doctor's Defence, than for us to dispute or to call in Question the Justice of the Revolution. We are so far from it, that we look on ourselves to be arguing for it, whilst we are endeavouring to show your Lordships, that the Resistance used at the Revolution is not inconsistent with the Doctrine of the Church of England, and with the Law of England; and that the Doctor uses no other Language than what they both speak. When your Lordships have laid aside what was urg'd the second Day, to show the Justice of the Revolution, and to aggravate the Doctor's Offence, supposing him guilty, this Matter will lie in a very narrow Compass; and I am in Hopes there will not appear to be so great a Difference as hath been represented, between the Doctor, in his Assertion concerning the Illegality of Resistance, and some of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons. I can't say, that I differ from many of them in their Notions of Allegiance, as stated the second Day of this Trial.

My Lords, The first Thing on which I humbly insist, supposing this general Assertion to relate to the Supreme Executive Power, is, that the Doctor has not in any Part of his Sermon apply'd it to the particular Case of the Revolution.

'Twas insisted on the first Day, That he had not only asserted the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, on any Pretence whatsoever; but also that he had expressly affirm'd, that the Revolution was not such a Case, as ought to be excepted out of his general Rule. This I deny: If such an Expression can be found in the Doctor's Sermon, I shall think no Punishment too great for him. 'Tis one Thing, expressly to affirm the Revolution is such a Case as ought not to be excepted out of the general Rule; and another Thing, not to make the Exception. The Apostle, who in general neral Terms enjoins the Duties of Obedience and Non-Resistance to the Higher Powers, makes no Exception when he lays down those Precepts; nor (on the other Side) does he say, no such Case can ever happen, wherein Obedience is not to be paid, or Resistance not to be made. He is silent in that Matter; and the Doctor's Expression, in this Case, is agreeable with that of the Apostle. To prove the Doctor guilty of this first Charge, and that he had directly applied his General Rule of the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, to the particular Case of the Revolution, a learned Gentleman, (whose Province it was to maintain the first Article) on the second Day of this Trial, first stated to your Lordships the Page wherein the Doctor mentions the utter Illegality of Resistance, and read that Passage in the following Words: "The grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar upon which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power, in all Things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever." And then, says he, the Doctor goes on, and says, "Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence". This might very reasonably make an Impression upon your Lordships, not comparing those several Passages in the Doctor's Sermon, at the same Time that Objection was made. But I beg your Lordships will observe the Distance of these two Passages from each other, between twenty and thirty Lines, in which several distinct and intire Sentences are contain'd, to which that last Passage of Our Adversaries, &c. plainly relates. The next Method used to prove the Doctor guilty, was, by taking the Passage in itself, independently, from any other; and this I own to be the true way of considering it: And taking it thus, 'tis objected, If in no Case whatsoever 'tis lawful to resist, 'twas then unlawful at the Revolution. Such a Doctrine must be a slavish Doctrine. An unlimited Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance is a slavish Notion.

My Lords, Dr. Sacheverell does not contend for it; nor is there any Thing mentioned in his Sermon, of such an Obedience or Non-Resistance. There is but this small Difference between the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, who think this Expression so highly Criminal, and the Doctor, who still conceives it to be otherwise; whether, when the General Rule of Obedience is taught, the particular Exceptions, which may be made out of that Rule, are always to be expressed; or whether, when the General Rule is laid down, the particular Exceptions, which might be made out of that Rule, are not more properly to be understood or implied.

I humbly apprehend, my Lords, that extraordinary Cases, Cases of Necessity, are always implied, though not express'd, in the General Rule. Such a Case undoubtedly the Revolution was, when our late unhappy Sovereign, then upon the Throne, misled by Evil Counsellors, endeavour'd to subvert and extirpate the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. The general Rule ought always to be press'd; but the Exceptions of extraordinary Cases, of Cases of Necessity, are never particularly to be stated. To point out every such Case before-hand, is as impossible, as it is for a Man in his Senses not to perceive plainly when such a Case happens.

Every Minister of the Gospel is sufficiently instructed from the Doctrine of his Church, from the written Laws of the Land, and the Law of God, to press the general Duty of Obedience; but such extraordinary Cases, wherein Resistance is lawful, wherein it becomes an indispensable Duty, are no where laid down. The same Apostle, who enjoins Obedience and Non-Resistance to the higher Powers, commands also Servants to obey their Masters, and Children their Parents, in all Things: Notwithstanding which general Precepts, many Cases may happen, wherein it may be not only unfit, but sinful for Servants to obey their Masters, or Children their Parents. And yet the Apostle never thought it proper to state, or mention those Cases, but contented himself to press the Duty of Subjection in general, leaving such Cases (when they happen'd) to justify themselves.

Such Cases, my Lords, with respect to Resistance against the Supreme Power, are no way fit to be consider'd, but in Parliament; and even the Parliament itself hath never yet thought fit otherways to consider them, than by way of Retrospect, to justify what had of Necessity been done in those Cases; but never went so far as to enumerate the Cases of that kind, which might happen for the future, wherein it might be lawful for the Subject to resist; nothing being more evident, than that the Subjects would be, some time or other, thereby tempted to exceed their just Liberty.

I beg Leave to close what I have humbly offer'd to your Lordships on this Head, with an Observation I borrow from Mr. Pym, at his delivering the Charge against Dr. Manwaring. Mr. Pym, speaking of the Dutchy of Normandy, observes, that that Dutchy having been oppress'd with some Grievances, contrary to their Franchises, made their Complaint to Lewis the Tenth; who, by his Charter, acknowledging the Right and Custom of the Country, and that they had been unjustly griev'd, did grant and provide, That from thenceforward they should be free from all Subsidies and Exactions to be imposed by him, and his Successors, yet with this Clause, Unless when great Necessity required: Which small Exception, Mr. Pym observ'd, had devour'd all their Immunities granted by that Charter. I think I may as reasonably conclude, That if Clergymen, or others, in their Sermons, Writings, or publick Discourses, instead of preaching up the general Rule of Obedience, are permitted to state the several extraordinary Cases, which may arise, the several excepted Cases which, notwithstanding the general Rule, are implied; such Exceptions will in time devour all Allegiance.

Having thus stated to your Lordships the Question between us, Whether such excepted Cases as the Revolution was, are not more proper to be left as implied, than to be express'd, when the general Duty of Obedience is taught; I shall endeavour to satisfy your Lordships, First, That the Doctor's Assertion of the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power on any Pretence whatsoever, in general Terms, without expressing any Exception, or that any Exception is to be made, is warranted by the Authority of the Church of England: And, Secondly, That his Manner of Expression is agreeable to the Law of England.

First, That 'tis warranted by the Authority of the Church. Your Lordships were informed, on the first Day of this Trial, with how much Bravery even our Popish Ancestors asserted the Legality and indispensable Duty of Resistance, whenever they thought the Liberty of their Country requir'd it; but that at the Reformation, when Truth began to shine out, then it became evident, that this Notion of the Illegality of Resistance was a slavish Doctrine. The learned Gentleman undoubtedly pitch'd on a very proper Time to begin his Search after Truth; and from thence I shall endeavour to trace it.

One very early Authority I find; it was indeed in the Dawn of the Reformation, in a Book intitled, A necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christian Man; publish'd by the King's Command, 34 H. VIII. 'Twas a Treatise compos'd by the Direction of Cranmer, by Ridley, Redmayn, and other very great and learned Men. I find it highly commended in the History of the Reformation, Part 1. Book 3. Page 286. The Reverend Author of that History gives an Account how well the Reformers were employ'd, (Ann. 1540.) though not in the way of Convocation: That a select Number of them sat by Virtue of a Commission from the King, confirm'd in Parliament; and that their first Work was to draw up a Declaration of the Christian Doctrine, for the necessary Erudition of a Christian Man; and (Pa. 293.) that 'twas finish'd and set forth, with a Preface, written by those of the Clergy who had been employ'd in it, declaring with what Care they had examined the Scriptures, and the antient Doctors, out of whom they had faithfully gather'd that Exposition of the Christian Faith. In this Treatise I find these Passages. In the Exposition of the Fifth Commandment: "And by this Commandment also, Subjects be bound not to withdraw their Fealty, Truth, Love, and Obedience towards their Prince, for any Cause whatsoever it be; nor for any Cause they may conspire against his Person, nor do any Thing towards the Hindrance or Hurt thereof, nor of his Estate." In the Exposition of the Sixth Commandment: "Moreover, no Subjects may draw their Swords against their Prince, for any Cause whatsoever it be." The Reverend Father of our Church, to whom the Publick is so much indebted for that excellent History of the Reformation, and who has receiv'd the just Thanks of both Houses of Parliament for it, (Page 291.) declares those Expositions of the Commandments to be very profitable.

My Lords, Tho' the Treatise, in which I find these Expositions, was publish'd in a Popish Reign, yet (as an undeniable Evidence that the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, there taught, is a Protestant Doctrine) I shall shew your Lordships, the Reverend Author of the History of the Reformation has himself asserted it, in much stronger Terms, than Doctor Sacheverell has done. In Edward the Sixth's Time, the glorious Light of the Gospel shone out. The first Book of the Homilies, prepar'd by the Clergy, was then published by the Royal Authority; in which were three Parts of a Homily, or rather three distinct Homilies of Obedience: In one of which is the Passage mentioned in the Doctor's Answer. "Here, good People, mark diligently: It is not lawful for Inferiors, and Subjects, in any Case, to resist and stand against the superior Powers; for St. Paul's Words be plain, that whosoever withstandeth, shall get to themselves Damnation; for whosoever withstandeth, withstandeth the Ordinance of God." In Queen Mary's Reign, the Light of the Gospel was eclipsed, and the Darknes of Popery again over-spread the Nation. Resistance to Princes being a Doctrine of the Church of Rome, your Lordships will not expect any authentick Evidence to be produced out of that Reign, in Maintenance of the Doctrine of Non-Resistance.

When Queen Elizabeth came to the Crown, the Truth of the Gospel shone forth in its full Lustre, and then six Homilies were added to the other three against Disobedience and wilful Rebellion; in which your Lordships will find many Passages, wherein the Duty of Non-Resistance is pressed and inculcated, in much stronger Terms than it hath been asserted by Dr. Sacheverell. In that glorious Reign, the Thirty-nine Articles of our Religion were agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops of both Provinces, and the Clergy in Convocation; by the 35th of which, the Homilies are declared to contain a Godly and Wholesome Doctrine, and are order'd to be read in Churches, by the Ministers, diligently and distinctly, that they may be understood of the People. In the thirteenth Year of that Reign, a further Sanction was given to the Homilies; the Thirty-nine Articles were then confirm'd, and every Person in Holy Orders, to be admitted to any Benefice with Cure, was required (by Act of Parliament made in that Year) to Subscribe and Read them in the Church, and declare his unfeigned Assent thereto.

My Lords, We have now a most gracious Sovereign on the Throne, as far surpassing her renown'd Predecessor Queen Elizabeth, in the effectual Support she gives to the Protestant Interest, and in her pious Care for the perpetual Security of the Church of England, as in all the other Successes and Glories of her Reign. In this Reign, a perpetual Sanction is given to the Books of the Homilies, by inserting in the Act of Union the Act made 13 Eliz. which confirms the Thirty-nine Articles; by the 35th of which, the Doctrine of the Church (taught in the Homilies) is approv'd; and declaring that Act, 13 Eliz. to be an essential and fundamental Part of the Act of Union: So that I may now conclude, the Doctrine of the Church of England, taught in her Homilies, must continue as long as the Union of the two Kingdoms, which I heartily pray may be to the World's End. On these Authorities do the Homilies of our Church subsist: And as they are thus ratified by the Articles and Acts of Parliament, the Doctor has the concurrent Authority of the Church and State, for what he has said concerning the Illegality of Resistance.

My Lords, Is this Doctrine of Non-Resistance taught in the Homilies in general Terms, in the same manner as Doctor Sacheverell has asserted it, without expressing any Exception? Do the Articles of our Religion declare the Doctrine taught in the Homilies to be a Godly and Wholesome Doctrine; and will your Lordships permit this Gentleman to suffer for Preaching it? Is it criminal in any Man to preach that Doctrine, which 'tis his Duty to read? The Doctor is not only required by the 35th Article to read this Doctrine diligently, and distinctly, that it may be understood by the People; but to shew your Lordships, the Doctrine taught in the Homilies did not die, nor was alter'd at the Revolution, I must observe to your Lordships, that the Rubrick of the Office appointed for the Fifth of November, by the late Queen of Blessed Memory, directs the Clergy on that Day, if there be no Sermon, to read one of these Homilies against Rebellion. Since the Doctor chose rather to preach, than to read a Homily on that Day;

how could he better comply with the Command of her late Majesty, than by preaching the same Doctrine as was contain'd in those Homilies he was commanded to read on that Day, if he did not preach? Does an Act of Parliament, inserted in the Act of Union, injoin him to subscribe to this Doctrine before the Ordinary, and declare his unfeigned Assent to it in his Parish Church? And shall he be condemn'd in Parliament, for asserting the Truth of it? I must admit, this 35th Article of our Religion is not by the Toleration-Act (I will give no Offence, by calling it by its true Name) required to be subscribed by any Persons dissenting from the Church of England, to intitle them to their Exemption from the Penalties mentioned in that Act. But that Act of Parliament no way varies the Case with respect to the Clergy; so that whatever Duty was incumbent on them before, is so still; and therefore I hope, your Lordships will not think this Gentleman has so highly offended.

As a further Proof that this Doctrine of Non-Resistance, as laid down by the Doctor in general Terms, without making any Exception, is the Doctrine of the Church of England, I shall shew your Lordships, that it has been so preach'd, maintain'd and avow'd, and in much stronger Terms than the Doctor has express'd himself, by our most Orthodox and able Divines from the Time of the Reformation. 'Twould be endless to offer your Lordships all the Authorities I might produce on this Occasion; but we shall beg your Lordships Patience to lay before you some Passages out of the learned Writings of several Reverend Fathers of our Church, of nine Archbishops, above twenty Bishops, and of several other very eminent and learned Men.

That your Lordships may not think this Doctrine died at the Revolution, I shall humbly lay before your Lordships the Opinions of three Archbishops, and eleven Bishops, made since the Revolution, which will fully shew the Doctrine of Non-Resistance is still the Doctrine of our Church; I would not willingly give Offence in naming them, I am sure I mean no Reflection, nor can it, as I think, be any Reproach to them: I find no other Doctrine in this Case taught by them, as far as I am able to judge, than what the Apostles taught before them. With your Lordships Leave, I will therefore presume to name them; Archbishop Tillotson, the two present Archbishops, Bishop Stillingfleet, late Bishop of Worcester, the present Bishops of Worcester, Rochester, Salisbury, Ely, Bath and Wells, Lincoln, Exeter, St. Asaph, Carlisle and Chichester. If I am able to shew your Lordships that all these Right Reverend Fathers of our Church have preached the same Doctrine the Doctor has, Are the same Words coming out of their Mouths to be received as Oracles of Truth, but spoke by the Doctor fit for Articles of Impeachment? I am sure it's impossible to enter into the Heart of Man to conceive, that what these Reverend Prelates have asserted, that any general Position they have laid down concerning Non-Resistance, is an Affirmance that necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution were Odious and Unjustifiable: Why then is Doctor Sacheverell, by having taught the same Doctrine, in the same Manner as they did, to be charged for having suggested or maintained any such Thing?

My Lords, I dare not suppose this Doctrine, thus establish'd by so many Reverend Fathers of our Church, to be erroneous. If an intemperate Expression of one single Archbishop above a Hundred Years since dead, is fit to be inserted in an Article of Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, what Punishment should I deserve, could I suppose the Doctrine taught by so many Archbishops and Bishops to be erroneous. But if I might hope to be excus'd, if I made the Supposition, that the Homilies of our Church contain false Doctrine, and that so many of the Right Reverend Fathers of our Church are capable of erring, or being ignorant in the Doctrine of their Church, I humbly propose it to your Lordships, whether a Clergyman who errs after such great Examples, might not reasonably have hop'd for a more moderate Correction, than an Impeachment! Had this slavish Doctrine of Non-Resistance been first branded with its indelible Mark of Infamy, and the Right and indispensable Duty of Resistance to Princes plainly shewn; had all the slavish Notions of the Common Law which we find dispers'd throughout our Law-Books, which give Countenance to this Doctrine of Non-Resistance, been first weeded out of them, and some few Acts of Parliament, intirely agreeable with this slavish Doctrine, been first repealed; had the People been set right in the Notions of their Obedience, and the Ministers of the Gospel been instructed by Act of Parliament what Doctrine they ought to preach, and what not; had all these Things been first done, and the Doctor had afterwards err'd, your Lordships might have then look'd upon him, as an obstinate Offender.

The next Thing I beg Leave to consider is, the Law of England; whether the Doctor's Assertion of the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power on any Pretence whatsoever, in general Terms, is agreeable to the Law of England. I hope I need not again explain myself as to this Particular, I mean, that as the general Rule is always taught and inculcated by the Church, so has it always been declared by the Legislature, without making any particular Exception; and if this Rule holds both in Church and State, this Gentleman is strangely unfortunate, if he can't be comprehended under one or other of them.

My Lords, whatever may at any Time heretofore have been thought proper to be done by Parliament; whatever Measures, in Cases of the last Necessity, may at any time have been taken by the People in general, for preserving their Liberty, or asserting the Rights of their Country, and keeping themselves from Slavery; yet in no Age can any Instance be shewed, not in the Reigns of those Princes who have been depos'd, that this Doctrine, of the Right of Resistance, as it has been term'd, was ever permitted to be asserted by any particular Person. A memorable Case to this Purpose happened in the Reign of King Edward the Second: An Act of Parliament pass'd in the fifteenth Year of that Reign, intitled, Exilium Hugonis de Spencer Patris, & Filii. The two Spencers were banished by that Act; and the first Article in that Act against them is, "That they had affirm'd and publish'd in Writing, that Homage and Oath of Allegiance were due more by reason of the Crown, than by reason of the Person of the King; and that if the King did not demean himself according to Reason, in the Exercise of his Government, his Subjects might remove him; And that since that Removal could not be by Course of Law, they might therefore remove him by Force." The Time when this Act pass'd, and what afterwards happened, is remarkable. The Act, very soon after the making it, was repeal'd, and 'twas thought necessary in that Reign the People should assert that Right, and thereupon the King was depos'd. But your Lordships will will find in his Successor's Reign, they were so far from casting any Blot on the Act of Exile, that in the 1 Edw. 3. by one of their first Acts, the Repeal of the Exile was annulled, and the Act of Exile confirm'd. It is true, that in the 21st Year of Rich. 2. the Act made the 1st Edw. 3. for annulling the Repeal of the Exile, was repeal'd, and the Reversal of the Act of Exile confirm'd; but in the 1st of Hen. 4. the whole Parliament held the 21st Rich. 2. and all the Proceedings in it, for their Extravagance, were annulled, and from thence the Act of Exile of the two Spencers continued untouched. I must humbly observe to your Lordships, that though there were two Repeals of the Act of Exile, yet neither of them mention'd the Matter contain'd in the Articles as insufficient, but the Reasons assign'd in the Acts of Reversal are, that "in the Proceedings against the Spencers, the great Charter was not observ'd, that the Prelates were not present, and did not assent thereto; and some other Defects in Form". What Opinion our greatest Lawyers have since had of this Act of Exile, sufficiently appears, Co. 7. 11. Calvin's Case, the Words are these: "In the Reign of Edw. 2. the Spencers, the Father and the Son, to cover the Treason hatch'd in their Hearts, invented this damnable and damn'd Opinion, That Homage and Oath of Allegiance was more by Reason of the King's Crown (that is, of his Politick Capacity) than by Reason of the Person of the King; upon which Opinion, says the Lord Chief Justice Coke, they infer'd most execrable and detestable Consequences. First, If the King do not demean himself by Reason in the Right of his Crown, his Lieges are bound by Oath to remove the King. Secondly, Seeing that the King could not be reformed by Suit of Law, that ought to be done by Force: All which were condemned by two Parliaments, one in the Reign of Edw. 2. called Exilium Hungonis le Spencer; and the other 1 Edw. 3. cap. 1.". I barely mention these Acts to show, that however applicable the Case of the Revolution might be to that of King Edw. 2. yet that those very Persons, by whom the King was depos'd, thought it so high a Crime in the two Spencers, to take on them to publish such Positions, as to deserve Banishment. The next Law I beg Leave to mention, is the 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. By which, the levying War against the King in his Realm is declared, in general Terms, to be High Treason, without an Exception whatsoever: This is an Instance of what I am contending for, that the Law, in all Cases concerning our Allegiance, lays down the general Rule, without making any Exception. So the Oath of Obedience (as injoin'd 3 Ja. 1. 4.) all Persons are to swear to defend the King to the utmost of their Power, against all Conspiracies and Attempts whatsoever, which shall or may be made against his Person, Crown or Dignity. The Oath is in general, without any Exception express'd in it; and no Man will presume to say, that Oath, which was taken from the 3 Ja. 1. till after the Revolution, was not true. But the Answer to be given is, what I give in this Case, that Cases of Necessity, such as the Revolution, were implied, they are improper to be express'd; and why ought not the like Implication equally to be allow'd in the general Assertion made by Dr. Sacheverell? By the Act made 12 Car. 2. c. 30. for Attainder of the Regicides, it is declared, that by the undoubted and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together, in Parliament, or out of Parliament, nor the People, collectively, or representatively, nor any other Persons whatsoever, ever had, have, hath, or ought to have, any coercive Power over the Kings of this Realm.

My Lords, I can't apprehend this Act to be repealed: If it be not, I beseech your Lordships, let Dr. Sacheverell be tried by it; and that you will be pleas'd to consider, whether the Doctor's Assertion concerning Resistance, hath out-gone the Declaration in this Law.

Your Lordships hear how fully the fundamental Law of the Kingdom is declared by this Act: The Doctor has only said, 'Tis illegal to resist the Supreme Power on any Pretence whatsoever. The Expression at the End of that Declaration may possibly be observ'd, that it extends only to a coercive Power over the Person of the King; I know not what Inference may be drawn from thence, but certainly there is nothing in the Doctor's Sermon but what may be abundantly justified by the Declaration in that Act.

The Militia Act, the 13th and 14th Car. 2. c. 3. for ordering the Forces in the several Counties of this Kingdom, contains a Declaration as strong as the former: By that Act 'tis declared, That neither both or either of the Houses of Parliament can, or lawfully may, raise or levy any War, offensive or defensive, against his Majesty, his Heirs, or lawful Successors. When I perus'd this last Declaration in the Recital of the Acts, I read carefully to the End of it, to look for the Exception, but could find none. If there be no Exception in that Act; but that it stands as a general Declaration of the Law; if neither, nor both the Houses of Parliament can or may raise or levy War, offensive or defensive, against the King, is it a high Crime and Misdemeanor to assert in general Terms that Resistance to our Prince is unlawful? Pray, my Lords, compare the Doctor's Assertion in his Sermon with the Declaration in this last Act of Parliament.

By the Corporation Act, 13 Car. 2. sess. 2. cap. 1. all Mayors, Aldermen, Common-council Men, and other corporate Officers there enumerated, are required to take an Oath, That it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatsoever to take Arms against the King. By the Militia Act, which I have already mentioned, the same Oath, That it is not lawful on any Pretence whatsoever to take Arms against the King, is required to be taken by every Peer of the Realm, before he is capable of acting as a Lieutenant or Deputy Lieutenant; and by every Commoner of England, before he can be capable of acting as a Lieutenant, Deputy Lieutenant, Officer or Soldier in the Militia. By the Act of Uniformity, 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. all Ecclesiastical Persons, and many others under the several Denominations in that Act, are required to subscribe to the Truth of that Assertion, That it is not lawful on any Pretence whatsoever to take Arms against the King. This is the Language of our Law, and the like do the Apostles use in their Precepts touching Obedience and Non-Resistance to the Supreme Power.

But here I ought to observe, an Objection has been made to these several Acts, that by an Act made in the second Year of the late King and Queen, 'tis enacted, "That from thenceforth the Oath in-joined to be taken or subscribed, by the several Acts I have mentioned, should not be required to be taken by any Person whatsoever; and that the former Acts of Parliament, as to that Oath, are thereby repealed". 'Tis a very tender Repeal, my Lords, if it be one; but admit it to be one, it seems to have been argued from thence by a learned Gentleman, with whom in many Things he said

I no Way differ, that this Doctrine of Non-Resistance was become the more unlawful, because that Oath was not to be taken from thenceforward.

My Lords, As the Corporation Act required the Swearing, 'twas not lawful to take up Arms against the King, so does it direct the Subscribing to the unlawfulness of the Solemn League and Covenant; now by the same Argument, the Solemn League and Covenant may be proved to have been a lawful Oath.

I beseech your Lordships to consider, whether the Repeal of this Oath can have any Weight with your Lordships. 'Twas a general Assertion, to which all the Peers and Commoners, in the Employments I have mentioned, were to swear; there is no Exception in the Oath, but what is implied in it. Was not the Proposition as true before it was sworn, as after? Was it therefore true because 'twas sworn; or was it sworn because it was true? Did the Swearing it make it true; or the Truth make it fit to be sworn? If it was true when it was sworn, the Proposition was equally true before, and since. I believe, since the Oath was taken by so many Peers and Commoners, no Man will pretend to question the Truth of the Proposition.

My Lords, I have gone thro' the several Laws I shall lay before your Lordships on this Occasion; and let me once more humbly beg your Lordships, that you will be pleased to compare the Doctor's Assertion in his Sermon, concerning the Illegality of Resistance, with them; whether it be stronger than the Declaration of the undoubted and fundamental Law of the Kingdom, in the Act against the Regicides; than the Declaration in the Militia Act; than the Oath required to be taken by so many Acts of Parliament; than the Declaration in the 25th of Edward III. All the Doctor has said, is, That Resistance to the Supreme Power is illegal, on any Pretence whatsoever. All the Peers and Commoners of England, under the Characters and Employments I have mentioned, have sworn to the Truth of it; the 25th of Edward III. declares it to be High Treason; and your Lordships have heard what St. Paul says.

My Lords, I began this Discourse, relating to the Doctrine of the Church and the Laws of the Land, with the most sincere Protestation, That it was far from my Intention to offer any Thing inconsistent with the Justice of the Revolution: I think the Justice of it consistent with our Laws, the Exceptions to be made being always implied. And surely none can shew themselves truer Friends to the Revolution, than those who prove that the Revolution may stand without impeaching the Doctrines of our Church, or any fundamental Law of the Kingdom. Dr. Sacheverell being impeached for not making the Exception, when he laid down the general Rule; I beg Leave to turn the Case, and suppose he had made it. Had he been stating the Case of a Revolution, on a Day when he press'd the Illegality of Resistance, on a Day when, if he did not preach, he was obliged to read one of the Homilies against Rebellion, in which there is no Exception; Had he been picking Holes for the Subject to creep out of his Allegiance, and had he been cited before his Diocesan; might he not have been questioned, by what Authority he presumed to preach in that Manner? Whether he found such Doctrine taught by the Apostles, by the Homilies, or by any of the Reverend Fathers of our Church? Might he not have been told, it was his Duty, in Imitation of those great Examples, to press the general Duty of Obedience, and the Illegality of Resistance, without making any Exception whatsoever? Had he been questioned before the Temporal Power, for preaching in the Manner he has done; had an Indictment been framed against him on his general Assertion, and brought before the twelve Judges; I humbly apprehend, not one of them would have declared he went too far. But had he been making Exceptions out of the general Rule of Obedience, especially if he had been tried by such Judges as were before the Revolution; might he not have been told, 'Twas easy to discern what Spirit he was of, of what Party he was, and what he aimed at, what he intended; That he had not been preaching in Defence of the late Revolution, to shew the Justice of it; but that he was covering the Treason of his Heart, and under Pretence of justifying one Revolution, he was labouring to bring about another. He, who knew how far the Design had gone of landing the Pretender but two Years since; what else could he mean, by picking Holes in the Rules for our Obedience?

I have but a Word or two to add to the other Charges of this Article. The Gentlemen of the House of Commons were pleased to observe, That tho' there were four Articles, the Substance of them all centred in the first. The second Charge in this Article is, That his late Majesty in his Declaration, disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance. It is not, I hope, a sufficient Ground for an Article of Impeachment, if the Doctor has expressed himself in an obscure Manner. I must confess, I can't easily comprehend him myself; but it may be any Man's Misfortune to express himself in such a Manner, as to make it decent and fit for him to explain himself: And I hope the Doctor has explain'd himself, so as to show, that tho' he may have spoken improperly, he has yet spoken innocently. The Gentlemen of the House of Commons declare, by Resistance they mean the Resistance of the Subjects to their Sovereign: But Resistance, where the Doctor mentions his late Majesty to have disclaimed it, cannot have that Meaning. He was a Sovereign Prince, and might resist whom he pleased. Perhaps the Passage in the Doctor's Sermon may be capable of different Constructions, but the Doctor has taken Care to prevent all Manner of Mistakes that might possibly arise from thence: He has not only (as was observed by one of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons) made a marginal Reference, to show what he meant; which might have been done when he apprehended that Expression would be found fault with; but he has in the Sermon itself quoted what the Parliament did, in burning a Treatise which related to the King's having conquered the Kingdom.

My Lords, it was ask'd, What had he to do to take Notice of that Matter? What led him to justify the late King? Was there ever any Body living that imputed any such Thing as Conquest to him? My Lords, If there never was but that one Imputation endeavoured to be cast on his Memory, as I never heard of any other, surely then he did well to wipe off that Imputation; and that this has been laid to his Charge, I must refer to the Journals of both Houses of Parliament. Your Lordships resolved the Assertion of King William's and Queen Mary's being King and Queen by Conquest, was injurious to their Majesties rightful Title to the Crown, inconsistent with the Principles on which this Government is founded, and tending to the Subversion of the Rights of the People: And on the 25th of January 1692. your Resolution being communicated to the Commons, was unanimously agreed to.

The last Part of this Article is, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the said Revolution. My Lords, There are these words in the Doctor's Sermon, of casting black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the Revolution: They are in the Close of a Sentence, which immediately precedes the Expression of his late Majesty's disclaiming the least Imputation of Resistance. It is impossible to mistake the Place; your Lordships will examine it; and from thence let him take his Fate, Whether that Passage is applicable to what went before it, or to what follows after. Those Words of casting black and odious Colours, are so far from referring to his late Majesty's disclaiming the Imputation of Resistance, that they conclude the Sentence which went before it; in which the Doctor mentions New Preachers, and New Teachers, that broached abominable Positions, That the People have a Right to cancel their Allegiance at Pleasure, to call their Sovereign to Account; and who pretend to justify the horrid Murder of the Royal Martyr King Charles the First, and endeavour to screen themselves, and their vile Notions, under the Revolution. The Doctor having mentioned these New Preachers and their Doctrine, goes on: Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence. But certainly they are the greatest Enemies of that, and his late Majesty, and the most ungrateful for the Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such black and odious Colours upon both. I pray, my Lords, What does this refer to? Don't it clear the Revolution against the Venom of those Miscreants, who publish such villainous Assertions as these? But 'twas objected by a learned Gentleman, What has a Minister to do to meddle with these Things? If any Man offend against the Temporal, or Ecclesiastical Law, the Courts are open; the Magistrates are to punish.

My Lords, I don't find, if this Doctrine holds, that he must preach against any Thing: If he must not preach against any Thing which may be prosecuted, either in the Temporal or Ecclesiastical Courts, he must not preach against any Offence that is forbid by the Ten Commandments. Perhaps it will be urged, that there are no such People as these New Preachers, and New Teachers; that he is raising a Phantom, and then throwing it down; he is only imagining Cases, of which there are no Instances; that there are no such Men, who endeavour to justify the Murder of King Charles, or defend it by the Revolution. We will show there are too many Instances of such Persons, who make no scruple to publish these Positions, and cast Reflections on the Queen and her Government, whom the Doctor has been defending. He is not the Person he has been represented; he hath no disloyal Thoughts about him: Sure I am, he would rather die in her Majesty's Defence. We shall show your Lordships, that there are such as run most vile Comparisons between the Revolution and the most execrable Murder of King Charles the First, and can find no better Difference between them, than this abominable Distinction of a Wet Martyrdom and a Dry One.

Mr. Dodd.

MY Lords, I am likewise a Counsel for Dr. Sacheverell; and I cannot but think, by the same Arguments that have been used to maintain these Articles, any Book or Sermon, be it never so innocent, may be represented to be a Libel.

The Gentlemen Managers of the House of Commons, with Submission, have scarce any three of them agreed in any one principal Point; only in this most of them have agreed, That the Doctor is a Criminal before he is condemned. He has been in the whole Debate (generally speaking) so called; the usual Expression having been, The Criminal at the Bar: This (as it is not usual in other Places) would have been a great Discouragement to us that are his Counsel, and great Discouragement in his Defence, but that we consider that the Judgment is your Lordships, and that by your Justice he must stand or fall. It has been represented, as if this Sermon had been perused and approved by Lawyers; but this is only suggested, (as other Matters have been) yet there is not the least Proof thereof. We have had different Facts charged upon us; sometimes we are taxed for having said too much, and sometimes for having said too little, and not mentioning Things that were the proper Subject of the Day.

My Lords, we apprehend these Matters are objected for want of observing the Sermon itself; for as it was preached on the Fifth of November, so your Lordships will find an Account given for a Leaf together, setting forth the horrible Design of the Powder Plot. Your Lordships will also find, both in the Body and Conclusion of the Sermon, Notice taken of our Deliverance on this Day.

There have been some Acts of Parliament cited by the Gentlemen Managers for the House of Commons; that of the 25th Henry 8. about the Supremacy, which we apprehend is not to the present Purpose. It only asserts the Supremacy, that is, the Independency of the Crown, which was usurp'd by the Papal Authority; for surely King Henry, the Eighth, was a Prince that would as little bear the Doctrine of Resistance, as any Sovereign that ever wore the Crown of these Kingdoms.

There have been many Things said by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons that we heartily agree with them in. The Revolution was a Case we all agree out of the general Rule; and so in every Thing we say, we hope your Lordships will understand it. We neither do nor can understand it; it is against our Judgment and Interest to think otherwise. We are hearty well Wishers to the Revolution, and to the Happiness of England, that is in a great Measure built upon it. We agree the Law of the Land is the Measure of the Prince's Authority, and the Peoples Rights; that in the Case of the Revolution, when the Laws were overturned, Popery was coming in upon us, and Property signified nothing: The People of England being invited by his late Majesty, did resort to the last Remedy, even that of Necessity; and that Necessity did induce Resistance, and justify 'em in it; and upon that Foot the Revolution succeeded. We totally deny that the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, as laid down by the Doctor, and as asserted by him, was intended for the Pretender, or any other but her Majesty and her Government; or can be construed a thwarting the Revolution: His Assertions are general; those general Assertions will have their particular Exceptions.

Sure it has not, nor can be made out, that we had an Eye in favour of the Pretender in any Part of this Discourse. Now it has been by some of the Gentle-

Gentle-

Gentlemen admitted to us, that the Doctrine in the Main is right; but, say they, you had your Thoughts, your Eyes on the Pretender. Now this is so very contrary to what the Doctor has asserted in his whole Sermon, that I hope there is no Ground for it: For the Doctor (as a dutiful Subject) takes Notice that her Majesty is the last of the Lineal Descent, as the Relict of the Royal Family; which quite disowns the Pretender and his Right. And can any one imagine, that in such Expressions he could have an Eye to the Pretender? For if there be any Pretence of Title in the Pretender, it must be as a Descendant of that Family. But he takes Notice, that her Majesty is the only one left of that Family in a Lineal Descent; and I think that is enough to acquit the Doctor of having an Eye to him beyond the Water.

Having, my Lords, made these Remarks, I shall now consider the Articles as they lie before your Lordships. In the Preamble to the Articles, there is Notice taken of three Acts of Parliament. The first is the Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown. The second is the Act for preventing Vexatious Suits against Such as acted in order to bring in their Majesties, and for their Services. The third is the Act for paying the States General of the united Provinces their Charges for his Majesty's Expedition into this Kingdom, and for other Uses. These are the three only Acts that are cited in the Preamble of these Articles: I shall say but a Word to each of them. As to the Act called The Bill of Rights, I don't find that that Act meddles with the Points of Resistance or Non-Resistance; the whole Ground and Tenor of that Act is upon the Abdication. It settles the Crown upon the Vacancy of the Throne. It is said, Whereas the late King James the Second having abdicated the Government, and the Throne being thereby vacant, &c. There is no other Fact stated; there is no Mention of Resistance. But the Throne being vacant, the next Head in that Act says, That King James having abdicated the Government, and their Majesties having accepted the Crown, did become lawful King and Queen, &c. These are the only Passages in that Act as to this Matter: It has preserved the Liberties of the Subject; established several Rights which are their antient Inheritance; told the People that the Throne was vacant; and being so, that their late Majesties were lawful and rightful King and Queen, as undoubtedly we all agree they were.

My Lords, The next Act mentioned, is the Act for preventing Vexatious Suits against such as acted in order to the bringing in their Majesties, or for their Service. This goes further than the Bill of Rights; but whoever reads it, will find, it is but the same Act in Effect, that was enacted in the Reign of Edward III. after Edward II. was deposed. It is a meer Act of Indemnity, an Act of Pardon for Officers Civil and Military. It only exempts them from Prosecution, that having been Transgressors against the strict Rules of the Law, were subject to private Actions; and no less could be done than to exempt them from such Prosecutions; and therefore that Law pardons all Actions of Trespas that were committed upon that Occasion.

My Lords, The next Act taken Notice of is, That for paying the States General. That, I don't see, takes any other Notice; but is only for paying the Dutch 600,000 l. for their Assistance to his Majesty at his coming into this Nation, for our Deliverance from Popery and Arbitrary Power.

Then the Preamble charges the Doctor with Preaching and Publishing the Sermon and Dedication; and that is said to be done with a wicked, malicious and seditious Intention, to undermine and subvert her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession as by Law established; to defame her Majesty's Administration; to asperse the Memory of his late Majesty; to traduce and condemn the late happy Revolution; to contradict and arraign the Resolutions of both Houses of Parliament; to create Jealousies and Divisions among her Majesty's Subjects; and to incite them to Sedition and Rebellion. These are the Corollaries that are drawn from the Preamble of the Articles of Impeachment; and these are the Facts which must make these Articles criminal, or they can't be so at all. These Facts we utterly abhor and deny, and say we are not guilty of them; and hope it will so appear to your Lordships.

My Lords, I shall now come to the first Article itself, and shall shortly speak to the three Divisions of this Article: It consists of three Heads. The first is, That the Doctor suggests and maintains, that the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable. The second is, That his late Majesty, in his Declaration disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance. And the third is, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution.

As to the first, That he suggests, that the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution were odious and unjustifiable; My Lords, we can't have a better Answer to this, than utterly to deny that we have made any such Assertion: We have not done it in Words, nor in any Words that will bear that Construction. We insist, that as it can't be proved out of the Sermon, so neither out of any other Action of his Life, or any other Sermon by him preach'd. We say, that in no Part of his Sermon he has affirmed any Thing of the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution; that was a Point not fit for the Doctor to meddle with, the Legislature had taken Care of that. On the contrary, we have all along endeavoured in that Sermon to clear the Revolution and his late Majesty (and we hope we have done it effectually) from the black and odious Colours which their greatest Enemies had endeavoured to cast upon them. To this Part of the Article we have pleaded Not Guilty. We have denied the Fact; it has not been prov'd upon us; the Sermon don't prove it, nor does the Dedication prove it; but they prove quite the contrary, as by several Paragraphs of the Sermon compared together will appear.

The second Division of this Article is, That his late Majesty, in his Declaration, disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance. This Fact we do acknowledge, if it be understood as the Doctor explains it, and proves it by the Declaration itself. We take it to be very just and true; the Resistance the Doctor mentions, being such a Resistance as tends to Conquest only, as by the Words plainly appear, which are printed, and referred to in the Sermon. It can have no other Consideration, or Meaning, as will appear to any that read that Part of the Sermon with any Candor, or any Ingenuity. The Doctor has taken Care to express it in Words, that there might be no Room for Exception. His Highness declares in Opposition to those who give it out, that we intend to conquer and enslave these Nations, that we have thought fit to add a few Words to our Declaration:

tion : It is not to be imagined that either those who have invited us, or those who are already come to assist us, can join in a wicked Attempt of Conquest, to make void their own lawful Titles to their Honours, Estates and Interests. And undoubtedly it is so. He did not come to conquer and enslave us, but to make us a free People ; to preserve and restore our Religion, Laws and Liberties ; which, my Lords, with humble Submission, has been the Sense of the Nation ; and Notions of a different Kind, and such Assertions in printed Sermons, have been animadverted upon.

Now if the Doctor, having his Eye in that Expression on the Matter of Conquest that others had insinuated, and that the late King did disclaim any such Pretence, did express the same by Resistance, the Expression, we hope, is applicable to the Subject-matter that was before him, and ought not to be wrested or turned to any other Purpose. Nothing can shew more his Meaning than his own Quotation : He refers to King William's Declaration, to justify him in that Matter.

The next Head is, That to impute Resistance to the said Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty, and the said Revolution. This we likewise utterly deny to have maintained ; we have said no such Thing quite thro' the Sermon ; we have not taken upon us to meddle with that Point : It was an improper Subject for him to meddle with. The Doctor neither affirms, nor says any Thing of those that impute Resistance to the Revolution ; but those which the Doctor intended, and which are plainly meant, if the preceding Words must be the Words to which the Subsequent and Conclusion of the Sentence relates, then they are Persons of dangerous Dispositions, that place the Power in the People ; that pretend to a Power to call their Sovereign to an Account at their Will and Pleasure ; Positions that stand condemn'd by the Laws of the Church and State, and then vouch the Revolution in Defence of these Principles. These are the Persons mentioned and intended by the Doctor, whose Principles and Practices cast black and odious Colours upon the Revolution.

My Lords, The Doctor, we own, in his Sermon, has asserted this general Proposition, viz. Absolute Obedience in all Things lawful to the Supreme Power ; and the utter Illegality of Resistance of the Supreme Power upon any Pretence whatsoever And this being the Article, if we understand some of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons aright, on which the whole Impeachment turns ; and that if we were clear of this Article, there would be no Reason to follow us upon the others ; it gives us an Occasion to enlarge a little further upon this Point.

My Lords, Non-Resistance in general we do assert as a Rule ; yet we agree there is an Exception implied in that Rule, and that Exception, we say, was the Case of the Revolution. When this general Rule has an Exception in it, it must be in a Case of the utmost Necessity implied, and is not expressed, stated, or determined in any Law or Act of Parliament that I know of, except in the Particular herein after-mentioned.

My Lords, This Doctrine is agreeable to the Scriptures ; is taught by the Church of England in her Homilies, Articles and Injunctions ; by her Bishops and Fathers ; and in all Admonitions we have had from the Bishops and Pastors of the Church, from Time to Time. I shall not name them, some of them have been named. We shall produce Sermons preached before her Majesty, your Lordships, and the House of Commons, on the most solemn Occasions, where this Doctrine has been fully asserted, even beyond what the Doctor has laid down. Both your Lordships and the Commons have returned Thanks to the Bishops and Clergy that have preach'd them ; and therefore we can't apprehend ourselves to be worthy of this Reprehension. We shall produce them in Evidence, and vouch Authorities before the Reformation, and in the Infancy of it : The Homilies which are allow'd by the Church, and established by several Acts of Parliament.

This we take to be agreeable to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm. The Law makes it High Treason, for particular Persons to resist the Supreme Power.

The Spencers in Edward the Second's Time asserted, That if the King did not govern well, the People might remove him, and that by Force ; but that was condemn'd by two Acts of Parliament, in E. II. and E. III.'s Reign. The Act of 25 E. III. that famous Act that has been the Standard for Treason for many Ages, is agreeable to the Doctor's Assertion ; and when there were Breaches made in that Law in Queen Mary's Time, those Acts were again repeal'd : Now I need not repeat, that to resist the executive Power, and the Person of the King, by that Act, is compassing his Death, and levying War against him. They have always looked upon it, that resisting the King is levying War, it is a compassing and imagining the Death of the King ; I shall therefore say no more on that particular Act of Parliament, but come to later Times.

In the Act of 12 Car. II. cap. 30. it is declared, That it is the undoubted and fundamental Law of this Kingdom, that neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together, in Parliament or out of Parliament, nor the People collectively or representatively, nor any other Persons whatsoever, ever had, have, or ought to have any coercive Power over the Persons of the Kings of this Realm. Here is a Declaration as full as can be, I am sure as full as the Doctor's Sermon ; and yet this Declaration, I do agree, must have an Exception in a Case of the utmost Necessity : And I hope there is as much Reason to allow the Doctor an Exception, as in this Act of Parliament.

The next Act is the Corporation Act, 13 Car. II. in which all the Officers of Corporations are directed to swear, That they do believe, that it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King. Here is as full a Declaration to be made by all the Magistrates of Corporations, as general Words can carry, and yet I would be understood in every one of these, that there is an Exception of Necessity ; but whether the Doctor was a proper Judge of that Necessity, I shall take Notice by and by.

The next is the Militia Act, 13 and 14 Car. II. and there is the same Declaration to be made by every Lord Lieutenant, Deputy Lieutenant, Officer and Soldier, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King. And the Preamble of that Act is stronger, for in the Preamble of that Act it is declared, That both or either of the Houses of Parliament, cannot nor lawfully may raise or levy any War, offensive or defensive, against his Majesty, his Heirs, or lawful Successors.

The next Act is the Act of Uniformity 13 and 14 Car. II.

The next is the Act for Select Vestries, which enjoins all Deans, Parsons, &c. to make this Declaration, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King.

The

The next Act is the Act of Association, whereby all Persons are engaged to stand by and assist one another against all his Majesty's Enemies, without any Limitation.

The next is the Act which establishes the Abjuration Oath, 13 & 14 W. III. which was taken in the late Reign, and the Acts of 1 & 6 of her Majesty's Reign, whereby all Persons in Office are to swear to defend the King and Queen, to the uttermost of their Power, against all Traiterous Conspiracies and Attempts whatsoever, which shall be made against her Person, Crown or Dignity. And that these Words may have the plain Sense put upon them, They are to declare that they make that Recognition, Acknowledgment, Abjuration, Renunciation, and Promise, heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the true Faith of a Christian. Now this Resistance can't be agreeable to this Abjuration, for to resist is not the way to defend.

My Lords, We think that the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, as a general Proposition, is warranted by the Laws of the Land; and when there is an Exception implied therein, must only be determined by the Wisdom of the Nation, and not by any one Doctor or private Person whatsoever. The Doctor's Proposition is about Non-Resistance of the Supreme Power, and we have no Reason to take a greater Weight upon us than the Words of our Sermon; and whatever Construction may be put upon it, in Relation to the Executive Power, yet the Proposition holds as to the Supreme Power, which is all the Doctor has asserted. The Supreme Power is the Queen and Parliament, and to this Supreme Power the Doctor has pres'd the utter Unlawfulness of Resistance; and I have not heard it said by any that it is lawful to resist the Queen in Parliament. Here is the Strength of the Nation, and here there ought to be a Standing Obedience, otherwise it is setting up the People to be Judges, and not the Collective Body of the People assembled in Parliament.

My Lords, in a particular Case of the utmost Necessity; what Construction must be made as an Exception out of the General Rule, must be left to Time and Circumstances (when such a Case shall happen) to determine, and must be determined by the Wisdom and Strength of the Nation, if ever such a Case should happen, which I hope never will more.

There is indeed one Exception made in one particular Case in the Bill of Rights, where it is Enacted, That if the King or Queen shall be reconciled to the See of Rome, or profess the Popish Religion, or marry a Papist, then such Person shall be excluded to inherit the Crown, or have Regal Power in the Realm, and that the People shall be absolved of their Allegiance. And this I take to be the first stated and determin'd Exception to this general Rule that ever was made in any Act of Parliament.

My Lords, We think the Government can scarce be just to itself, that don't encourage and command this Obedience, this Non-Resistance. This is a Rule profitable to all Governments, let the Nature of them be what they will; it is for the Peace and Quiet both of Church and State. It would be wise Work to have the Exception to this Rule stated by every one that comes into a Pulpit. I know not whether it would not be High Treason in them to do it, sure I am, it would be a high Crime: And if these Points are doubtful or disputable (as at least must be agreed) sure they are no Grounds for an Impeachment.

What Doctrines should a Minister of the Church of England preach, if not those that are delivered in the Scriptures, and in the Doctrines of the Church? Must he search another Rule than the Scriptures, the Laws and the Fathers of the Church, have laid down? Must he tell the People, that the Doctrine of Non-Resistance of the Supreme Power is the Doctrine of the Church of England? Or must he limit this Rule, and state the Exceptions to it? Sure this would be very strange for the Doctor to do: He must tell them Resistance is unlawful, but there is an Exception to that Rule; but what that Exception is, I must not tell you, but you must find it out as you can. Is not this to pick Holes in the Duty and Allegiance of the Subject, and would look like the Blind leading the Blind.

My Lords, We think it would be a very strange thing for a Minister of the Gospel to distinguish in this Case: It would not be allowed him, it would be an Offence for any Preacher to do it. He must preach the general Proposition, he must inculcate the General Rule, and he must preach in the Words that the Laws of God, and of this Land, have delivered it in; he must not vary it, to find Meanings to help the People, like a good Casuist, to distinguish themselves out of their Allegiance.

Now so far we apprehend is the whole Sermon of the Doctor's to be understood, as not raising the Foundations of the Government, not inciting to Rebellion, but preaching Obedience to the Laws of GOD and Man. It is a great Misfortune for the Doctor to be represented as preaching this Doctrine for the Sake of the Pretender. We think, at least, it may be a Comfort to him, that there is not a Syllable of Proof or Truth in it; and that on the contrary, the Doctor disclaims all Right in the Pretender, by asserting and acknowledging her Majesty's Right, and expressing a passionate Concern, that her Majesty is the Relict of the Royal Family.

We have given all the Assurance of our Fidelity the Law demands, we have taken the Oath of Abjuration, and been always submissive to her Majesty, and the Laws of the Nation, given all the Security of our Allegiance and Loyalty that the Government required.

The Doctor fully declares his Meaning in this Sermon: Does he not all along submit to the Government, and pray for the Queen and Government? He has done it in several Places of his Sermon, particularly in one Place, which will carry a great Weight in it. What (says he) I have thus freely spoken, I hope is as much without Offence, as it proceeds from a tender Concern for her Majesty's Person, and a hearty Zeal for the Safety of our Church and Constitution. Surely after this Declaration, in Common Justice, there ought to be no Construction of a Man's Meaning made by Inference. Here is a full Declaration, that what he has done he has done in Service and Zeal to her Majesty and the Constitution in Church and State.

When there is not through the whole Sermon any plain Words to ground such a Construction, when there is not the least Proof offer'd, but only by such forced Constructions, when different Words are pick'd out from different Places, and Words so distant are join'd together to make up Sentences; and then Arguments framed, and Conclusions drawn from those Sentences to make good the Impeachment, we think it is much too hard, and hope it never will be endured, to pick Part of a Line here, and six or eight Lines after to pick part of another, and to join the Conclusions of one Sentence, and the Beginning of another; this would be to confound all Reason and Understanding whatsoever. This we take not to be a right way of Reasoning, nor a proper Evidence to maintain an Impeachment, and we hope your Lordships will therefore acquit the Doctor of this Article.

Mr. Phipps. MY Lords, I am also assigned by your Lordships to be one of the Counsel for Doctor Sacheverell, who, I beg Leave to say, I cannot yet think to be a Criminal; and, when we have been heard, I hope your Lordships will not think him such.

I do admit, as the Case is stated by the Gentlemen who are the Managers for the Commons, that it is a Cause of very great Moment, and is worthy of your Lordships Determination, because it deserves the greatest Deliberation; it being a Cause as considerable in its Consequences to her Majesty, the Church, and these Kingdoms, as ever came before your Lordships. And therefore, since it has been the Doctor's Misfortune to incur the Displeasure of the House of Commons, and to lye under the Weight of an Impeachment by that Great and Honourable Body, it is his greatest Comfort (next to his being Innocent) that he has the Honour to have your Lordships for his Judges, and the Opportunity of so publick a Vindication of his Innocence; for he does not doubt to give your Lordships, and all by whom we have the Honour to be heard, full Satisfaction, that he is not Guilty of any of the Crimes charged upon him in any or either of the Articles.

My Lords, we agree with the Managers, that his late Majesty, when Prince of Orange, did, with an armed Force, undertake a glorious Enterprize for delivering the Kingdom from Popery and Slavery. We admit, that divers Subjects well affected to their Country joined with and assisted him in that Enterprize; and that the Enterprize being crowned with Success, the late happy Revolution took Effect, and was Established. We also admit, that the blessed Consequences of the Revolution are the Enjoyment of our Religion and Laws, the Preservation of her Majesty's Person, the many Advantages arising by her Majesty's wife and glorious Administration, the Prospect of Happiness to future Ages by the Settlement of the Succession, and the Union of the two Kingdoms.

But there are other Matters suggested in the Preamble, in which we differ with the Gentlemen of the House of Commons; for it is therein alledged, That Doctor Sacheverell preached and published his two Sermons with a malicious and seditious Intention, to undermine the Government and Protestant Succession, to defame her Majesty's Administration, to Asperse the Memory of his late Majesty, and Traduce and condemn the Revolution, to Arraign the Resolution of both Houses of Parliament, to create jealousies and Divisions among her Majesty's Subjects, and to incite them to Sedition and Rebellion. And all this we totally deny.

The Offences charged upon the Doctor are of a very high and heinous Nature, and the greater the Crimes are with which a Man is charged, the clearer and plainer ought the Evidence to be to maintain and make good that Charge. And to make the Doctor a Criminal within these Articles, every Branch of the Articles must be proved as they are laid. It must be proved that he preach'd and publish'd these Sermons with such wicked, malicious and seditious Intention, as is alledged in the Preamble; and the Proof ought to be plain and positive; for the Laws of England have so guarded the Persons and Properties of the Subjects, that their Lives, Liberties, or Estates, cannot be subject to Forfeiture, or Restraint, by uncertain or conjectural Evidence, by strain'd or unnatural Inferences, Insinuations, or Innuendo's. And altho' I could cite many Authorities and Determinations in the Courts of Westminster-Hall, wherein the Judges have express'd their Dislike and Detestation of convicting Men of Offences, either Capital or Criminal, by Innuendo's or Inferences; yet I forbear to trouble your Lordships with any of them, because I have an Authority Superior to them all to warrant what I have said, and that is the Determination and Resolution of your Lordships in Sir Samuel Barnardiston's Case, which having been read by Sir Simon Harcourt, I forbear to trouble your Lordships with a Repetition of it.

The next thing therefore to be considered is, Whether the Sermons were preached with such malicious and seditious Intention as is asserted in the Preamble, and if there be such plain, direct and positive Proof, as is by your Lordships Determination, in Sir Samuel Barnardiston's Case, declared to be necessary.

But before I come to speak to any particular Article, I beg Leave to observe something, which though it hath not been made a particular Charge against the Doctor in any one Article, yet it has been urged and insinuated almost by every one of the Managers of the House of Commons to enforce every Article, and that is, That notwithstanding the Doctor's Expression of Loyalty to the Queen, yet his Intention is to bring in the Pretender.

It has been objected, as I apprehended (and I beg Pardon if I am mistaken) "That the Doctor confines his Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance to a Jure Divino King or Queen, and that from thence it was easy to understand against what Queen the Doctor excites the People to take up Arms." If the Queen, who has an Hereditary Right, and also a Right confirmed and established by Act of Parliament, cannot be said to be a Jure Divino Queen, I do not know who can. I did not think that the Doctor, who asserts the Hereditary Right of the Queen, could be charg'd with an Intention to bring in the Pretender. I am in your Lordships Judgment, whether the denying her Majesty's Hereditary Right be not the most likely way to bring him in: For I submit to your Lordships, whether the denying the Hereditary Right of the Queen, be not to suppose an Hereditary Right in somebody else; and whether that does not leave a Way open (when the Queen's Enemies are strong enough) to bring in that Person in whom the Hereditary Right is supposed.

It is asserted, "That the Doctor's pretended Zeal is for her Majesty, but his real Zeal is for the Pretender: It is hard to say a Man means contrary to what he speaks, and that, though he declares that the Safety, Rights and Establishment of her Majesty's Government, with those of the Church, are the things which he so earnestly contends for, and are his only Aim and Intention; and tho' he prays that God will preserve her Majesty, for the Comfort and Support of the Church and Nation, yet it is suggested that his chief Aim and Design is to dethrone her Majesty, to set the Crown upon the Head of the Pretender, and to establish Popery, or at least a Church independent on the State. And altho' he preaches up Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance under her Majesty's happy Administration, yet it is objected he stirs up the People to Rebellion, and " means

" means Non-Resistance and Passive Obedience " to the Gentleman on the other Side of the Wa" ter.

I do agree these Things have been urged with great Ingenuity, but what Proof, what Evidence is there of any of these Matters thus suggested?

My Lords, by the Law of England Men are not to be harangued out of their Lives, Liberties or Estates, but, as I have observed, it must be plain and positive Proof alone that can subject them to a Forfeiture: And I submit to your Lordships, where a Man affirms a Thing in his Sermon, if an Averment by any Body else that he means quite the contrary, be a sufficient Evidence to convict a Man of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

There is another Matter which I confess puts me under a great Difficulty, to determine which way to apply our Defence to the first Article, and that is the different Construction which the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have made of that Part of the Doctor's Sermon on which the first Article is founded. The Gentlemen that spoke to the first Article (if I apprehend them right) affirm, "That the Doctor asserts an unlimited Obedience, and the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Queen, as the Supreme Executive Power, and that such an Assertion was a Reflection upon the Revolution, which was brought about by the Resistance that was given to the late King James." And all their Arguments on the first Article were grounded on this Assertion. But a very learned Gentleman, who spoke Yesterday to the fourth Article, was pleased to object, "That tho' the Doctor asserted the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, yet he had no where asserted the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Queen, thereby leaving himself at Liberty to resist the Queen, and bring in the Pretender."

Now the Question is, which of these Constructions we must believe; if the Construction made by the Gentlemen who spoke to the first Article be true, then the Doctor has taken that Care of her Majesty's Person which he ought, by asserting the utter Illegality of Resisting Her, and hath not left himself at Liberty to take up Arms against her Majesty to bring in the Pretender; and so the great Objection made against the Doctor by the learned Gentleman who spoke to the fourth Article falls. But if his Construction prevails, there is no Reflection on the Revolution, and the first Article falls to the Ground; for the reflecting on the Revolution can be only by asserting the Illegality of Resistance to the Queen, as the Supreme Executive Power; because the Resistance which brought about the Revolution was made to the late King James only, and not against the Legislature: But whichever of these Gentlemen your Lordships shall be of Opinion is in the Right, I beg Leave to say, that this may certainly be concluded and inferred, That the Construction of that Sentence must be very doubtful, in which such learned Men differ, and consequently cannot be a Charge sufficient and certain enough to ground a Conviction for High Crimes and Misdemeanors. These Matters being submitted to your Lordships Judgment, I come next to consider the Articles themselves, and shall humbly propose to your Lordships Consideration what I have to offer in Answer to them, and shall take Notice of the several Branches of the respective Articles, which the Doctor mentions in his Answer to them.

As to the first Branch of the first Article, which charges, the Doctor does Suggest and Maintain, that the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution were Odious and Unjustifiable; the Doctor denies there are any such Expressions in his Sermon at St. Paul's: And I beg Leave to say, that there is not one Paragraph or Sentence in his Sermon that can support this Charge; the Necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution not being once mentioned in his Sermon; and therefore I at first doubted whether I had the right Sermon; for I could no more find that Sentence in the Doctor's Sermon at St. Paul's, than one of the learned Managers could find a Text of Scripture, quoted by the Doctor, in his Bible.

One of the Gentlemen who spoke to this Article, was pleased to admit, that the Words charged in this Part of the Article are not in the Doctor's Sermon, but said there are Words that are tantamount: so that this Branch is to be proved by Innuendo's, and yet they have not been pleased to let us know what those Words are which do amount to the same Signification, and we deny there are any such Words.

The last Part of the first Article (for I shall consider that next, because it relates to the Revolution) charges, that the Doctor does Suggest and Maintain, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast Black and Odious Colours upon his Majesty and the Revolution. In answer to which I must beg Leave to take Notice, that the Words of the Sermon are here transpos'd and misplac'd; for the Doctor does not say, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution is to cast black and odious Colours upon his Majesty and the Revolution; but he says, that to urge the Revolution to justify the Doctrine of Dethroning and Murdering of Princes, is to cast Black and Odious Colours on his Majesty and the Revolution; for the Doctor in Page 11, says, that "the New Preachers and New Politicians pretend to have a Power to cancel their Allegiance at Pleasure, to call their Sovereign to an Account for High Treason, to Dethrone and Murder him for a Criminal, as they did the Royal Martyr by a Judiciary Sentence, and that to justify this Doctrine, they urge the Revolution of this Day: But (says he) they are the greatest Enemies of that, and his late Majesty, and the most ungrateful for the Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such Black and Odious Colours upon both; so that what he says is no more than that to justify the calling the Sovereign to an Account for High Treason, and the Dethroning and Murdering of him, by the Revolution, is to cast Black and Odious Colours upon both. And is there any Body that has any Respect for the glorious and happy Revolution, that has any Regard for the Preservation of our Constitution, can say less? Can there be a greater Reflection on the Revolution, than to urge That in Vindication of the Rebellion in Forty-one, as if the Cases were alike?

I humbly submit it to your Lordships, if there be any Thing in his Sermon that can be construed to reflect on the Revolution, if the Words be taken according to the Natural and Genuine Sense of them; nor can it be thought the Doctor would cast the least Reflection upon it: Can it be imagined, that he who is a Member of Magdalen College in Oxford, should so soon forget the Attempts that were made on their Liberties, and would reflect on the Revolution, by which not only he and the rest of the Fellows of that College, but all the Colleges in both the Universities, nay, all her Majesty's Protestant Subjects, now enjoy their Religion, Rights and Liberties? That he who is a Church-of-England-Man should Calumniate the Revolution, by which the best Established Church in the World is preserved from Popish Superstition and Idolatry? That he who contends so earnestly for the Preservation of our Constitution, should cast Black and Odious Colours on that, by which alone the Succession is settled and secured in the Protestant Line, and her Majesty is now Lawfully and Rightfully seated on the Throne of her Royal Ancestors, on which the Doctor prays, and I hope we all join with him, that she may long continue for the Support and Comfort of this Church and Nation? No, my Lords, it is not the Revolution in 1688, but the Revolution in 1648, that he endeavours to blacken, and the Principles by which that was brought to pass, those Principles which made Rebellious Subjects take up Arms against one of the best Princes that ever Swayed the Sceptres of these Kingdoms; those Principles which brought that Pious Martyr to the Block, banished the Royal Family, and set an Usurper upon the Throne; this is the Dethroning, this is the Murdering which he means: And can any Colours be too Black, any Colours too Odious for such Crimes? No doubt, my Lords, they cannot; and therefore instead of charging the Doctor with reflecting on the late happy Revolution, I hope your Lordships will be of Opinion he vindicates it in the highest Degree, when he distinguisheth it from that in 1648, and shews what a wide Difference there is between them.

As to that Part of the first Article which says, That his late Majesty, in his Declaration, disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance; If the Doctor had not explained himself, it is humbly submitted how far he is justified by his Majesty's Declaration. The Declaration says, We have thought fit to go over to England, and to carry with us a Force sufficient, by the Blessing of God, to defend us from the Violence of evil Counsellors; and that his Expedition is intended for no other Design but to have a free and lawful Parliament: So that this Expedition was to have a free Parliament, and his Forces were to defend him from the Violence of Evil Counsellors, in carrying on that glorious Design; and when the late King James Abdicated the Government, what Resistance was it to supply the Vacancy, by settling his late Majesty on the Throne?

In Construction of Words and Sentences, if any part be ambiguous, and may be taken in a double Sense, it ought in Favour of Life and Liberty to be taken in the best Sense. But the Author declares what his Sense is, what he means by it, there it cannot be taken in any other Sense than that: And this is the Doctor's Case; for he shews, both in his Sermon, and by a Note printed at the Bottom of the Page, that by Resistance he means such Resistance as tended to a Conquest: And is he not justified in that by his Majesty's Declaration, wherein he disowns the wicked Attempt of Conquest? And by the Vote of both Houses of Parliament, who so highly resented the Design of making that Expedition a Conquest, that they ordered a Pamphlet which attempted to prove it such, to be Burnt by the Common Hangman?

And therefore, if the general Words would have carried such a Reflection, yet the Clause which explains it, being printed with it, prevents such a Construction; for there is no Reason to apprehend any Danger from the Poison, when the Antidote is administered at the same Time. Thus, my Lords, I take it, I have answered every Branch of this Article, and shewn, that there are not any Expressions in the Sermon, that can Warrant or Support any Part of it: But, from what I observed from the Gentlemen who are the Managers, and spoke to this Article, the great Foundation and Stress upon which this Article depends, is in the Sentence in Page 11. of the Doctor's Sermon, where he says, The Grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar upon which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever. But I take it, the Charge in this Article can never be supported by any Words in this Sentence; for it is Evident, that the absolute and unconditional Obedience, which he says Subjects are obliged to, is to the Supreme Power in all things lawful; and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, (being in one and the same Sentence) must be intended to be of the Supreme Power in all Things lawful; so that it is no more than if he had said, 'Tis utterly Illegal, upon any Account whatsoever, to resist the Supreme Power in Things lawful. Can any Aphorism be truer than this, viz. That where the Thing commanded by the Supreme Power is lawful, the Resistance given to it must be unlawful? And this is all the Doctor hath asserted in this Paragraph.

If I may have Leave to cite a foreign Author, Puffendorf says, The Supreme Power is that in which the Legislature is vested; for he says, Human Laws are the Decrees of the Supreme Power, concerning Matters to be observed by the Subjects for the good of the State. And one of the learned Managers, who spoke to this Article, admits it to be so. And then the Doctor's Assertion is, That the Security of our Government, and the very Pillar on which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an Absolute and Unconditional Obedience to the Laws made by the Queen, Lords and Commons, in Parliament assembled, and the utter Illegality of Resisting such Laws on any Pretence whatsoever. And if this be not so universal a Truth, as not to admit any Exception, is humbly submitted to your Lordships: And this is an Answer to all that hath been said against us on the first Article. For all the Gentlemen have founded their Discourse on a Supposition, that the Doctor preached up an Absolute Unconditional Obedience to, and the utter Illegality of Resistance of the Queen; whereas he preaches up the Illegality of Resisting the Supreme Power, and that in all Things lawful.

Suppose it could be collected, that by the Supreme Power the Doctor meant the Supreme Executive Power, which is the Queen; yet the Doctor cannot be thought by this to reflect on the Revolution, or to condemn that Opposition given to King James.

For can it be imagined, that he condemns the Opposition given to that Prince in the Dispensing Power, in committing the Bishops, depriving Men of their Freeholds and Liberties, by Ecclesiastical and other unlawful Commissions, and endeavouring to establish Popery, by introducing a foreign Power? I say, Can it be imagined the Doctor condemns that Opposition, when he urges the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power in all Things lawful? If those Proceedings of King James were lawful, then the Doctor condemns the Opposition given to them; but those Proceedings being Illegal, the Opposition given to them is no where condemn'd by the Doctor, nor hath this Paragraph in his Sermon any Relation to it.

To carry this yet further; suppose that the urging the Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever had been a Substantive Clause, and had no Relation to, or Dependence upon any other Clause or Sentence; or suppose such a general Assertion can be collected from any Part of the Doctor's Sermon, yet it must be taken only for a general Proposition: And if such general Propositions are true in the General, and to a common Intent, tho' they are subject to particular Exceptions, yet it is submitted, whether the Doctor is not well warranted in asserting such a general Proposition, without mentioning the particular Exception? For all general Rules have Exceptions; and yet the Person that cites them, seldom or never mentions the Exceptions; for whenever such general Propositions are urged, the Exceptions are always understood and implied. And there was less Reason to mention the Exception in this Case, because it is so universally known: It had the Concurrence of the whole Nation, and was so often established and approved by the Legislature.

And the Doctor intirely concurs with the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, that the Revolution is an Exception; and is not Adversary to one of the learned Managers, who was pleased to admit, it was the only Exception from this general Rule. And I submit to your Lordships, if the naming that Exception, would not be a greater Reflection on the Revolution, than the Preaching that Doctrine in general Terms, without naming it; for to name it now, since the Revolution, would be to suppose, that it was not implied and understood as an Exception out of that general Proposition, before the Revolution; and then the Exception is to be warranted by the Revolution; which is to infer, that no Resistance was lawful 'till the Revolution: Whereas we say, that such an extraordinary Case as that of the Revolution, was always implied as an Exception out of that general Doctrine, and so the Doctrine justifies the Revolution.

And therefore, the Doctor urging this Doctrine of Non-Resistance in such general Terms, as all other general Propositions are usually urged, it is humbly submitted, whether he can for this be esteem'd guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors; especially since this very Doctrine hath been affirm'd in such general Terms, by learned Men in all Ages, by our Church, and by the Legislature; of which I'll beg Leave to give some few Instances.

When the Duke of Monmouth was to be executed, his present Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, the present Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, the then Bishops of Ely and Bath and Wells, were appointed by the King to attend his Grace. They press'd him to make a particular Confession of his Crime, and to acknowledge himself guilty of Rebellion: His Answer was, He died a Protestant of the Church of England. They replied, My Lord, If you be of the Church of England, you must acknowledge the Doctrine of Non-Resistance to be true.

Archbishop Tillotson, in his Letter writ to my Lord Russell, July 20, 1683. offers these Considerations concerning the Point of Resistance. "(1.) That the Christian Religion doth plainly forbid the Resisting of Authority. (2.) That in the same Law which establishes our Religion, it is declared, It is not lawful upon any Pretence whatsoever to take up Arms against the King.

make that Expedient to be done at any Time, that is of itself, and in the Kind, unlawful. For a Man to take up Arms (offensive or defensive) against a lawful Sovereign, being a Thing in its Nature simply, and de toto genere, unlawful, may not be done by any Man, at any Time, in any Case, upon any Colour or Pretence whatsoever.

Thus your Lordships observe, how much higher these great and learned Men carried this Doctrine, than Doctor Sacheverell hath done in his Sermon: And Multitudes of Instances there are, which shew, that it hath been the concurrent and universal Opinion of all the learned Men of our Church, in all Ages, that Resistance of the Sovereign Power is not lawful upon any Pretence whatsoever. And what Punishment, what Censures have been inflicted upon, nay, what Fault has been found with any of them to this Day? One of the learned Gentlemen, to enforce the Legality of Resistance, was pleased to urge the original Contract, as the Foundation of the Prerogative of the Crown, and the Liberties of the People; and to assert, that if the Supreme Executive Power invaded the Rights of the People, the Contract was dissolv'd, and the People discharg'd from their Allegiance. I will not be positive, as to the very Words, but I take this to be the Purport of them.

When the original Contract was made, that learned Gentleman did not think fit to inform us. Was it before Magna Charta? If so, why not compriz'd in it? All the Liberties the Subjects then laid Claim to, being included in that Act; and 'tis much, a Thing of that Moment, and which was the Source and Spring of all their Liberties, should not be so much as mentioned in it. I never met with it in any of our Law Books, in my little Experience. — I never heard it urg'd in any Court before. Was it before the Statute of 25 Edw. III? I never knew it pleaded to any Indictment for High Treason, nor objected, to enervate or take off the Force of that Statute: And our Law Books being silent in it, I think it is too tender a Point for us, who are no Members of any Part of the Legislature, to meddle with. And therefore, 'till the Legislature have declar'd what the original Contract is, and determin'd what Act of the Supreme Executive Power shall amount to a Dissolution of that original Contract, and discharge the Subjects from their Allegiance; I must beg Pardon, if I think, that as to Resistance in general, the Law stands still upon the Foot of the 25th of Edward III. and that all Resistance, except in the Case of the Revolution, is still Treason within that Act.

But to give some further Instances, in Vindication of the Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance. Archbishop Tillotson, in his Letter to the Lord Russell, says, The Doctrine of Non-Resistance is the Doctrine of all Protestant Churches: I may add, it was the Doctrine of Christ and his Apostles: It was the Doctrine in David's Time; for it was this Doctrine that restrained David from offering Violence to King Saul, tho' that King sought to take away his Life. It was that holy Man's Opinion, that he could not lift up his Hand against the Lord's anointed, and be guiltless. Can it be done now with greater Innocence than it could then? Is the Person of the Lord's anointed now less sacred than it was then? Or have the People now a greater Liberty to resist, than David had then? My Lords, one of the learned Gentlemen said, that in Respect of the Patriarchal Right, it is a Do-

2 Doctrines as old as Adam, and I will not pretend to carry it further.

The next Thing therefore to be consider'd, is, Whether this Doctrine, that is of so great Antiquity, has had any Alteration, whether it hath been preach'd, or urg'd in any other Terms since the Revolution, than it was before. Bishop Beveridge, in a Book call'd Private Thoughts upon Religion, Pag. 247, 249, 250. says, Upon any seeming real Default or Defect of our Sovereign, we are to be more earnest in our Prayers and Intercession for him; but upon no Account to fight or rebel against him. This Book had her Majesty's Royal License, and was countersigned by a noble Lord, eminent for Learning, and her Majesty's principal Secretary of State; I mean, the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland.

I beg Leave to cite next a learned Gentleman, whose Affection to the Government, and Understanding in Antiquity, no body can doubt: 'Tis Dr. Kennet, who in his Sermon preach'd before the House of Commons, January 30, 1705, says, This is the true Foundation of that common Axiom, The King can do no Wrong; because there is no Right nor Remedy against his Royal Person. And in the same Sermon he says, It was declarative of our original Constitution, (which one would think should be the original Contract, unless the original Contract and the original Constitution differ) that our Legislature, upon Occasion of this Day would have it express'd, that by the undoubted and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together, in Parliament, or out of Parliament, nor the People, collectively or representatively, nor any other Persons whatsoever, ever had, have, or ought to have, any coercive Power over the Persons of the Kings of this Realm. And I think it is evident, where there can be no coercive Power, there cannot be any Resistance. This was but in the Year 1705. And was the original Contract found out since? If not, then it is plain, the Commons did not think this Doctrine to derogate from that Contract, or to reflect upon the Revolution; for the Doctor had the Thanks of the Commons for his Sermon, and their Order to print it.

I do most readily concur with the learned Gentlemen of the House of Commons, that that Reverend Bench is fill'd with Fathers of the Church, who are as great an Ornament to it for Learning and Piety as any of their Predecessors, and are most justly famed for their religious Moderation; and therefore Instances of their asserting this Doctrine since the Revolution, will have the greatest Weight with your Lordships, and tend the most to the Satisfaction of that honourable House, upon whose Impeachment the Doctor is brought hither.

The Bishop of St. Asaph, in his Sermon on the 30th of January, 1699, preached before the Lord Mayor, Pag. 18, says, It is plain, that a Government can't possibly subsist for any Time, where any Kind of Violence is allow'd against the Magistrate: Government is at an End, where Rulers are expos'd to popular Assaults.

The Bishop of Lincoln, in his Sermon preach'd before your Lordships the 30th of January, 1708, pag. 15, 16, 17, says, Where-ever that Supreme Power and Authority is lodg'd, or in whomsoever it resides, we are bound to pay either an active or passive Obedience, must either do what it requires, or suffer what it inflicts. This is, without Controversy, the standing Doctrine of Christianity, and has been confirm'd by the Practices of the best Christians in all Ages of the Church. My Lord Bishop likewise cites the Words of the Statute of the 12th of Charles II. which were mentioned by Dr. Kennet; your Lordships were pleas'd to thank my Lord Bishop for this Sermon, and desired him to print it.

My Lord Archbishop of York, in his Sermon preached before your Lordships in 1700, has stated this Doctrine so fully and clearly, that it is not capable of the least Contradiction or Doubt: His Grace expresses himself thus: That there is such a Submission due from all Subjects to the Supreme Authority of the Place where they live, as shall tie up their Hands from opposing or resisting it by Force, is evident from the very Nature and Ends of Political Society; and I dare say, there is not that Country upon Earth, let the Form of their Government be what it will, (Absolute Monarchy, Aristocracy, or Commonwealth) where this is not a Part of the Constitution. Subjects must obey Passively, where they cannot obey Actively, otherwise the Government would be precarious, and the publick Peace at the Mercy of every Malecontent; and a Door would be set open to all the Insurrections, Rebellions, and Treasons in the World. Nor is this only a State Doctrine, but the Doctrine also of Jesus Christ; and that a necessary and indispensable one too, as sufficiently appears from those famous Words of St. Paul's, Rom. xiii. 1, 2. which are so plain that they need no Comment: So that so long as this Text stands in our Bibles, the Doctrine of Non-Resistance or Passive Obedience must be of Obligation to all Christians.

Is not this Doctrine confirm'd by our Church in her Homilies, and injoin'd to be read on certain Days in the Church? Are not these Homilies allow'd by the Articles? Are not these Articles establish'd by the 13th of Eliz. Chap. xiv? And is not that very Act confirm'd and made perpetual by the Act of Union made in the fifth Year of her Majesty? Is it not likewise ratify'd and establish'd by the Legislature, by the Act of the 12th of Charles the Second, cited in the Sermons of the Bishop of Lincoln and Dr. Kennet; by the Act of the 13th of Charles the Second? For that Act of the 13th of Charles the Second, Chap. iv. obliges all Ministers, &c. to subscribe a Declaration: The first Part whereof was this, I A. B. do declare that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatsoever to take up Arms against the King. Was not that Declaration to be sworn to by all Officers of Corporations, by the Corporation Act; by all Lieutenants, Deputy Lieutenants, and all Officers and Soldiers of the Militia, by the Militia Act? And can any Man doubt the Truth of that Doctrine, which the Legislature has obliged the greatest Part of the Nation so solemnly to subscribe and swear to? We have collected many more Instances of this Kind, which we will offer to your Lordships in the Course of our Evidence.

Thus your Lordships observe how this Doctrine hath been preach'd and maintain'd by Archbishops, Bishops, and eminent Divines, confirm'd and establish'd by the Church; and by the Legislature: And is this Doctrine alter'd; or hath it receiv'd any Diminution or Restriction by the Revolution? I will not presume to say, but are in your Lordships Judgment, on the Consideration of the several Sermons before mention'd, preach'd and publish'd with the respective Approbation of both Houses of Parliament since the Revolution. I beseech your Lordships, How many Revolutions have there been in this Kingdom, and yet this Doctrine always continued the same; and I submit, whether we have not the Authority thority of your Lordships on this very Point; for in a Sermon preach'd before your Lordships on the 30th of January, 1702, by my Lord Bishop of Carlisle, his Lordship expresses himself thus. Our Foundations, 'tis to be hoped, are not shaken by the Weight of those many great and extraordinary Revolutions that have passed upon us. The All-wise Providence of God has frequently of late (and, as some of us always thought, very graciously) exchang'd our Governors; but if we ungratefully alter our Notions of the Divine Right of Government, and throw off our antient and primitive Rules of Obedience, we shall make an unworthy Return for the Mercies we have received. I hope I may have your Lordships Leave to conclude your Lordships are of the same Opinion, since my Lord Bishop had your Lordships Thanks for his Sermon, and your Desire to print it. I also presume to offer it to your Lordships Consideration, whether this very Doctrine be not establish'd and injoin'd under the Obligation of an Oath, by the Legislature, in the Reign of his late Majesty, and of her present Majesty; I mean in the Abjuration Oath, in which Oath there is this Clause, viz. And I do swear that I will bear Faith and true Allegiance to her Majesty, and her will defend to the utmost of my Power against all traiterous Conspiracies whatsoever, which shall be made against her Person, Crown and Dignity. I believe it will not be deny'd by any Lawyer, that taking up Arms against her Majesty is High Treason, by the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third; and therefore the Parliament having injoin'd all Persons in Office, &c. to defend her Majesty against all traiterous Conspiracies and Attempts, shew, that it was their Opinion, that the taking up Arms and resisting her Majesty, upon any Pretence whatsoever, is unlawful; because wheresoever Resistance is lawful, the Defence must be unlawful.

I would only beg Leave to add, that the Punishment inflicted by our Law in this World for Resistance, and the Judgment denounc'd against it in the next, sufficiently evinces the Illegality of it. Taking up Arms and resisting against the Queen, by the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, is High Treason; the Punishment of which is to be Drawn, Hang'd and Quarter'd. And in what Condition they are to be in a future State, St. Paul informs us: For he says, They that resist shall receive to themselves Damnation. And surely no Body will contest the Truth of that Doctrine, the Breach of which is attended with such dismal Consequences. I hope, therefore, since this Doctrine has been so universally preached and approved, the Preaching of it now shall not be thought to reflect on the Revolution, more than it has done hitherto, since her Majesty's happy Accession to the Throne; and more than it did in the Reign of his late Majesty, who was the glorious Instrument of that happy Revolution. Was not his Majesty appriz'd of the necessary Means by which the Revolution was brought about? Had not his late Majesty as tender a Regard for the Honour of the Revolution, as any Body else can be suppos'd to have? No Body can doubt it: And yet this Doctrine was preach'd in his Time, in as general Terms as the Doctor has preach'd it; and not only without Objection, but with the Approbation of his Majesty, and both Houses of Parliament. And if all this will not vindicate the Doctrine; yet, I hope, it will at least excuse the Doctor from being a Criminal.

Can he be a Criminal for preaching that Doctrine which has been asserted by so many Archbishops, Bishops, and other eminent Divines, not only with Impunity, but even with the Approbation of both Houses of Parliament? That Doctrine which is injoin'd by our Church, ratify'd, confirm'd and establish'd by the Legislature, and which is the Doctrine of all the Protestant Churches in the World, which was the Doctrine of our Saviour himself, and which hath been the Doctrine ever since Adam, and will continue so as long as there is a Bible upon Earth?

Can a Man be a Criminal for preaching the Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance, tho' without Restriction and Limitation, while we are so happy as to have her Majesty to reign over us, upon whose Life the Welfare and Happiness of these Nations depend, as much (I hope I may be excus'd if I say more) than the Welfare of any Nation ever did upon the Life of any Prince whatsoever since the Foundation of the World? And therefore we are sure your Lordships will not lessen her Security; and the rather, because it is impossible, during her Majesty's Life, any Invasion or the least Attempt should be made upon that Religion, that Liberty and Property, for the Preservation of which she run so great a Hazard.

This is what I humbly offer to your Lordships, on Behalf of my Client, on this Head. And tho' I have mention'd these Instances, to show in what general Sense the Doctrine of Passive-Obedience has been preached, and that if the Doctor had asserted it in such general Terms, he could be no more a Criminal than others; yet it must be always understood, that he does not assert it in such general Terms, but only asserts the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power in all Things lawful.

Before I quit this Article, I would take Notice, it has been objected, that it is highly improper and unseasonable for Divines in their Pulpits to meddle with Matters of this Nature: In Answer to which, I would (besides the Injunction that the Apostles have laid on their Successors, to put People in Mind of being subject to Principalities and Powers) humbly offer to your Lordships Consideration, a bold and seditious Paragraph in a Pamphlet printed in 1705, call'd, The Review; which hath this Paragraph, If the next Parliament should pursue the Steps of the last, the Nation, in my Opinion, will be so much nearer that Crisis of Time, when English Liberty being brought to the last Extremity, must open the Magazine of original Power. The same Author, speaking of the Family of the Stuarts, calls it the Line of all the World, fam'd for Blood, and that had ravaged the best Families of the Kingdom. And in another Paragraph he says, In short, if Jure Divino comes upon the Stage, the Queen has no more Title to the Crown than my Lord Mayor's Horse: All the People are bound by the Laws of God to depose her as an Usurper, and restore their rightful and lawful King, James the Third. If therefore to defame the whole Line of her Majesty; to assert that the Pretender has an hereditary Right to the Crown; if telling the People, if they do not like the Parliament, they must have Recourse to the Magazine of original Power, be not sounding a Trumpet to Rebellion, and does not make this Doctrine seasonable and necessary to be preach'd at this Time, we submit it to your Lordships. And therefore, I humbly hope, that instead of laying a Brand of indelible Infamy on this Doctrine, your Lordships, for the Preservation of her Majesty, and her Successors, and for the securing the Peace of the Kingdom, will convey this Doctrine as intire, and and in as full Force, down to Posterity, as it was transmitted to your Lordships by your Noble Progenitors.

And as to what one of the Honourable Gentlemen concluded with, viz. That your Lordships would direct what Doctrine the Ministers should preach.

If there be any Doctrine in the Bible not proper to be preach'd; if there be any Doctrine, except that of the Deity, of greater Antiquity than this, which commences from Adam, or is more useful or necessary for the Preservation of the Government, then we submit this Doctrine should be let alone. Upon the whole Matter, I am in your Lordships Judgment, if upon Consideration of what hath been said, your Lordships can be of Opinion, that the Doctor is guilty of the High Crimes and Misdemeanors contain'd in the first Article.

Mr. Dee. MAY it please your Lordships, After so much has been said, and so well press'd by the Gentlemen that have gone before me, of the Doctrine of Non-Resistance (which is so well established by the Opinion of the Fathers of the Church, and founded on the Laws of the Land) I should think myself very unmannerly to spend your Lordships Time, in repeating it in worse Words. I beg Leave only to make a few Remarks: First on some Generals, and then to add a few Words, and draw an Inference or two from one Law that has not yet been taken Notice of.

My Lords, We readily join with the Gentlemen who managed on Behalf of the House of Commons, in desiring your Lordships to assert Fundamentals; and desire your Lordships to consider the antient legal Constitution of the Kingdom. This we readily comply with them in, and doubt not but your Lordships will do it.

My Lords, There was some Notice taken of the Time and Place where this Sermon was preach'd; and it was said by one of the Gentlemen, that it was an improper Time, because it was a Doctrine fit only to be preach'd in the Reign of a bad Prince, but not of a good one. My Lords, indeed I am at a Loss to understand that: I think, if at any Time, it is seasonable when we have so gracious a Princess upon the Throne, much rather than in the Reign of a Tyrant or Usurper.

My Lords, This Doctrine has been made appear to your Lordships to be consonant to the Laws of God, and the Laws of the Land; and when we have laid before your Lordships our Proofs that have been opened, I hope your Lordships will allow we have proved our Case.

The Gentlemen of the other Side said they had proved their Articles: But how? In no other Way than by reading the Sermon, which we hope shall be permitted to speak for itself.

My Lords, It was said, that the Municipal Laws of the Land signify nothing only in Times of Peace. What the Meaning of that is, I know not, unless that the Laws must be silent in the Time of War; but the Way to maintain Peace, and to prevent Blood and Wars at Home, is to preserve our Laws.

My Lords, It has been likewise urg'd as a Maxim, That there can be no Right, but there must be a Remedy to preserve it. And thereupon it was hinted, as if there were some secret Right vested in the People to do something they did not think fit to name. That Saying, My Lords, I take to be a Maxim in the Law, and to relate only to legal Matters, and the Meaning of it to be, That when any Man has a Property, the same Law that gives Property, gives him a Remedy, if the same be invaded. But I never understood that Maxim to be meant of a Remedy by Force; and I am sure, in most Cases, such a Remedy is worse than the Disease.

My Lords, We would not be thought (I am sure no Gentleman of our Side would be thought) in the least to reflect on the Revolution mentioned in the Impeachment; nor does any Thing, as we think, that the Doctor has said in his Sermon, in the least look that Way. The general Position of the utter Illegality of resisting the Supreme Power, does (as it has been observ'd already) imply in it a Condition, (which perhaps may extend to some other Cases;) and, as we say, extends to that of the Revolution.

One of the Managers instanced in the fourth Command, which in general forbids any Work to be done on the Lord's Days; and yet, says he, Works of Necessity and Mercy are allowed to be done on that Day, and are an implied Exception. The like we say of the implied Exception to the general Doctrine laid down by the Doctor of the Illegality of Resistance.

My Lords, Certainly there is no Room to suppose any Reflection to be made on his late Majesty; for surely his Majesty wanted no Excuse for his coming hither; nor could he be guilty of any Thing that we properly call Resistance. He was a Sovereign Prince, and might do what he thought fit. He owed no Allegiance to any one, so could not be said to resist, in the Sense Resistance bears in the Doctor's Sermon, which is the Resistance by Subjects to the Supreme Power.

My Lords, I now beg Leave to mention the Act of the second Year of King William and Queen Mary, intitled, An Act for a general Pardon; by the last Clause whereof it is provided, That nothing in that Act shall extend to pardon, or discharge any one for counselling or procuring the raising War against their Majesties, after the 13th Day of February, 1688, unless such Person shall before the 26th of July take the following Oath. Then follows the Oath of Allegiance. From hence I beg Leave to make an Inference or two: First, That it was the Sense of the Legislature at that Time, that those Persons that contrived or abetted the raising War against their Majesties after they came to the Crown, were guilty of a High Crime, and stood in need of a Pardon. So that if any Thing had shaken the Doctrine of the Illegality of Resistance, here Resistance is made as criminal as it was before. Secondly, It appears by that Clause to be the Opinion of the Legislature, that by the Oath of Allegiance, as it is now framed, this Doctrine of the utter Illegality of Resistance is firmly established. For, my Lords, To what Purpose should that Oath be made the Condition of a Pardon for having resisted, unless they thought that Oath laid an Obligation on the Persons taking it not to do so again?

My Lords, That Construction which some of the Managers for the Commons put on the Doctor's Sermon, that this Notion of Non-Resistance could only be applied to some Body beyond sea, we think to be very hard and strained: I am sure it don't appear from any Thing the Doctor has said in his Sermon; but the contrary plainly appears; for the Doctor doth assert her Majesty's hereditary Right, and yet doth not reflect on the Revolution; for though he speaks of her Majesty's hereditary Right, he does not any where say, that she has no other than an hereditary Right in her. And it was owned by one of the Gentlemen that managed for the House of Commons, that his late Majesty had a single Right by the Act of Settlement; but that her Majesty has a twofold Right, a Right according to the Act of Settlement, and an Hereditary Right too.

My Lords, There has been a great deal of Time spent, therefore I shall only make this one Remark further, that is, That the learned Managers for the House of Commons have drawn very many Inferences, by their Skill and Ingenuity, from Passages in the Doctor's Sermon, which I believe none of your Lordships can think the Doctor ever thought of, when he was composing his Sermon, or delivering it in the Pulpit.

Doctor Henchman. MY Lords, I am likewise assign'd Counsel for Doctor Sacheverell; but if he has been represented by the learned Managers in his proper Colours, if he has been set before your Lordships in a true Light, and with his Mask off, I must beg Leave to say, that nothing less than the Commands of this Honourable House could prevail with any one to appear in his Defence. If he is a Mover of Sedition, and an Underminer of the Protestant Succession and present Establishment; if he has fomented destructive Divisions, and excited his Fellow-Subjects to Arms and Violence, and has taken all Advantages to vent his Seditious Notions in the most publick Manner, I must humbly think that no Body would dare to open his Mouth in his Behalf in the Face of the Government, and before the united Legislature of the whole Kingdom. I protest for myself I would not do it, and I believe I may say the same for all the Gentlemen that have spoke before me.

My Lords, the general Part of these Articles has been already largely spoken to, and I shall therefore apply myself directly to the first Article, and the first Branch of that Article, which has been made the Ground of this whole Accusation, viz. That he does suggest and maintain that the necessary Means used to bring about the late happy Revolution were Odious and Unjustifiable. I must own this is a Charge of a very high Nature, and has been aggravated to the utmost by the great Pains that the Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Commons have taken, and the elaborate Speeches that have been made on this Head.

My Lords, The Justice of the Revolution is too plain to need any Vindication, every one of us is sensible of the happy Effects of it; and therefore for any one to cast black and odious Colours on it, would be, as has been truly said by the honourable Managers, a Reflection on his late Majesty, and must bring a foul Imputation on her present Majesty and Government; which, if the Revolution be Unjustifiable, must be an Usurpation, and all her Subjects Rebels.

My Lords, The Clause made use of to prove this Part of the Article, is in the 11th Page of the Sermon at St. Paul's, and has been often read; The grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar on which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an Absolute and Unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all Things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever. This, my Lords, is the Ground of the Commons Impeachment, because here they say the Doctor condemns all Resistance, and in that the Resistance which was necessary to be made use of at the Revolution.

Whether what is here laid down be agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of England is not my Province to determine, neither shall I now mispend your Lordships time in establishing this Doctrine; that has been already sufficiently done, and the Doctor himself abundantly vindicated, from the Doctrine of St. Paul himself, from the express Doctrine of the Church of England set forth in her Homilies, from the Writings of Bishops and Divines dead and living, from the known and unrepal'd Laws of the Land, and from the Reasonableness of laying down a general Rule without any Exception. What farther Vindication can be necessary? Or how can a good Subject of the Realm, and a true Son of the Church, better make his Defence than from the Laws of the one, and the Doctrine, of the other? But because the great Objection has been, That this Doctrine is here laid down without any Limitation or Exception at all; and being myself of a different Profession from the Gentlemen that have spoke before me, I shall take a different Way in Vindication of this Passage, and beg Leave to follow the Method prescrib'd by one of the learned Managers of the House of Commons. It was said by one of them, Ex ore suo judicabitur. My Lords, let him speak for himself, and then it will be seen if this Passage may not be justified by the very same Methods that have been made use of to accuse him. If nothing will satisfy the Gentlemen of the House of Commons but an Exception, an Exception they shall have, and that out of his own Mouth. It is in the 10th Page, and the beginning of that very Paragraph, where the whole Foundation of this Accusation is laid. But I don't well know whether I may venture to mention it, lest it should subject him to a Prosecution in the Spiritual Court, or the Censure of his Diocesan; but if it may help to acquit him from this Impeachment, I will advise him to run the Risque of any Prosecution elsewhere.

The Clause is this, But, Secondly, Men may be denominated False Brethren, with relation to the State, Government, or Society of which they are Members. The Constitutions of most Governments differing according to their several Frames and Laws upon which they are built and founded, it is impossible to lay down any one universal Rule, as the Scheme and Measure of Obedience, that may square to every one of them.

My Lords, This is an observable Instance of this Gentleman's good Temper and Moderation; nothing can be said more like a good Christian, and a good Subject, and a Man of Temper: He is not here for bringing all Things to his own Rule, but every Government must stand upon its own Foundation, and be govern'd according to its own Rules. But he goes on; Only this Maxim in general, I presume, may be Established, for the Safety, Tranquility, and Support of all Governments, That no Innovation whatsoever should be allowed in the Fundamental Constitution of any State, without a very pressing, nay, unavoidable Necessity for it.

My Lords, In these Words there is a plain Exception made, whenever the Case of an unavoidable Necessity shall happen. No Body will deny but that the Revolution was such an unavoidable Case, and of Necessity, and what can't be reflected on, but with great Satisfaction, and Thanks to GOD for bringing it about. But it seems very strange that this Exception should stand so very full and plain in the very Front of that Paragraph from which the learned Managers have chiefly drawn this Accusation, and yet never be so much as once taken notice of by them. Passages at a much greater Distance have been connected in order to Accuse him; and there there can be no Reason given why the subsequent Passage in the same Paragraph should not be explained by this; why, what in the Beginning is said of all Governments in general, should not be extended to that Part where he speaks particularly of our own Constitution. This, no doubt of it, he had in his Thoughts, and will, I hope, sufficiently vindicate him from this Charge.

I shall trouble your Lordships no longer on this Head, but only observe, that the Doctor in his Answer has put himself upon his Defence, That this Doctrine is agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of England and the Laws of the Land, and we are ready to produce his Vouchers, and make it evident to your Lordships.

Sir Simon Harcourt. My Lords, If we have not already tired your Lordships, there is this wide Difference between the Managers for the House of Commons and us; they desire your Lordships to trust them, and to take their Words in every thing; we humbly beg your Lordships to take our Words in nothing, but that you will give us Leave to lay before you the Testimonies for every thing we have open'd; but they being very long, we humbly submit it to your Lordships, whether it will be proper for us now to produce them. The first Evidence we desire to read is, Some godly and wholesome Doctrine contained in the Homilies; we have my Lords, for your Lordships Ease, collected them by a Person that is ready to swear to them. We humbly submit it to your Lordships, whether it shall be read out of the Writing, or whether the Books themselves shall be produced; we shall observe your Lordships Commands, and proceed which way your Lordships please.

M. Dodd. My Lords, We are ready to observe your Lordships Directions in this Matter: We have collected the Passages out of the Homilies, the Articles, the Sermons, and Acts of Parliament; and have a Person ready to make Oath that they are truly collected. But if there be any Objection, we are ready to refer to the Books themselves, and have them all here ready to produce.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordships please, the Witness may be sworn.

Then Mr. Trap was Sworn.

Lord Chancellor. If you offer any Thing in Evidence, you must take the same Method that the Gentlemen of the House of Commons did; it must be proved, and then delivered in at the Table, and there read.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. My Lords, we have given the Gentlemen that are Counsel for the Prisoner no Disturbance in any thing they have said during their Defence, so that we might come to a Determination as speedily as possible in this Trial; otherwise every Body must think, we had Reason to object to some Things that have been said by the Counsel. That which they are now going to do, is what we think proper to deliberate upon; and, according to former Precedents, we desire to withdraw, and we will attend your Lordships again presently.

Mr. Smith. My Lords, I beg Leave to speak one Word. We have endeavoured to behave ourselves before your Lordships, according to the Duty we owe to the House of Commons, and to your Lordships: We think there is something offered, that is fit for us to consider of. We don't propose more, than for the Managers to withdraw for a few Minutes; for we think we have something to offer to your Lordships.

VOL. V.

Accordingly the Managers withdrew; and then the Lords adjourned to their House above: And in a short time their Lordships being returned, and seated as before, and the Managers being returned to the Place appointed for them at their Lordships Bar; Proclamation for Silence was made by the Serjeant at Arms.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. My Lords, the Managers withdrew for two Reasons; the one, to consider of several Expressions that fell from the Counsel at the Bar, which we had Reason to take Exceptions to; the other was, to consider of the Evidence they offer to your Lordships. For the first; The Managers are so desirous that no Interruption should be given to the Doctor's Counsel in his Defence, that they at present take no notice of it, but reserve that Matter to be taken notice of at such other Time as they shall think proper. As to the Second, The Managers being unwilling the Doctor should be depriv'd of any Thing that his Counsel can fancy is Material for his Defence, they are contented to let them go on in the Way they propos'd; but, to save your Lordships Time, we admit the Books, Sermons and Pamphlets, to be as they have open'd them.

Sir Simon Harcourt. My Lords, We humbly pray they may be read, but we have not open'd the tenth Part of them.

Mr. Dodd. We have collected them, to save your Lordships Time; but we have not open'd them, because we reserv'd them to be read.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The Witness is sworn. Is that a true Copy of what it refers to?

Mr. Trapp. I did compare them with the Originals: It is a Transcript from the Original.

M. Phipps. Are they intire Paragraphs?

Mr. Trapp. They are most of them intire Passages.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, do you object to the Evidence?

Sir Joseph Jekyll. No, my Lords.

Then the LORDS adjourned to their House above.

Saturday, March 4. The Sixth Day.

THE Lords being seated as usual, and the Commons in a Committee of the whole House, and the Managers at their Lordships Bar: the usual Proclamations being also made;

And Dr. Sacheverell appearing at the Bar:

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, You who are Counsel for Doctor Sacheverell were proceeding to your Evidence, and had offered some Papers which you desired to be read in Evidence; and the Gentlemen of the House of Commons did agree to let them be read, as you desired.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, We pray those Papers may be read.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The Defendant does in his Answer assert, "That the Doctrine of the Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, is contained in the Homilies, and approved by many of the Divines of the Church of England:" We desire now to have those Homilies, and the Sermons of those Divines, read.

5 A

Sir

Sir Joseph Jekyll. My Lords, The Gentlemen that open'd for the Doctor, were pleas'd to mention some Homilies, and other Books, one intitled, A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christian Man; which they desir'd might be read; and said, They had collected the Passages out of them, in a Paper which they offer'd to your Lordships. We have look'd into that Paper, and find Extracts out of Gazettes, and other Papers. We are willing to let them read the Homilies, and that other Book call'd, The Erudition of any Christian Man; but when they come to the others, we pray they may produce the Books or Papers themselves.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, We shall observe it accordingly.

Mr. Phipps. We pray we may begin with the Book intitled, The Erudition for any Christian Man.

Clerk reads the Paper Abstract.

'A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christian Man; set furthe by the King's Majesty of England, &c. Anno 34 H. VIII.

In the Exposition of the Fyfte Commandment.

Fol. 113. 'And by this Commandment also, Subjects be bounde not to withdrawe their said Fealtie, Trough, Love, and Obedience towards their Prince, for any Cause whatsoever it be; ne for any Cause they may conspire against his Person, ne do any Thing towards the Hindrance or Hurt thereof, nor of his Estate.

In the Exposition of the Syxte Commandment.

Fol. 187. 9. 'Moreover, no Subjects may draw their Swords against their Prince; for any Cause, whatsoever it be.

Mr. Dodd. If your Lordships please, that we may now read several Passages in the Homilies.

Clerk reads.] The Second Part of the Sermon Of Obedience, Pa. 110.

'Whereby Christ taught us plainly, that even the wicked Rulers have their Power and Authority from God; and therefore it is not lawful for their Subjects to withstand them, altho' they abuse their Power.

Ibid. p. 113. 'But nevertheless, in that Case we may not in any wise withstand violently, or rebel against Rulers, or make any Insurrection, Sedition or Tumults, either by Force of Arms, or otherwise, against the Anointed of the Lord, or any of his Officers; but we must in such Case patiently suffer all Wrongs and Injuries, referring the Judgment of our Cause only to God.

The Third Part of the Sermon of Obedience, Page 114.

'Yee have heard before, in this Sermon of good Order and Obedience, manifestly prov'd, both by the Scriptures and Examples, that all Subjects are bounden to obey their Magistrates, and for no Cause to resist, or withstand, or rebel, or make any Sedition against them, yea altho' they be wicked Men.

First Part of the Sermon against wilful Rebellion, Page 589.

'What shall Subjects do then? Shall they obey valiant, stout, wise and good Princes; and condemn, disobey, and rebel against Children being their Princes, or against undiscreeit and evil Governors? God forbid! For, first, What a perillous Thing were it to commit unto the Subjects the Judgment which Prince is wise and godly, and his Government good, and which is otherwise;

'As tho' the Foot must judge of the Head! An Enterprize very heinous, and must needs breed Rebellion.

Ibid. p. 590. 'And whereas indeed a Rebel is worfe than the worst Prince; and Rebellion worfe than the worst Government of the worst Prince: that hitherto hath been.

Second Part of the Sermon against wilful Rebellion, Page 600.

'Now let David answer to such Demands, as Men desirous of Rebellion do use to make: Shall not we, especially being so good Men as we are, rise and rebel against a Prince hated of God, and God's Enemy; and therefore like not to prosper either in War or Peace, but to be hurtful and pernicious to the Commonwealth? No, saith good and godly David.

Ibid. p. 601. 'But, say they, we shall not rise and rebel against so unkind a Prince, nothing considering or regarding our true, faithful and painful Service, or the Safeguard of our Posterity? No, saith good David.

Ibid. 'Shall we not rise and rebel against our known, mortal, and deadly Enemy, that seeketh our Lives? No, saith godly David.

Ibid. 'Shall we not assemble an Army of such good Fellows as we are, and by hazarding of our Lives, and the Lives of such as shall withstand us, and withal hazarding the whole Estate of our Country, remove so naughty a Prince? No, saith godly David.

Ibid. 'What shall we then do to an evil, to an unkind Prince, an Enemy to us, hated of God, hurtful to the Commonwealth, &c? Lay no violent Hand upon him, saith good David; but let him live, until God appoint and work his End, either by natural Death, or in War, by lawful Enemies, not by traiterous Subjects.

Ibid. p. 602. 'If King David would make these Answers, as by his Deeds and Words recorded in the Holy Scriptures indeed he doth make, unto all such Demands concerning Rebelling against evil Princes, unkind Princes, cruel Princes, Princes that be to their good Subjects mortal Enemies, Princes that are out of God's Favour, and so hurtful, or like to be hurtful for the Commonwealth."

Mr. Dodd. If your Lordships please now, that we may read the thirty fifth Article of the Church of England, which approves these Homilies.

Mr. Phipps. We open'd, that these Homilies were approv'd of by the Articles of the Church of England, as containing sound and wholesome Doctrine: We pray the thirty fifth Article may be read.

Clerk reads.] Article the thirty fifth. Of Homilies.

'The Second Book of Homilies, the several Titles whereof we have joined under this Article, doth contain a godly and wholesome Doctrine, and necessary for these Times; as doth the former Book of Homilies, which were set forth in the Time of Edward the Sixth. And therefore we judge them to be read in Churches by the Ministers, diligently and distinctly, that they may be understood of the People. The Names of the Homilies. 1. Of the right Use of the Church. 2. Against Peril of Idolatry. 3. Of repairing and keeping clean of Churches. 4. Of good Works; First, of Fasting. 5. Against Gluttony ‘ tony and Drunkenness. 6. Against Excess of Apparel. 7. Of Prayer. 8. Of the Place and Time of Prayer. 9. That Common Prayers and Sacraments ought to be ministered in a known Tongue. 10. Of the Reverend Estimation of God’s Word. 11. Of Alms-doing. 12. Of the Nativity of Christ. 13. Of the Passion of Christ. 14. Of the Resurrection of Christ. 15. Of the worthy Receiving of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. 16. Of the Gifts of the Holy Ghost. 17. For the Rogation-Days. 18. Of the State of Matrimony. 19. Of Repentance. 20. Against Idleness. 21. Against Rebellion.

Mr. Phipps. By the Statute of 13 Eliz. these Articles are confirmed: I believe the Gentlemen of the House of Commons will allow of it.

Mr. Dodd. They are confirmed by the Act of Uniformity; and we think we need not spend your Lordships Time in reading it.

Sir Jos. Jekyll. My Lords, We told them, that we were willing to admit all they open’d; and then we admit this.

Mr. Dodd. If your Lordships please, we will go on with the Abstract.

Mr. Phipps. The Gentlemen say, that they admit us to read what we open’d. Now what we are going to read next, we did not open; and therefore we submit it to your Lordships, whether we shall read out of the Abstract, or produce the Book itself?

Sir Jos. Jekyll. My Lords, We desire to know what it is they would read?

Mr. Phipps. It is Bishop Overall’s Convocation-Book.

Mr. Dee. If your Lordships please, we shall produce the Book; because there are some broken Passages collected, and there may be some Objection, if the Book be not produced.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We hope the whole Canon which is mentioned in this Book, tho’ it is recited by Parcels, shall be read,

Clerk reads.] ‘ And therefore —

Sir Jos. Jekyll. My Lords, They are reading a Passage out of this Book. We might object, That a Printed Book is no Proof of a Canon; and that they ought to make a Legal Proof of it. But that which we object, is, That they begin in the Middle of a Sentence: Your Lordships observe, the Clerk begins with the Words, And therefore. I pray, he may read at the Beginning of a Sentence.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, Where the Clerk began, was the Beginning of that Canon; but it being at the End of another Canon, is the Reason that it begins And therefore.

Clerk reads.] ‘ And therefore, if Bishop Overall, p. 107. ‘ Man shall affirm under Colour of
Can. 1. ‘ any thing that is in the Scriptures, ‘ either that the Doctrine of Grace in

‘ the New Testament doth more abo‘ lish the Rules of Nature, or Moral Law of God, ‘ than it did in the Old; or, that thro’ Faith the ‘ said Law was not rather established, than in any ‘ sort impeach’d; or, that because as many as be‘ lieve are redeem’d, and made free from the ‘ Curse of the Law, they are therefore exempted,
‘ and free from the Obedience of the Law; or,
‘ that by the Incarnation of our Saviour Christ, ‘ Obedience to the Fifth Commandment, touching ‘ Honours due to Parents and Princes, was in any ‘ sort impeached, the rest of the Law being esta‘ blished; or, that our Saviour Christ having un-

Vol. V.

‘ dertaken the Fulfilling of the whole Law, (as far ‘ forth, at the least, as ever Mankind was bound to ‘ have fulfilled it) came short in this one Law, by ‘ exempting himself from any Obedience due to ‘ the Civil Magistrate; or, that he, having tied ‘ himself according to the said Commandment, as ‘ well to the Obedience of the Civil Magistrate, as ‘ the Obedience which was due to his Parents, did ‘ not, whilst he liv’d in the World, fulfil the Law ‘ wholly concerning them both; or, that he did any ‘ way, or at any Time, encourage the Jews, or any ‘ other, directly or indirectly, to Rebel, for any ‘ Cause whatsoever, against the Roman Emperor, or ‘ any of the Subordinate Magistrates; or, that he ‘ did not very willingly, both himself pay Tribute ‘ to Cæsar, and also advise the Jews so to do; or,
‘ that when he willed the Jews to pay Tribute to ‘ Cæsar, including therein their Duty of Obedience ‘ unto him, he did not therein deal plainly and sin‘ cerely, but meant secretly that they should be ‘ bound no longer to be obedient unto him, but ‘ until by Force they should be able to resist him;
‘ or, that he did not utterly and truly condemn all ‘ Devices, Conferences and Resolutions whatsoever, ‘ either in his own Apostles, or in any other Per‘ sons, for the using of Force against Civil Autho‘ rity; or, that it is, or can be more lawful for any ‘ private Persons, either of St. Peter’s Calling, or
‘ of any other Profession, to draw their Swords ‘ against Authority, though in their rash Zeal they ‘ should hold it lawful so to do, for the Preserva‘ tion of Religion, than it was for St. Peter for ‘ the Preservation of his Master’s Life; or, that
‘ by Christ’s Words above-mention’d, all Subjects
‘ (of what sort soever) without Exception, ought ‘ not, by the Law of God, to perish with the ‘ Sword, that take and use the Sword, for any ‘ Cause, against Kings and Sovereign Princes, un‘ der whom they were born, or under whose Juris‘ diction they do inhabit; or that seeing our Sa‘ viour Christ would not have the Samaritans to be ‘ destroyed with Fire from Heaven, altho’ they ‘ were at that time divided in Religion from the ‘ Jews, and refused to receive him in Person, it is ‘ not to be ascribed to the Spirit of Satan for any ‘ private Men to attempt by Gunpowder, and Fire
‘ from Hell, to blow up and destroy their Sove‘ reigns, and the whole State of the Country where ‘ they were born and bred, because in their Con-‘ ceits they refused some part of Christ’s Doctrine
‘ and Government; or, that Christ did not well,
‘ and as the said Fifth Commandment did require,
‘ in submitting himself as he did to Authority, al‘ though he was first sent for with ‘ Swords and Staves, as if he had Matt. xxvi. 55.
‘ been a Thief, and then afterward ‘ carried to Pilate, and by him (albeit he found no ‘ Evil in him) condemn’d to Death; or, that by ‘ any Doctrine of Example which Christ ever taught,
‘ or hath left upon good Record, it can be prov’d ‘ Lawful to any Subjects, for any Cause of what ‘ Nature soever, to decline either the Authority
‘ and Jurisdiction of their Sovereign Princes, or
‘ of any their lawful Deputies and inferior Magi‘ strates ruling under them: He doth greatly ‘ err.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We opened, that from the Time of the Reformation this had been the Doctrines of the Church. We desire to begin, and shew it was Archbishop Cranmer’s Opinion: In Strype’s Memorial of Archbishop Cranmer.

Clerk reads.] 'The second Exhortation is, That next unto God you obey your King and Queen willingly and gladly, without Murder or Grudging, and not for Fear of them only, but much more for the Fear of God. Knowing that they be God's Ministers, appointed by God to rule and govern you; and therefore whoso resisteth them, resisteth God's Ordinance.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We now offer a Declaration of Bishop Ferrar, Bishop Hooper, Bishop Coverdale, and about nine other Bishops, which is in Fox's History.

Clerk reads.] 'Humbly requiring, Vol. III. p. 101. 'and in the Bowels of our Saviour Jesus Christ, beseeching all that fear God, to behave themselves as obedient Subjects to the Queen's Highness, and the superior Powers which are ordained of God, under her; rather, after our Example, to give their Heads to the Block, than in any Point to rebel, or once to Mutter against the Lord's anointed.

Mr. Dodd. If your Lordships please, he may read the Names of those Persons that have subscribed it at the End of it.

Clerk reads.]

The 8th Day of May,
Anno Dom. 1554.

'The Names of the prison'd Preachers subscribing to this Declaration, Robert Menaven, alias Robert Ferrar, Rowland Taylor, John Philpott, John Bradford, John Wigorne, and Glouc. Episcopus, alias John Hooper, Edward Crome, John Rogers, Laurence Saunders, Edmund Lawrence, J. P. T. M. — To these Things abovesaid do I Miles Coverdale, late of Exon, consent and agree with these nine afflicted Brethren, being Prisoners, mine own Hand.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The next we offer is the Opinion of Bishop Jewell, in his Defence of the Apology for the Church of England, in Answer to Mr. Harding.

Clerk reads.] 'We teach the People as St. Paul doth, to be subject to the higher Powers, not only for Fear, but also for Conscience. We teach them, that whoso striketh with the Swerde by private Authority, shall perish with the Swerde. If the Prince happen to be wicked, or cruel, or burthenous, we teach them to say with St. Ambrose, Arma nostra sunt Preces & Lachrymæ, Tears and Prayers be our Weapons.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, The next is Mr. Hooker, in his Ecclesiastical Polity.

Clerk reads.] 'That Subjection which we owe to lawful Powers, doth not only import, that we should be under them by Order of our State, but that we shew all Submission towards them, both by Honour and Obedience. He that resisteth them resisteth God. And resisted they be, if either the Authority itself, which they exercise, be denied; as by Anabaptists all secular Jurisdictions; or if Resistance be made but only so far forth as doth touch their Persons, which are invested with Power; (for they which said Nolumus hunc regnare, did not utterly exclude Regiment; nor did they wish all Kind of Government clearly removed, which would not at the first have David to govern;) or if that which they do by Virtue of their Power, namely, their Laws, Edicts, Services, or other Acts of Jurisdiction, contrary to the blessed Apostles most holy Rule, Obeys them who have the Oversight of you, Heb. xiii. 17. be not suffered to take Effect; or if they do take Effect, yet is not the Will of God thereby satisfied neither, as long as that which we do is contemptuously or repiningly done, because we can do no otherwise. In such sort the Israelites in the Desert obey'd Moses; and were, notwithstanding, deservedly plagued for Disobedience. The Apostle's Precept therefore is, Be subject even for God's Sake; be subject not for Fear, but of mere Conscience, knowing, that he which resisteth them, purchaseth to himself Condemnation.

M. Gen. Stanhope. My Lords, since Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity is before your Lordships, and they have read that Part, I pray that from pag. 444. to the latter End of pag. 446. may likewise be read.

Mr. Dodd. We submit it to your Lordships, whether it is proper to break into our Defence? or whether the Gentlemen of the House of Commons will read what they think proper when they come to reply? Your Lordships know the Course in other Courts is to give our Evidence intire.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, The Indulgence of the Managers, to let the Doctor's Counsel go into this Evidence, is very great; (for I believe such sort of Evidence was never known before in any Court of Justice whatsoever;) but surely, as they have called this Witness, for so I may term the Book they were reading, we may be at Liberty to cross-examine that Witness; perhaps the Place we desire to have read, may explain the Passages read by them.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We submit to it.

M. Gen. Stanhope. Pray what Edition is that Book?

Clerk. It is printed in 1705.

M. Gen. Stanhope. My Lords, If we should be mistaken in the Edition, I hope we shall not be hindered in our Reply from reading those Passages in the Edition which I have consulted.

Clerk reads.] 'Again, on whom the same is bestowed at Mens Discretions, Fol. 444. they likewise do hold it by divine Right. If God in his revealed Word hath appointed such Power to be, altho' himself extraordinarily bestow it not, but leave the Appointment of Persons to Men; yea, albeit God do neither appoint nor assign the Person; nevertheless, when Men have assigned and established both, who doth doubt but that sundry Duties and Affairs depending thereupon, are prescribed by the Word of God, and consequently by that very Right to be exerted? For Example sake, the Power which Roman Emperors had over foreign Provinces, was not a Thing which the Law of God did ever institute; neither was Tiberius Caesar by especial Commission from Heaven therewith invested; and yet Payment of Tribute unto Caesar, being now made Emperor, is the plain Law of Jesus Christ unto Kings by human Right; Honour by very divine Right is due. Man's Ordinances are many Times proposed as Grounds in the Statutes of God. And

And therefore, of what Kind soever the Means be whereby Governors are lawfully advanc'd to their States, as we by the Laws of God stand bound meekly to acknowledge them for God's Lieutenants, and do confess their Power his; so by the same Law they are both authoriz'd and requir'd to use that Power, as far as it may be in any State available to his Honour. The Law appointeth no Man to be a Husband; but if a Man hath betaken himself unto that Condition, it giveth him Power and Authority over his own Wife. That the Christian World should be ordered by the Kingly Regiment, the Law of God doth not any where command; and yet the Law of God doth give them, which once are exalted unto that Place of Estate, right to exact at the Hands of their Subjects general Obedience in whatsoever Affairs their Power may serve to command; and God doth ratify Works of that Sovereign Authority, which Kings have received by Men. This is therefore the Right whereby Kings do hold their Power; but yet in what Sort the same doth rest and abide in them, it somewhat behoveth farther to search; where, that we be not enforced to make over large Discourses about the different Conditions of Sovereign or Supreme Power, that which we speak of Kings shall be in respect of the State, and according to the Nature of this Kingdom, where the People are in no Subjection, but such as willingly themselves have condescended unto for their own most Behoof and Security. In Kingdoms therefore of this Quality, the highest Governor hath indeed universal Dominion, but with Dependency upon that whole intire Body, over the several Parts whereof he hath Dominion; so that it standeth for an Axiom in this Case, the King is Major singulus, universis Minor. The King's Dependency we do not construe as some have done, we are of opinion, that no Man's Birth can make him a King; but every particular Person advanced to such Authority hath, at his Entrance into his Reign, the same bestowed on him as an Estate, in Condition, by the voluntary Deed of the People in whom it doth lie, to put by any one, and to prefer some other before him better liked of, or judged fitter for the Place; and that the Party so rejected hath no Injury done unto him; no, altho' the same be done in a Place where the Crown doth go de jure, by Succession, and to a Person which is capital, and hath apparently, if Blood be respected, the nearest Right. They plainly affirm, in all well appointed Kingdoms, the Custom evermore hath been, and is, that Children succeed not their Parents 'till the People, after a Sort, have created them a-new; neither that they grow to their Fathers as natural and proper Heirs, but are then to be reckoned for Kings, when at the Hands of such as represent the King's Majesty, they have by Sceptre and a Diadem received as it were the Investiture of a Kingly Power: Their very Words are, "That where such Power is settled into a Family or Kindred, the Stock itself is thereby chosen, but not the Twig that springeth of it. The next of the Stock unto him that reigneth, are not through nearness of Blood made Kings; but rather set forth to stand for the Kingdom: Where Regal Dominion is hereditary, it is notwithstanding (if we look to the Persons which have it) altogether elective". To this Purpose are selected Heaps of Scriptures concerning the solemn Coronation or Inauguration of Saul, David, of Solomon, and others, by the Nobles; Antients, and People of the Commonwealth of Israel: As if these Solemnities were a Kind of Deed, whereby the Right of Dominion is given; which strange, untrue, and unnatural Conceits, set Abroad by Seedsmen of Rebellion, only to animate unquiet Spirits, and to feed them with Possibility of aspiring to Thrones, if they can win the Hearts of the People, what hereditary Title soever any other before them may have; I say, unjust and insolent Positions, I would not mention, were it not thereby to make the Countenance of Truth more orient; for unless we will openly proclaim Defiance unto all Law, Equity and Reason, we must (there is no Remedy) acknowledge, that in Kingdoms, hereditary Birth gives Right unto Sovereign Dominion; and the Death of the Predecessor puts the Successor by Blood in Seisin. Those publick Solemnities before specified, do but serve for an open Testification of the Inheritor's Right, or belonging unto the Form of inducting him into Possession of that Thing he hath Right unto. Therefore, in case it doth happen, that without Right of Blood, a Man in such wise be possessed, all these new Elections and Investings are utterly void; they make him no indefeasible Estate, the Inheritor by Blood may dispossess him as an Usurper. The Case thus standing, albeit we judge it a Thing most true, that Kings, even Inheritors, do hold their Right in the Power of Dominion, with Dependency upon the whole Body Politick, over which they have Rule as Kings; yet so it may not be understood, as if such Dependency did grow; for that every Supreme Government doth personally take from thence his Power, by way of Gift, bestow'd of their own free Accord upon him at the Time of his Entrance into the said Place of his Sovereign Government. But the Case of Dependency is that first original Conveyance when Power was deriv'd from the Whole into one; to pass from him unto them, whom out of him, Nature, by lawful Births, should produce, and no natural or legal Inability make incapable. "Neither can any Man with Reason think, but that the first Institution of Kings is a sufficient Consideration; wherefore their Power should always depend on that from which it always flows: By original Influence of Power from the Body unto the King, is the Cause of King's Dependency in Power upon the Body". By Dependency we mean Subordination and Subjection; a manifest Token of which Dependency may be this: As there is no more certain Argument that Lands are held under any as Lords, than if we see that such Lands, in Defect of Heirs, fall unto them by Escheat: In like Manner, it doth follow rightly, that seeing Dominion, when there is none to inherit it, it returneth into the Body; therefore they which before were Inheritors thereof, did hold it with Dependency upon the Body: So that by comparing the Body with the Head, as touching Power, it seemeth always to reside in both; fundamentally and radically in the one, in the other derivatively; in one the Habitat, in the other the Art of Power. May a Body Politick then at all Times, withdraw in whole or in part, the Influence of Dominion, which passeth from it, if Inconveniences do grow thereby? It must be presumed, that Supreme Governors will not in such Case oppose themselves, and be stiff in detaining that, the Use whereof is with publick Detriment. But surely without their Consent, I see not how the Body by any just Means should be able to help itself, saving when Dominion doth escheat; such things therefore must be thought upon upon beforehand, that Power may be limited e'er it be granted; which is the next Thing we are to consider.

Mr. Dodd. We now produce Bishop Andrews's Sermons.

Clerk reads.] 'To deprive or depose them? Sure where the worst is reckoned that can be of them, Clamunt ad Dominum is all I find, 1 Sam. viii. 18. No Per to do it but he. By him, and by none but by him, they be; by him, and by none but by him, they cease to be.

Mr. Phipps. We desire to read another Passage out of Mr. Hooker, in a Treatise of Church Government.

Clerk reads.] 'A Treatise of Church Government: To which is added a Treatise of the Regal Power, and of the Novelty of the Doctrine of Resistance, published by Dr. Bernard in his Clavi Trabales.

Lord Chancellor. This is a Collection of the Works of several Persons; so that it don't appear whose Works these are that you are reading.

Mr. Phipps. That which we offer to be read is Mr. Hooker's, and is left out of the Book which was printed before.

Clerk reads.] 'There is a Supreme Head of Justice whereunto all are subject, but itself in Subjection to none; which Kind of Pre-eminence, if some ought to have in a Kingdom, who but the King shall have it? Kings therefore no Man can have lawful Power and Authority to judge; if private Men offend, there is the Magistrate over them, which judgeth; if Magistrates, they have their Prince; if Princes, there is Heaven, a Tribunal before which they shall appear; on Earth they are not accountable to any.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We offer Doctor Jackson's, and Bishop Usher's Opinion in this Matter. And first Doctor Jackson.

Clerk reads.] 'He that is a King or Supreme Magistrate, by just and lawful Title, may not be thus resisted, albeit he exercise his Power tyrannically.

Mr. Phipps. The next is Archbishop Usher, in a Treatise called, The Power communicated by God to the Prince, and the Obedience required of the Subject, &c.

Clerk reads.] 'But if Mens Hands be thus tied (will some say) no Man's State can be secure: Nay, the whole Frame of the Commonwealth would be in Danger to be subverted and utterly ruin'd by the unbridled Lust of a distemper'd Governor.

I answer, God's Word is clear in the Point, Whoever resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance of God, and they that resist, shall receive to themselves Damnation; and thereby a Necessity is imposed upon us, of being subject even for Conscience sake, which may not be avoided by the Pretext of any ensuing Mischief whatsoever.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We offer next the Authority of Mr. Chillingworth, and we need say no more of him than to mention that it is Mr. Chillingworth; and his Character is so established by the Lord Clarendon, that we need say no more of it.

Clerk reads.] 'They that make no Scruple at all of fighting with his Sacred Majesty, and shooting Muskets and Ordnance at him (which sure have not the Skill to chuse a Subject from a King) to the extreme Hazard of his Sacred Person, whom by all possible Obligations they are bound to defend, do they know, think you, the general Rule without Exception or Limitation left by the Holy Ghost for our Direction in all such Cases, Who can lift up his Hand against the Lord's anointed, and be innocent? 1 Sam. xxvi. 9. Or do they consider his Command in the Proverbs of Solomon, My Son, fear God and the King, and meddle not with them that desire Change? Prov. xxiv. 21. Or his Counsel in the Book of Ecclesiastes, I counsel thee to keep the King's Commandment, and that in regard of the Oath of God? Ecclef. viii. 2. Or because they possibly may pretend that they are exempted from, or unconcerned in the Commands of Obedience delivered in the Old Testament: Do they know and remember the Precept given to all Christians by St. Peter, Submit yourselves to every Ordinance of Man for the Lord's Sake, whether it be to the King as Supreme, or unto Governors, as unto them that are sent by him? Or that terrible Sanction of the same Command, They that resist shall receive to themselves Damnation, left us by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, who then were the miserable Subjects of the worst King, the worst man, nay, I think, I may add truly, the worst Beast in the World; that so all Rebels' Mouths might be stopt for ever, and left without all Colour or Pretence whatsoever to justify the Resistance of Sovereign Power?

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The next we offer is Archbishop Bramhall, sometime Bishop of Armagh.

Clerk reads.] 'The same Oath binds us to defend him against all Conspiracies and Attempts whatsoever, which shall be made against his Person or Crown; to defend him, much more therefore not to offend him, against all Conspiracies and Attempts whatsoever. That Oath which binds us to defend him against all Attempts whatsoever, presupposeth that no Attempt against him can be justified by Law, whether these Attempts be against his Person or his Crown.

Clerk reads.] 'If a Sovereign shall persecute his Subjects for not doing his unjust Commands, yet it is not lawful to resist by raising Arms against him, They that resist shall receive to themselves Damnation. But they ask, Is there no Limitation? I answer, Ubi Lex non distinguit, nec nos distinguere debemus. How shall we limit where God hath not limited, or distinguish where he hath not distinguish'd?

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, The next is Bishop Sanderson.

Clerk reads.] ' No Conjunction of Mr. Phipps. My Lords, Doctor Sacheverell being educated in the University of Oxford, we offer the Decrees of that University touching this Matter. They were publish'd in the Gazette the 26th of July 1683, by Authority.

Clerk reads.] Numb. 1845.
 The London Gazette. Publish'd by Authority.
 From Monday July 23. to Thursday July 26, 1683.

' Whitehall, July 24. This Day was presented ' to his Majesty the following Judgment and De' cree of the University of Oxford, pass'd in their ' Convocation, on Saturday the 21st Instant.

' The Judgment and Decree of the University of ' Oxford, pass'd in their Convocation, July 21,
 ' 1683, against certain pernicious Books, and dam-
 ' nable Doctrines, destructive to the Sacred Persons
 ' of Princes, their State and Government, and of ' all Human Society.

' Altho' the barbarous Assassination lately enter-
 ' prized against the Person of his Sacred Majesty, ' and his Royal Brother, engage all our Thoughts to ' reflect with utmost Detestation and Abhorrence on
 ' that execrable Villany, hateful to God and Man;
 ' and pay our due Acknowledgments to the Divine
 ' Providence, which by extraordinary Methods
 ' brought it to pass, That the Breath of our No-' strils, the Anointed of the Lord, is not taken in ' the Pit which was prepared for him; and that ' under his Shadow we continue to live, and enjoy
 ' the Blessings of his Government; yet notwith' standing we find it to be a necessary Duty at this ' Time to search into, and lay open those impious
 ' Doctrines, which having of late been studiously
 ' disseminated, gave Rise and Growth to these ne' farious Attempts, and pass upon them our solemn ' publick Censure and Decree of Condemnation.

' Therefore, to the Honour of the Holy and undi' vided Trinity, the Preservation of Catholick Truth
 ' in the Church, and that the King's Majesty may ' be secured both from the Attempts of open bloody ' Enemies, and Machinations of treacherous Here-
 ' ticks and Schismatics; We the Vice-Chancellor,
 ' Doctors, Proctors, and Masters, Regent and not
 ' Regent, met in Convocation, in the accustomed ' Manner, Time and Place, on Saturday the one
 ' and twentieth Day of July in the Year one ' thousand six hundred and eighty three, concerning

' certain Propositions contain'd in divers Books and ' Writings, publish'd in the English, and also the ' Latin Tongue, repugnant to the Holy Scriptures,
 ' Decrees of Councils, Writings of the Fathers,
 ' the Faith and Profession of the Primitive Church;
 ' and also destructive of the Kingly Government,
 ' the Safety of his Majesty's Person, the publick
 ' Peace, the Laws of Nature, and Bonds of Human ' Society, by our unanimous Assent and Consent,
 ' have decreed and determined in Manner and
 ' Form following:

The First Proposition.

' All Civil Authority is derived originally from
 ' the people.

The Second.

' There is a mutual Compact, tacit or express,
 ' between a Prince and his Subjects; and that if
 ' he perform not his Duty, they are discharged
 ' from theirs.

The Third.

' That if lawful Governors become Tyrants, or ' govern otherwise than by the Laws of God and ' Man they ought to do, they forfeit the Right they ' had unto their Government. Lex Rex. Buchanan de Jure Regni. Vindicie contra Tyrannos Bellarmine de Consiliis. De Pontificie Milton. Goodwin. Baxter. H. C.

The Fourth.

' The Sovereignty of England is in the three ' Estates, viz. King, Lords and Commons. The ' King has but a Co-ordinate Power, and may be ' over-ruled by the other two. Lex Rex. Hunton of a limited and mixed Monarchy. Baxter H. C.
Polit. Catechis.

The Fifth.

' Birth-right and Proximity of Blood give no Ti' tle to Rule or Government; and it is lawful to ' preclude the next Heir from his Right and Succes' sion to the Crown. Lex Rex. Hunt's Postscript.
Doleman's History of Succession. Julian the Apostate. Mene Tekel.

The Sixth.

' It is lawful for Subjects, without the Consent,
 ' and against the Command of the Supreme Magi' strate, to enter into Leagues, Covenants and As' sociations, for Defence of themselves and their ' Religion. Solemn League and Covenant. Late Association.

The Seventh.

' Self-preservation is the fundamental Law of ' Nature, and supercedes the Obligation of all ' others, whensoever they stand in Competition with
 ' it. Hobbs de Cive Leviathan.

The Eighth.

' The Doctrine of the Gospel concerning patient
 ' Suffering of Injuries, is not inconsistent with vio' lent resisting of the higher Powers, in case of ' Persecution for Religion. Lex Rex. Julian Apo- state. Apolog. Relat.

The Ninth.

' There lies no Obligation upon Christians to ' Passive Obedience, when the Prince commands
 ' any Thing against the Laws of our Country;
 ' and the Primitive Christians rather chose to die
 ' than resist, because Christianity was not settled
 ' by the Laws of the Empire. Julian Apostate.

The Tenth.

' Possession and Strength give a Right to go' vern; and Success in a Cause or Enterprize, pro' claims it to be lawful and just. To pursue it, is ' to comply with the Will of God; because it is ' to follow the Conduct of his Providence. Hobbs
Owen's

Owen's Sermon before the Regicides, Jan. 31, 1648.
Baxter. Jenkins's Petition, Octob. 1651.

The Eleventh.

' In the State of Nature there is no Difference between Good and Evil, Right and Wrong. The State of Nature is a State of War, in which every Man hath a Right to all Things.

The Twelfth.

' The Foundation of Civil Authority is this National Right, which is not given, but left to the Supreme Magistrate upon Mens entering into Societies; and not only a Foreign Invader, but a Domestick Rebel, puts himself again into a State of Nature, to be proceeded against, not as a Subject, but an Enemy; and consequently, acquires by his Rebellion the same Right over the Life of his Prince, as the Prince (for the most heinous Crimes) has over the Life of his own Subjects.

The Thirteenth.

' Every Man, after his entering into a Society, retains a Right of defending himself against Force, and cannot transfer that Right to the Commonwealth, when he consents to that Union whereby a Commonwealth is made: And in case a great many Men together have already resisted the Commonwealth, for which every one of them expecteth Death; they have Liberty then to join together, to assist and defend one another. Their bearing of Arms, subsequent to the first Breach of their Duty, tho' it be to maintain what they have done, is no new unjust Act; and if it be only to defend their Persons, is not unjust at all.

The Fourteenth.

' An Oath superadds no Obligation to Pact, and a Pact obliges no farther than it is credited; and consequently, if a Prince gives any Indication that he does not believe the Promises of Fealty and Allegiance made by any of his Subjects, they are thereby free from their Subjection; and notwithstanding their Pacts and Oaths, may lawfully rebel against, and destroy their Sovereign. Hobbs de Cive Leviathan.

The Fifteenth.

' If a People, that by Oath and Duty are oblig'd to a Sovereign, shall sinfully dispossess him, and (contrary to their Covenants) chuse and covenant with another; they may be obliged by their later Covenants, notwithstanding their former. Baxter. H. C.

The Sixteenth.

' All Oaths are unlawful, and contrary to the Word of God. Quakers.

The Seventeenth.

' An Oath obligeth not in the Sense of the Imposer, but the Takers. Sheriffs Case.

The Eighteenth.

' Dominion is founded in Grace.

The Nineteenth.

' The Powers of this World are Usurpations upon the Prerogative of Jesus Christ; and it is the Duty of God's People to destroy them, in order to the setting Christ upon his Throne. Fifth Monarchy-men.

The Twentieth.

' The Presbyterian Government is the Sceptre of Christ's Kingdom, to which Kings as well as others are bound to submit; and the King's Supremacy in Ecclesiastical Affairs, asserted by the Church of England, is injurious to Christ, the sole King and Head of his Church. Altare Damascenum. Apolog. Relat. Hist. Indulg. Cartwright. Travers.

The Twenty first.

' It is not lawful for Superiors to impose any Thing in the Worship of God, that is not antecedently necessary.

The Twenty second.

' The Duty of not offending a weak Brother, is inconsistent with all Human Authority of making Laws concerning indifferent Things. Protestant Reconciler.

The Twenty third.

' Wicked Kings and Tyrants ought to be put to Death; and if the Judges and inferior Magistrates will not do their Office, the Power of the Sword devolves to the People: If the major Part of the People refuse to exercise this Power, then the Ministers may excommunicate such a King; after which it is lawful for any of the Subjects to kill him, as the People did Athaliah, and Jehu. Jezebel. Buchanan. Knox. Goodman. Gilby. Jesuits.

The Twenty fourth.

' After the Sealing of the Scripture Canon, the People of God in all Ages are to expect new Revelations for a Rule of their Actions; and it is lawful for a private Man, having an inward Motion from God, to kill a Tyrant. Quakers and other Entbusiasts. Goodman.

The Twenty fifth.

' The Example of Phineas is to us instead of a Command; for what God hath commanded or approved in one Age, must needs oblige in all. Goodman. Knox. Naphtali.

The Twenty sixth.

' King Charles the First was lawfully put to Death, and his Murderers were the blessed Instruments of God's Glory in their Generation. Milton. Goodwin. Owen.

The Twenty seventh.

' King Charles the First made War upon his Parliament; and in such a Case the King may not only be resisted, but he ceaseth to be King. Baxter.

' We Decree, Judge, and Declare all and every of these Propositions to be false, seditious, and impious, and most of them to be also heretical and blasphemous, infamous to Christian Religion, and destructive of all Government in Church and State.

' We farther Decree, That the Books which contain the aforesaid Propositions and impious Doctrines, are fitted to deprave good Manners, corrupt the Minds of unwary Men, stir up Seditions and Tumults, overthrow States and Kingdoms, and lead to Rebellion, Murder of Princes, and Atheism itself: And therefore we interdict all Members of the University from the Reading of the said Books, under the Penalties in the Statutes express'd. We also order the said recited Books to be publicly burnt by the Hand of our Marshal, in the Court of our Schools.

' Likewise we order, That in perpetual Memory hereof, these our Decrees shall be entred in the Registry of our Convocation; and that Copies of them being communicated to the several Colleges and Halls within this University, they be there publicly affix'd in the Libraries, Refectories, or other fit Places, where they may be seen and read of all.

' Lastly, We command and strictly injoin all and singular the Readers, Tutors, Catechists, and others to whom the Care and Trust of Institution of Youth is committed, that they diligently instruct ‘struct and ground their Scholars in that most necessary Doctrine, which in a Manner is the Badge and Character of the Church of England; Of submitting to every Ordinance of Man for the Lord’s Sake; whether it be to the King as Supreme, or unto Governors as unto them that are sent by him, for the Punishment of evil Doers, and for the Praise of them that do well. Teaching that this Submission and Obedience is to be clear, absolute, and without Exception of any State or Order of Men. Also that they, according to the Apostle’s Precept, exhort, That first of all, Supplications, Prayers, Intercessions, and giving of Thanks be made for all Men, for the King, and all that are in Authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable Life, in all Godliness and Honesty; for this is good and acceptable in the Sight of God our Saviour. And in especial Manner, that they press and oblige them humbly to offer their most ardent and daily Prayers at the Throne of Grace, for the Preservation of our Sovereign Lord King Charles, from the Attempts of open Violence, and secret Machinations of perfidious Traitors; that the Defender of the Faith, being safe under the Defence of the Most High, may continue his Reign on Earth, till he exchange it for that of a late and happy Immortality.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, To shew that this was likewise at the same Time Archbishop Tillotson’s Opinion, we desire to read his Letter which he wrote to my Lord Russel, when he was under his Condemnation in Newgate, July 20, 1683.

Clerk reads.] ‘My Lord, I was heartily glad to see your Lordship this Morning in that calm and devout Temper at receiving of the blessed Sacrament; but Peace of Mind, unless it be well grounded, will avail little: And because transient Discourse many Times hath little Effect, for want of Time to weigh and consider it; therefore, in tender Compassion of your Lordship’s Case, and from all the good Will that one Man can bear to another, I do humbly offer to your Lordship’s deliberate Thoughts these following Considerations concerning the Points of Resistance, as your Lordship puts the Case; concerning which, I understand by Dr. B. that your Lordship had once received Satisfaction, and am sorry to find a Change.

First, ‘That the Christian Religion doth plainly forbid the Resistance of Authority.

Secondly ‘That tho’ our Religion be establish’d by Law, (which your Lordship urges as a Difference between our Case and that of the Primitive Christians) yet in the same Law which establishes our Religion, it is declar’d, That it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatsoever to take up Arms, &c. Besides that there is a particular Law, declaring the Power of the Militia to be solely in the King; and that ties the Hands of Subjects, tho’ the Law of Nature, and the general Rules of Scripture had left us at Liberty, which I believe they do not, because the Government and Peace of Human Society could not well subsist upon these Terms.

Thirdly, ‘Your Lordship’s Opinion is contrary to the declared Doctrine of all Protestant Churches; and tho’ some particular Persons have taught otherwife, yet they have been contradicted herein, and condemn’d for it, by the Generality of Protestants. I beg your Lordship to consider, how it will agree with an avow’d asserting of the Protestant Religion, to go contrary to the general Doctrine of Protestants. My End in this is, to convince your Lordship that you are in a very great and dangerous Mistake; and being so convinc’d, that which was before a Sin of Ignorance, will appear of much more heinous Nature, as in Truth it is, and call for a very particular and deep Repentance; which if your Lordship sincerely exercise upon the Sight of your Error, by a penitent Acknowledgment of it to God and Men, you will not only obtain Forgiveness of God, but prevent a mighty Scandal to the Reform’d Religion. I am very loth to give your Lordship any Disquiet in the Distress you are in, which I commiserate from my Heart, but am much more concern’d that you do not leave the World in a Delusion and false Peace, to the Hindrance of your eternal Happiness. I heartily pray for you; and beseech your Lordship to believe that I am, with the greatest Sincerity and Compassion in the World,

My Lord,

Your Lordship’s most faithful and afflicted Servant,

J. TILLOTSON.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We next offer the Opinion of Bishop Stillingfleet.

Clerk reads.] ‘A Vindication of the Answer to some late Papers, concerning the Unity and Authority of the Catholick Church, and the Reformation of the Church of England.

‘But it hath been said by Somebody, That we had our Government and Ceremonies from his Lond. 1687. Church, our Doctrine from Luther and Calvin; and that we had nothing peculiar to our Church, but our Doctrine of Non-Resistance, and much good may it do us; and we hope we shall never fare the worse for it. This might give Occasion to inquire, Whether the Church, which pretends to be infallible, doth teach it so orthodoxly, or not? Or whether those who do think themselves obliged to believe what she teaches, are thereby oblig’d to the strictest Principles of Loyalty? But I forbear. It is sufficient to my Purpose, to shew that our Church doth not only teach them, as her own Doctrine, but (which is far more effectual) as the Doctrine of Christ and his Apostles, and of the Primitive Church.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, the same Bishop, in a Discourse of the Unreasonableness of a new Separation, takes Notice of some Objections made by those who are Friends to the Government, as if Non-Resistance were not consistent with the Revolution.

Lord Chancellor. There is no Name of an Author to these Books which you now produce.

Mr. Dodd. The Book is generally known by all learned Men to be Bishop Stillingfleet’s. Mr. Chiswell, who printed it, attended here three Days to prove it, but is ill now; but he has left a Certificate that he printed it, and all learned Men know it to be his.

Clerk reads.] ' I come to the particular Examination of the Difficulties which relate to the present Oaths [to King William and Queen Mary;] and because we are charg'd with Apostacy from the Principles of the Church of England, and that is made the main Ground of the design'd Separation, I would fain know what this Charge is built upon, with respect to the Oaths, for that is all we are concern'd in. If any particular Persons have advanc'd new Hypothesis of Government, contrary to the Sense of our Church, let them answer for themselves. The Case of the Oath is quite of another Nature; here is no renouncing the Doctrine of Passive Obedience, or asserting the Lawfulness of Resistance.

Mr. Phipps. Your Lordships observe, that since the Revolution that general Doctrine of Obedience is asserted by him.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, The next we offer is Dr. Sherlock in his Case of Allegiance stated.

Clerk reads.] ' And Bishop Overall's Page 37. Convocation-Book, which is lately Lond. 1691. publish'd, the principal Design of Quarto. which is to assert the irresistible Authority of Sovereign Princes, does as plainly assert this too, that all settled Governments, whatever their Beginnings were, have God's Authority, and must be obey'd; of which more above: For those wise Men who sat in that Convocation, plainly saw the necessary Connexion between Non-Resistance, and Obedience to the present Powers; both which were equally resolv'd into the Authority of God, in removing Kings and setting up Kings: So that Obedience and Allegiance to the present Powers, when they are once well settled among us, is so far from being a renouncing of the Doctrine of Non-Resistance and Passive Obedience, that those who refuse to comply, must renounce the only Principle whereon that Doctrine is reasonably founded, and consequently renounce the Doctrine itself.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We now offer a Book publish'd by the late Bishop Beveridge, which was publish'd by her Majesty's License, counterfeign'd by the Earl of Sunderland.

Clerk reads.]

ANNE R.

' Whereas our Trusty and Well-beloved Richard Smith, of our City of London, Bookseller, hath humbly represented unto us, that he has with great Labour and Expence, prepar'd for the Press, a new Edition of the Sermons and other Works, written in English by the Right Reverend Father in God, Dr. William Beveridge, Bishop of St. Asaph, deceased: And has therefore humbly besought us to grant him our Royal Privilege of License for the sole Printing and Publishing thereof, for the Term of fourteen Years: We being willing to give all due Encouragement to Works of this Nature, tending to the Advancement of Piety and Learning, are graciously pleased to condescend to his Request; and do therefore, by these Presents, grant to him the said Richard Smith, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, our Royal License for the sole Printing and Publishing the English Works of the said late Bishop of St. Asaph for the Term of fourteen Years, from the Date hereof; strictly forbidding all our Subjects, within our Kingdoms and Dominions, to reprint the same, either in Whole or in Part, or to import, buy, vend, utter or distribute any Copies thereof reprinted beyond Seas, during the aforesaid Term of fourteen Years, without the Consent and Approbation of the said Richard Smith, his Heirs, Executors and Assigns, under his, or their Hands and Seals, first had and obtain'd, as they will answer the contrary at their Peril; whereof the Master, Wardens and Company of Stationers are to take Notice, that the same may be enter'd in their Register, and that due Obedience be render'd thereunto. Given at our Court at Kensington, the fifth Day of June 1708, in the seventh Year of our Reign.

By her Majesty's Command, SUNDERLAND.

Private Thoughts upon Religion, digested into twelve Articles, with practical Resolutions form'd thereupon. By the Right Reverend Father in God, William Beveridge, D.D. late Lord Bishop of St. Asaph.

RESOLUTION I.

' I am resolv'd, by the Grace Pa. 251, 252, of God, to honour and obey 253, 254. Lon. the King, or Prince, whom God 1709. 8vo. is pleased to set over me; as well as to expect he should safeguard and protect me, whom God is pleased to set under him.

' The King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, the great and glorious Monarch of all the World, having enacted many gracious Laws, is pleased to set over every Kingdom and Nation, such Persons as may put them in Execution: So that I cannot but look upon a lawful King as truly a Representative of the most high God, as a Parliament is of the People. And am therefore persuaded that whosoever rebels against him, rebels against God himself; not only in that he rebels against the Ordinance of God, and so against the God of that Ordinance; but because he rebels against him whom God hath set up as his Vicegerent, to represent his Person and execute his Laws, in such a Part of his Dominions.

' Hence it is, that these two Precepts, Fear God, and Honour the King, are so often join'd together in Holy Writ; for he that fears God's Power, cannot but honour his Authority; and he that honours not the King that represents God, cannot be said to fear God, who is represented by him. And hence likewise it is, that God hath been as strict and express in injoining us Obedience to our Governors, as to himself: For, thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Rom. xiii. 1. Let every Soul be subject to the higher Powers. Why? Because there is no Power but of God; the Powers that be, are ordain'd of God.

' And he hath denounced as great a Judgment against such as rebel against the Magistrate he hath ordain'd, as against those that rebel against himself: For, Whosoever resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves Damnation, ver. 2. So that the Wrath of God shall as certainly fall upon those that rise up against the King, as upon those that fight against God. And no wonder, that the Punishment should be the same, when the Fault is the same. For he that fights against the King, fights against God himself, who hath invested him with

‘ with that Power and Authority to govern his ‘ People, representing his own Glorious Majesty be‘ fore them.

‘ Upon this Ground it is, that I believe the ‘ Wickedness of a Prince cannot be a sufficient Plea
‘ for the Disobedience of his Subjects; for it is not ‘ the Holiness, but the Authority of God that he ‘ represents, which the most wicked, as well as the ‘ most holy Person may be endowed with. And ‘ therefore, when the Gospel first began to spread it‘ self over the Earth, tho’ there was no Christian ‘ King, or Supreme Magistrate, of what Title ‘ soever, to cherish and protect it; nay, tho’ the ‘ Civil Powers were then the greatest Enemies to it, ‘ yet, even then, were the Disciples of Christ in-‘ joined to submit themselves to every Ordinance of ‘ Man, for the Lord’s sake.

‘ Inasmuch, that did I live among the Turks, I ‘ should look upon it as my Duty to obey the ‘ Grand Signior, in all his lawful Edicts, as well
‘ as the most Christian and pious King in the World.
‘ For, suppose a Prince be never so wicked, and ne‘ ver so negligent in his Duty of protecting me, ‘ it doth not follow, that I must neglect mine of ‘ obeying him. In such a Case, I have another ‘ Duty added to this, and that is, to pray for him,
‘ and to intercede with God for his Conversion:
‘ For, thus hath the King of Kings commanded,
‘ that Prayers, Supplications, Intercessions, and giving
‘ of Thanks be made, as for all Men, so more espe‘ cially for Kings, and those that are in Authority, ‘ that we may live a quiet and peaceable Life, in all ‘ Godliness and Honesty. 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. So that ‘ whensoever I address to the Court of Heaven,
‘ I must be sure to remember my Sovereign on ‘ Earth, as himself doth in Heaven, in Righteous‘ ness and Mercy. But especially, in case of any ‘ seeming or real Default or Defect; tho’ I do ‘ not think it a Subject’s Duty to judge or censure
‘ his Sovereign’s Actions: I am to be the more ‘ earnest in my Prayers and Intercessions for him;
‘ but upon no Account to fight and rebel against ‘ him.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, the next Book we offer is his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury’s Treatise, intituled, The Creed of Mr. Hobbs examined.

Clerk reads.] ‘ There is no Tie so
Pag. 158. ‘ strong as that of Religion, which Lond. 1670. ‘ eternally bindeth a conscientious ‘ Subject in Allegiance to his Sove‘ reign.

‘ Wo to all the Princes upon Earth,
Ibid. p. 160, ‘ if this Doctrine be true, and be-
161. ‘ cometh popular. If the Multitude ‘ believe this, the Prince not arm’d
‘ with the Scales of the Leviathan, that is, with irre‘ sistible Power, can never be safe from the Spears,
‘ and barbed Irons, which their Ambition and pre‘ sumed Interest will provide, and their Malice will ‘ sharpen, and their passionate Violence throw a‘ gainst him. If the Beast we spoke of come but
‘ to know its own Strength, it will never be manag’d.
‘ Wherefore such as own these pernicious Doctrines,
‘ destructive to all Societies of Men, may be said ‘ to have Wolves Heads, as the Laws of old were ‘ wont to speak concerning excommunicated Per‘ sons; and are like those ravenous Beasts, so far ‘ from deserving our Love and Care, that they ‘ ought to be destroyed at the common Charge.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, there is a further Account of the Opinion of the same Archbishop of Canterbury, in a printed Paper, intitled, An Account of what passed at the Execution of the late Duke of Monmouth, on Wednesday the 15th of July, 1685, on Tower Hill.

Clerk reads.] ‘ The late Duke of Monmouth ‘ came from the Tower to the Scaffold, attended ‘ by the Bishop of Ely, the Bishop of Bath and ‘ Wells, Doctor Tenison, and Doctor Hooper; which ‘ four the King was graciously pleased to send him,
‘ as his Assistants to prepare him for Death; and
‘ the late Duke himself intreated all four of them ‘ to accompany him to the Place of Execution, and ‘ to continue with him to the last. The two Bishops ‘ going in the Lieutenant’s Coach with him to the ‘ Bars, made seasonable and devout Applications to ‘ him all the way; and one of them desired him
‘ not to be surpriz’d, if they to the very last upon
‘ the Scaffold renewed those Exhortations to a par‘ ticular Repentance, which they had so often re‘ peated before.

‘ At his first coming upon the Scaffold, he look’d
‘ for the Executioner; and seeing him, said, Is ‘ this the Man to do the Business? Do your Work ‘ well.

‘ Then the late Duke of Monmouth began to ‘ speak, some one or other of the Assistants, during
‘ the whole Time, applying themselves to him.

Mon. I shall say but very little; I come to die;
I die a Protestant of the Church of England.

Assist. My Lord, if you be of the Church of England, you must acknowledge the Doctrine of Non-Resistance to be true.

Mon. If I acknowledge the Doctrine of the Church of England in general, that includes all.

Assist. Sir, it is fit to own that Doctrine particularly, with respect to your Case. Here he was much urg’d about that Doctrine of Non-Resistance;
but he repeated in Effect his first Answer.

Assist. My Lord, it is fit to be particular; and considering the publick Evil you have done, you ought to do as much Good now as possibly you can, by a publick Acknowledgment.

Mon. What I have thought fit to say of publick Affairs, is in a Paper which I have sign’d; I refer to my Paper.

Assist. My Lord, there is nothing in that Paper about Resistance, and you ought to be particular in your Repentance, and to have it well grounded.
God give you true Repentance.

Mon. I die very penitent, and die with great Chearfulness, for I know I shall go to God.

Assist. My Lord, you must go to God in his own Way: Sir, be sure you be truly penitent, and ask Forgiveness of God for the many you have wronged.

Mon. I am sorry for every one I have wronged;
I forgive every Body; I have had many Enemies,
I forgive them all.

Assist. Sir, your Acknowledgment ought to be publick and particular.

Mon. I am to die; pray, my Lord—I refer to my Paper.

Assist. They are but a few Words that we desire: We only desire an Answer to this Point.

Mon. I can bless God that he hath given me so much Grace, that for these two Years last past I have led a Life unlike to my former Course, and in which I have been happy.

Assjt. Sir, Was there no Ill in these two Years?
 ' In these Years these great Evils have happen'd;
 ' and the giving publick Satisfaction is a necessary
 ' Part of Repentance; be pleas'd to own a Detesta-
 ' tion of your Rebellion.

Mon. I beg your Lordships that you will stick to ' my Paper.

Assjt. My Lord, as I said before, there is no' thing in your Paper about the Doctrine of Non-' Resistance.

Mon. I repent of all Things that a true Christian ' ought to repent of. I am to die; pray, my
 ' Lord. —

Assjt. Then, my Lord, we can only recom' mend you to the Mercy of God; but we cannot
 ' pray with that Cheerfulness and Encouragement
 ' as we should, if you had made a particular Ac' knowledgment.

This is a true Account, Witness our Hands.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We pray we may read the Sermon of his Grace the present Archbishop of York, preached before your Lordships on the 30th of January 1700.

Clerk reads.] ' And in case it ever hap-
 Pag. 13. ' pen that we cannot with a safe Consci' ence obey, there we are patiently to ' suffer the Penalties of our Disobedience; but by ' no means either to affront their Persons, or to dis' turb their Government, by raising or partaking in ' any Tumult, or Insurrection, or Rebellion.

Ibid. p. 19, 20. ' That there is such a Submission
 ' due from all Subjects to the Su' preme Authority of the Place
 ' where they live, as shall tie up their Hands from ' opposing or resisting it by Force, is evident from ' the very Nature and Ends of Political Society.
 ' And I dare say, there is not that Country upon ' Earth, let the Form of their Government be what ' it will (Absolute Monarchy, Legal Monarchy, ' Aristocracy, or Commonwealth) where this is not
 ' a Part of the Constitution. Subjects must obey
 ' passively, where they cannot obey actively: Other' wise the Government would be precarious, and the ' publick Peace at the Mercy of every Malecontent,
 ' and a Door would be set open to all the Insur-
 ' rections, Rebellions and Treasons in the World.
 ' Nor is this only a State Doctrine, but the Do' ctrine also of Jesus Christ, and that a necessary,
 ' indispensable one too; as sufficiently appears from
 ' those famous Words of St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 1, 2.
 ' which are so plain, that they need no Comment:
 ' Let every Soul (saith he) be subject to the higher
 ' Powers, for there is no Power but of God, and the ' Powers that be are ordained of God; whosoever
 ' therefore resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance
 ' of God; and they that resist shall receive to them- ' selves Damnation. So that so long as this Text ' stands in our Bible, the Doctrine of Non-Re' sistance and Passive Obedience must be of Obliga' tion to all Christians.

Mr. Dodd. Pray see whether there is any Thing purporting the Thanks of the House to be given to the Archbishop for his Sermon.

Clerk reads.] ' Die Jovis 1 Februarii 1699.
 ' It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal
 ' in Parliament assembled, That the Thanks of this ' House be and are hereby given to his Grace the ' Lord Archbishop of York, for his Sermon preach'd
 ' before this House the thirtieth of January last;
 ' and he is hereby desired to print and publish the
 ' same.

Matth. Johnson, Cl^r Parliamentor.

Mr. Walpole. My Lords, I presume the Counsel have offered all they think proper to offer out of this Sermon: But that your Lordships may have a Specimen of the Candor of the Doctor's Quotations, I pray the Clerk may read the two next Paragraphs of that Sermon, and that he may read them as distinctly as he did the others.

Clerk reads.] ' But then, after I have ' said this, Care must be taken, that this Fol. 20.
 ' general Doctrine be not misapplied in ' particular Countries. Tho' Non-Resistance, or ' Passive Obedience, be a Duty to all Subjects, and
 ' under all Governments; yet it is not expressed
 ' the same Way in all Places, but both the Objects
 ' and the Instances of it do vary in different Na' tions, according to the different Models of their ' Government.

‘ To speak this as plainly as I can: As the Laws
 ‘ of the Land are the Measures of our Active Obe‘ dience, so are also the same Laws the Measures of ‘ our Submission; and as we are not bound to obey, ‘ but where the Laws and Constitution require our ‘ Obedience, so neither are we bound to submit, ‘ but as the Laws and Constitution do require our ‘ Submission.

Mr. Walpole. Before we part with that Sermon,
 I desire one Paragraph more may be read; it begins with these Words, If indeed a Preacher.

Clerk reads.] ' If indeed a Preach' er should in the Pulpit presume to Fol. 6.
 ' give his Judgment about the Ma' nagement of publick Affairs, or to lay down Do' ctrines as from Christ about the Forms and Mo' dels of Kingdoms or Commonwealths, or to ad-
 ' just the Limits of the Prerogative of the Prince,
 ' or of the Liberties of the Subject in our present
 ' Government; I say, if a Divine should meddle
 ' with such Matters as these in his Sermons, I do ' not know how he can be excused from the just ' Censure of meddling with Things that nothing
 ' concern him: This is indeed a practising in State
 ' Matters, and is usurping an Office that belongs to ' another Profession, and to Men of another Chara- ' cter; and I should account it every whit as un-
 ' decent in a Clergyman to take upon him to deal
 ' in these Points, as it would be for him to deter' mine Titles of Land in the Pulpit, which are in ' dispute in Westminster Hall.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, If your Lordships please, as to the two Paragraphs read next after what we read, we intirely concur in what is laid down in them; and if we shew that this Doctrine is agreeable to the Laws of the Land, then it is agreeable to what is there laid down: As to the other Part, if he has taken upon him to treat of the Model of Government, he will be under the Censure of the Archbishop; but we desire to read a little before the beginning of that Paragraph.

Clerk

Clerk reads.] 'Titus iii. 1. Put them in mind to be subject to Principalities and Powers, to obey Magistrates.

'You all know what kind of Argument this Day calls for: For by the Design of keeping it, the Business that the Preacher hath to do, is to press Obedience and Subjection to the Government we live under; and to preach against Faction, and Rebellion; and accordingly it is prescrib'd, in the Rubrick of this Day's Service, that if there be a Sermon at all, and not a Homily, it shall be upon this Argument.

'It is very well that Authority hath taken care that at some solemn Times we should preach upon this Subject in a more solemn Manner; because, tho' it be as needful as any, yet there are some among us think it a very improper Theme for the Pulpit. I must confess I had an Eye to this Suggestion, when I pitch'd upon these Words which I have now read to you: Because I think there is something to be observed in them which will effectually confute it.

'St. Paul here lays his Charge upon Titus, that he should put the People that were under his Care in mind, to be subject to Principalities and Powers, and to obey Magistrates.

'Two Things I would here consider, First, the Person that is order'd thus to put the People in mind: And Secondly, the Thing that he is to put them in mind of, which is Subjection and Obedience to Principalities, and Powers, and Magistrates.

'I begin with the first thing, the Person to whom St. Paul writes this Epistle, and to whom he gives it in charge, that he should put the People in mind to be subject.

'Who was this Person? Why, it was Titus, an Ecclesiastick, Bishop, a Preacher of the Gospel, not a Layman, not a Magistrate, but a pure Churchman. What can be more plainly gathered from hence than this, That it is not Foreign to a Clergyman's Office to preach Obedience and Subjection to the Government; but on the contrary a Part of his Function, a necessary Duty incumbent upon him to do it? If any Man affirm otherwise, he must either say that St. Paul did not rightly instruct Titus in his Office, but injoin'd him to do that which he had nothing to do with; or he must shew that the Case of Titus was different from that of the Ministers of the Gospel at this Day: Neither of which things can, I believe, be easily made out.

'And yet into such Times are we fallen, that it is taken ill by many, that Ministers should in their Pulpit-Discourses meddle with these Matters: I must confess, I think, that of all Men it most concerns a Minister of Religion not to be a Busy-Body, or a Meddler in other Mens Matters; for in Truth he hath Work enough to do of his own, and such kind of Work too, as, let him behave himself as inoffensively as he can, will create him Difficulties and Enemies enough. And therefore it would be very imprudent in him to usurp other Mens Provinces, and to burn his Finger where he needs not, especially considering that the Success of his Labours and Endeavours among the People doth in a great measure depend upon the good liking they have of him.

'But what is it that gives Offence? Or what is it that renders this Argument we are speaking of so improper a Subject for a Clergyman to treat of? Why, several Things are pretended, and I shall name some of them.

First, It is said, That the Work of a Clergyman is to instruct Men in Christ's Religion, to preach against Vice and Sin, and to preach up Holiness and Good Life, and mutual Love and Charity; but what hath he to do with State-Affairs, as Matters of Government are?

'I answer, He hath nothing indeed to do with them: But his only Work is to make Men good Christians, by endeavouring to possess them with a hearty Belief of our Saviour's Doctrines and Promises, and persuading them to a Conformity in their Lives to his Precepts. This is our proper Work, and this is what we ought to attend to all the Days of our Life; and with Government and State-Affairs we ought not to meddle, in our Sermons especially.

'But then, after all this, it doth not follow but that we are all bound, as we have Occasion, to preach up Loyalty, and Obedience to our Governors; for this is no State-Affair, but an Affair of the Gospel. We cannot instruct Men in Christ's Religion, without instructing them in this.

'If, indeed, it was an indifferent Thing to a Man's Christianity, or to his Salvation, whether he was a good or a bad Subject, then indeed it would be as indifferent to a Preacher, whether he insisted on these Things to the People; but it is not so.

'One great Branch of Christian Holiness, as it is declared in the New Testament, is, That every Man demean himself quietly and peaceably, and obedient to the Government he lives under; and that not only for Wrath, or Fear of Punishment, but also for Conscience-sake: And this is made as necessary a Condition of going to Heaven, as any other particular Virtue is. And therefore, if we will instruct Men in Christ's Religion, and in the indispensable Points of Holiness requir'd thereby, we must instruct them in this also.

'One great Vice and damnable Sin that the Religion of our Lord has caution'd against, is the Sin of Faction and Rebellion; and therefore if it be our Duty to declare against the Sins and Vices that are contrary to Christianity, it is our Duty to declare and caution against this also.

'Lastly, We do readily grant that a great Part of our Office consists in most affectionately recommending and pressing the Necessity of mutual Love and Charity; but if this be necessary, is it not more so to recommend and press Obedience to Authority, without which, mutual Love and Charity cannot possibly subsist? That being the common Ligament of them; and take away that, we should be no better than Bears and Tygers one to another.

'But it is said in the Second place, That Preachers ought not to meddle with these Points, because they are not competent Judges of them: They do not know the Measures and Limits of Loyalty and Disloyalty, of being a good and a bad Subject; these depending altogether upon the Constitution of the Government we live under, and the determining of them belongs to the Civil Courts, and not to their Profession.

'To this I answer, That in all those Instances wherein this Argument falls under the Cognizance and Determination of Parliament, or Judges, or Lawyers, we do not pretend to meddle with it; and if any Man do, let him answer for himself: All that we pretend to, is to press the plain, general, indispensable Duties of Obedience to Laws, and of Peaceableness and Subjection to the Higher Powers, ‘ Powers, which Christ and his Apostles have every where taught in the Bible.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We do not desire to read any more; we think we have justified our Quotations, and shew’d that it is the Opinion of that Great and Learned Archbishop, That the Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance is the Doctrine of our Church; and that it is a Duty incumbent upon the Clergy to preach it to the People.

Mr. Dodd. The next we offer to your Lordships, is the Opinion of the present Bishop of Worcester, in a Sermon preached before the late Queen the 29th of May 1692, when he was Bishop of St. Asaph.

Clerk reads.] ‘ They had brought Page 18, 19. ‘ Things to that pass, that our Laws ‘ signify’d nothing but what they ‘ pleased; our Religion was held at the Courtesy of ‘ them that were the bloody Enemies of it. Our ‘ Obedience was made use of as a perfect Snare to ‘ us; we must not resist; that our Religion would ‘ not allow. — It was God that infatuated our ‘ Oppressors, to join the Injuries of a People that ‘ could not lawfully Resist, with those of a Prince ‘ that could not lawfully pass them by without Resistance.

Mr. Phipps. We shall now offer to your Lordships a Sermon preach’d by the Bishop of Rochester before the Artillery-Company, upon the 29th of May 1692.

Clerk reads.] Put up thy Sword, Page 5. ‘ says he; O Peter, submit with Patience. Oppose not Authority. Do ‘ not then break the Laws of thy Country, tho’ for ‘ Kindness and Love of me. Put up thy Sword. He ‘ that uses the Sword unlawfully, tho’ on a Pretence ‘ never so pious, shall perish by the Sword; shall either ‘ be destroy’d by it here, or punish’d hereafter by ‘ God himself for having so used it.

‘ Wherefore we are not to conclude, that our ‘ Blessed Lord by this Check given to St. Peter ‘ did absolutely prohibit all manner of using the ‘ Sword among Christians, but only that he taught ‘ us the great Duty of Christian Submission. For if ‘ St. Peter was, then certainly all other Christian ‘ Subjects are forbidden to unsheath the Sword ‘ against their Lawful Sovereign, or his Ministers, ‘ as they are commission’d by him, tho’ they do it ‘ on a Pretext so Spiritual, as the Cause of Christ ‘ himself.

‘ Tho’ they could not be induced Ib. 25, 26. ‘ by Fear or Favour to rank their ‘ Princes equal with their God, yet ‘ they preserv’d them in the next Place: Tho’ they ‘ would never worship them as Gods upon Earth, ‘ yet they religiously obey’d them as God’s Deputies and Representatives. They judg’d those who ‘ rebell’d against them worthy of Death, as if they ‘ had actually rebell’d against God himself. What ‘ else means St. Paul, when in so many Words he ‘ declares, That whosoever resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves Damnation? Rom. xiii. 2. ‘ Out of all doubt he there speaks of the Temporal Power, and of Eternal Damnation to ensue ‘ upon resisting it; than which, what more grievous ‘ Punishment could have been inflicted, had they ‘ immediately resisted God himself?

‘ And recollect, I intreat you, the Time when ‘ this was so positively pronounced by St. Paul. It ‘ must have been writ under the Reign of Claudius ‘ or Nero. So that ’tis evident, all that resisted ‘ them were, without Repentance, in a damnable ‘ State. Can there be then any Colour so specious, ‘ any Cause so just, in which, instead of Damnation, a Christian Subject may justly expect to ‘ receive to himself Salvation, on the Account of ‘ Resisting?

Mr. Phipps. We shall next offer to your Lordships Consideration the Authority of the Lord Bishop of Sarum; where he shews, that this is ‘ not only the Doctrine of the Church of England, ‘ but of the Church of Scotland, and of all Christian ‘ Churches.’

Clerk reads.] A Vindication of the Authority, Constitution, and Laws of the Church and State of Scotland, &c. By Gilbert Burnet.

‘ But these Words of St. Paul, be- Printed at ing as at first address’d to the Ro- Glasgow, mans, so also designed by the Holy 1673. Pa.
Ghost to be a Part of the Rule of 41, 42.
‘ all Christians, do prove, that who‘ ever hath the Supreme Power, is to be submitted ‘ to, and never resisted.

‘ Ifot. If you were not in too great a haste, you ‘ would not be so forward; consider therefore the ‘ Reason St. Paul gives for Submission to Superior ‘ Rulers, is, because they are the Ministers of God for good. If then they swerve from this, they forsake ‘ the End for which they are raised up, and so fall ‘ from their Power and Right to our Obedience.

‘ Basil. Truly what you have said makes me ‘ not repent of any haste I seem’d to make; for ‘ what you have alledged proves indeed that the ‘ Sovereign is a Minister of God for good, so that ‘ he corrupts his Power grossly when he pursues not ‘ that Design: But in that he is only accountable to ‘ God, whose Minister he is. And this must hold ‘ good, except you give us good Ground to believe, ‘ that God hath given Authority to the Subjects ‘ to call him to account for his Trust; but if that ‘ be not made appear, then he must be left to God, ‘ who did empower him, and therefore can only ‘ coerce him. As one having his Power from a ‘ King, is countable to none for the Administration ‘ of it, but to the King, or those on whom the ‘ King shall devolve it: So except it be proved, ‘ that God hath warranted Subjects to call their Sovereigns to account, they being his Ministers, must ‘ only be answerable to him. And according to ‘ these Principles of yours, the Magistrates Authority shall be so enervated, that he shall no more ‘ be able to serve these Designs, for which God hath ‘ vested him with Power: Every one being thus ‘ taught to shake off his Yoke when they think he ‘ acts in Prejudice of Religion. And here I shall ‘ add one thing, which all Casuits hold a safe Rule ‘ in Matters that are doubtful, That we ought to ‘ follow that Side of the Doubt which is freeest of ‘ hazard. Here then Damnation is at least the seeming Hazard of Resistance; therefore except upon ‘ as clear Evidence you prove the Danger of absolute ‘ Submission to be of the same Nature that it may ‘ balance the other, then absolute Submission, as ‘ being the securest, is to be followed.

Mr. Phipps. There is another Sermon, preach’d by the Bishop of Salisbury, intitled, Subjection for Conscience Sake asserted, in a Sermon preach’d at Guildhall 1689.

'on sure and unalterable Foundations; injoining an 'intire Obedience to all the lawful Commands of 'Authority, and an absolute Submission to that Su'preme Power God hath put into our Sovereign's 'Hands. This Doctrine we justly glory in; and 'if any that had their Baptism, and Education in 'our Church, have turn'd Renegades from this,
'they prov'd no less Enemies to the Church herself,
'than to the Civil Authority: So that their Apo-
'stacy leaves no Blame on our Church, which 'glories in nothing more than a well-temper'd
'Reformation from the later Corruption which
'the dark Ages brought into the Pure and Primi'tive Doctrines which our Saviour and his Apo'stles taught, and the first Christians retain'd, and
'practis'd for many Ages.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, I only observe, That the absolute Submission to the Supreme Power, are the Words in the Doctor's Sermon.

Sir Peter King. My Lords, Before your Lordships go on to any other, I pray the 17th Page of the Book which they read, intituled, The Vindication of the Authority, Constitution and Laws of the Church and State of Scotland, may be read.

Page 17. 'The Case varies very much when 'the Abuse is such that it tends to a 'total Subversion, which may be call'd
'justly a Phrensy, since no Man is capable of it,
'till he be under some Lesion of his Mind; in 'which case, the Power is to be administred by 'others, for the Prince and his People's Safety:
'But this will never prove that a Magistrate go'verning by Law, though there be great Errors in 'Government, ought to be coerced: Otherwise
'you must open a Door to perpetual Broils, since
'every one by these Maxims becomes Judge; and
'where he is both Judge and Party, is not like 'to be cast in his Pretensions; And even few
'Malefactors die, but they think hard measure
'given them. If then forcible Self-defence be to 'be followed, none of these should yield up their 'Lives without using all Attempts for rescuing 'them.

Mr. Dee. My Lords, the next we offer is a Sermon preached by the Bishop of Ely before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at Guildhall, the 26th
of January 1648.

'stian cannot but condemn those, who
'under the Pretence of defending their 'Rights or Religion, resist lawful Authority. It 'being a Blasphemy against the Divine Wisdom
'and Power, to suppose God can ever stand in need
'of our Sins to bring to pass his most glorious 'Designs. He then in whom this Virtue of Pati'ence dwells, keeps a due Regard to the Commands
'laid upon him, to submit himself to the Supreme 'Powers; and he dares not lift up his Hand against
'the Lord's Anointed, or levy War upon the most 'plausible Account whatsoever; nay, to him it can'not but seem a Wonder that the Doctrine of Re'sistance should have gone down so glibly with any

'who have read the New Testament, and are bap-
'tiz'd into the Christian Faith.

'There is an universal absolute 'Command in the Holy Scripture Ib. P. 20, 21.
'laid upon all Christians, to be sub'ject to the Supreme Powers in all Cases. Now
'nothing is plainer, than that if we be required 'to be subject in all Cases, Resistance in any will 'be sinful. Let every Soul be subject to the Higher
'Power; to which Christian Precept there is no
'Exception to be found for any Person, in any 'Instance, from one End of the Christian Institu'tion to the other. — Subjection is a Duty, than 'which there is hardly any oftner repeated in the 'Christian Law, so as we cannot plead Ignorance of
'it; it is press'd with such Evidence of Reason, that 'cuts off all Pretences of evading it; it is set down
'in such plain, easy, and full Expressions, as that
'there can be no Colour to doubt about the right
'Understanding of it. The Holy Scripture gives 'Permission no more to the People collected into
'one Body to rebel, than it does to each of them,
'by himself singly considered. Every Christian,
'in all Circumstances, is requir'd to conform to the 'Laws of the Supreme Authority, if they have no
'Repugnancy to God's Laws, and to suffer patient'ly where Obedience would be a Sin.

Mr. Dee. My Lords, the next we beg Leave to offer, is a Sermon of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, preached before the King at Whitehall the 5th of November 1681.

Clerk reads.] 'Is he not the Vice'gerent of God? Where-ever therefore Page 11.
'his Sovereign the Almighty has not

'he has a Right and Liberty to put forth his; in 'these Cases to expect an active chearful Obedience,

'ven. Not ignorant how much she suffers now

'Truth of this Doctrine, and how much (for its 'Meekness) she stands exposed to future Persecu'tion.

Mr. Dee. The next we offer to your Lordships, is a Sermon preached by the Bishop of Lincoln before your Lordships, on the 30th of January 1708.
which was published by your Lordships Commands.

Clerk reads.] 'Die Sabbati, 31 Januarii, 1707.

Page 15, 16, 17, 18. 'And if neither the Ma-
'lice of the Jews, nor the Innocence of our Lord;
'if neither the Truth of our Religion persecuted in 'its Founder, nor the apparent Marks of Malice
'and Envy, of Violence and Oppression, which ap'peared in the whole Course of their Prosecution
'of Him; were sufficient to warrant St. Peter to 'draw the Sword in his Defence, against that Legal
'Autho-

' Authority by which they acted ; We must conclude, that neither will any of these Pretences suffice to justify any other Christians, in the like Circumstances, now. But if it shall please God at any time to permit the Lawful Powers to be against Us, and make them that hate us, to rule over us ; We must follow the Example of our Blessed Master, and submit patiently to their Authority ; and not, with this warm Apostle, take the Sword against those, to whom God has committed the Power of the Sword.

' Let this then suffice to shew, what the true Christian Doctrine, of Submission to the Civil Magistrate, is. I shall not here inquire, whether some may not possibly have misapplied these Principles, or have stretched them further than they ought to have done, and by that means have led both themselves and others into great Mistakes, and no less Inconveniencies. What that Authority in every State or Country is, to which such a Subjection (as I have now been speaking of) is due, and against which no Resistance (no not to defend the Best Cause, or the most Innocent Person in the World) may be used by any of the Community, is a Point which the Municipal Laws and Constitution of every State and Country must determine : But that wherever that Supreme Power and Authority is lodged, or in whomsoever it resides, to which God has commanded us to be subject not only for Wrath, but also for Conscience Sake ; concerning which St. Paul has laid down this Rule, Let every Soul be subject to the Higher Powers ; and St. Peter himself declared, that we must submit to it for the Lord's Sake : We are bound to pay either an Active, or Passive Obedience to it ; must either do what it requires, or suffer what it inflicts : This is without Controversy the standing Doctrine of Christianity, and has been confirmed by the Practice of the best Christians in all Ages of the Church.

' Which being so, let us go on finally (upon these Principles) to consider,

' III. What we are to judge of Those, who, notwithstanding so plain an Admonition, not only took the Sword, (tho' that had been too much) but cut off with it that Royal Person, who alone had the Rightful Power of it.

' And here I cannot follow either a plainer or a surer Guide, than our Laws themselves, which speak not only with Authority, but Approbation too ; and tell us, in effect, what the Sense of the whole Nation is, or at least ought to be, both of Them and their Proceedings. The Fact it self they call a Horrid, Execrable, Detestable Murder ; an impious Fact, an unparalleled Treason : The Court, which decreed it, a Traiterous Assembly, a prodigious and unheard-of Tribunal. The Persons who thus unwarrantably drew the Sword against their own Sovereign, they brand as a Parcel of wretched Men, desperately wicked, hardened in their Impiety. And lastly, As to the Principles upon which they proceeded, the same Laws declare, " That by the Undoubted and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together in Parliament, or out of Parliament, Collectively or Representatively, nor any other Persons whatsoever, ever had, have, hath, or ought to have, any Coercive Power over the Persons of the Kings of this Realm.

Clerk reads on by Direction of the Managers.

' Such is the Censure which our Laws have passed upon the Murder of our Royal Sovereign, and the Persons who committed it : And the same is the Sense which both the Word of God, and the Laws of all other Nations, teach us to have of both.

' For to allow that some Things had been done under the Authority of that Unfortunate Prince less regularly than were to have been wish'd ; That the Prerogative had been strained to an Exorbitant Height, and the Subject too much provoked to complain, if not of the King himself, yet of those who were about him, and should have advised, and acted more moderately than they did. To grant that when the Parliament met, with which our Troubles began, it was excusable, or even fitting for it to have redressed those Grievances, and reduced the Prerogative within its just Bounds ; and that those therefore who entered upon the proper Methods of doing this in a Parliamentary way, without any ill Designs, either against the Person or Government of the King, were not to be blamed. Yet certainly, when this was done, and thereupon such Acts were passed, as not only abundantly repair'd whatever the Subject had suffered before, but sufficiently secured him against any more Invasions, either of his Liberty or Property, for the Time to come ; for Men to proceed farther still, and without any lawful Authority, or evident Necessity, enter into a War against their Sovereign, who had so far condescended to all their just Desires, must needs have been as illegal as it was unreasonable, and bespeak those who did it, to have taken the Sword in that Sense which our Saviour here forbade, and all good Men have ever condemned.

' Had that Excellent Prince indeed never called his last Parliament at all, nor given any Opportunity to his People to redress their Grievances by the proper Methods of it ; had he not only continued to insist upon those Pretensions which some had set up under the Shelter of his Authority, but so far improved them as utterly to set aside the Laws of the Realm, and to act arbitrarily, not only without Law, but against it ; and when nothing else would do, had he chose rather to desert the Government, than to rule according to his own Oath, and the Fundamental Laws and Limitations of it ; this might have warranted an oppressed People to take the Sword for the necessary Defence of their Laws and Constitution, and their Religion and Liberties founded thereupon. But to take up Arms against a King, whose Excesses had been moderate, and whose Necessities pressed him, contrary to his own Inclinations, to run into the most of them ; but especially, who had already, without Force, not only freely redressed the Grievances of his People, but abundantly repaired them, and secured them against the like Attempts for the future : This must needs have been an unwarrantable Enterprize ; a War as unjustifiable in its Rise, as it proved fatal in its Consequences.

Mr. Dodd. The next we shall offer to your Lordships, is the Bishop of Exeter's Sermon preached before her Majesty, on her Majesty's Accession to the Throne.

Clerk reads.] Page 13, 14. ' Nay, though the Laws of our Earthly Governors should in some Instances be contrary to the Divine Laws, (upon which which Supposition the Magistrate does certainly exceed the Bounds of his Commission) yet this does not void their Authority, they are the Ministers of God for all this; or else there were none that were so, there were none that could be call'd so, when the Apostle wrote this Epistle: And there is a Duty lying on Subjects even in this Case, viz. not to oppose, nor resist the Power, but quietly and patiently to suffer the Penalty of those Laws, which they cannot, without sinning against God, yield an active Obedience to.

Mr. Dodd. The next we shall offer to your Lordships, is the Bishop of St. Asaph's Sermon, preach'd before the Lord Mayor, on the Thirtieth of January 1699.

Clerk reads.]

The All-wise Providence of God has frequently of late (and as some of us always thought very graciously) exchanged our Governors: But if we ungratefully alter our Notions of the Divine Right of Government, and throw off our Antient and Primitive Rules of Obedience, we shall make an unworthy Return for the Mercies we have received.

Mr. Phipps. We beg Leave to offer to your Lordships Three Sermons, preach'd before the House of Commons; one preach'd before them by Doctor Eyre, upon January 30, 1707.

'Let no Seditious and Antimonarchical Principles be so much as once named among us, as becometh good Subjects, and good Christians: Let no sly Insinuations of Male-Administration be suggested, no new Doctrines advanced, nor any old ones revived, whereby to lessen the Security of the Crown, under the specious Pretence of maintaining the Rights and Liberties of the People.

Mr. Dee. The next is Dr. Kennet's Sermon, preach'd before the Commons the 30th of January 1705.

Clerk reads.] 'Jovis 31 Die Januarii 1705.

And that Sir Thomas Littleton, Mr. Worsley, and Mr. King, do acquaint him therewith.

Paul Joddrell, Cl. Dom. Com.

'This is the true Foundation of that common Axiom, The King can do no wrong; because there is no Right nor Remedy against his Royal Person.

'It was declarative of our Original Constitution, that our Legislature, upon Occasion of this Day, would have it express'd, "That by the Undoubted and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together, in Parliament, or out of Parliament, nor the People Collectively, or Representatively, nor any other Persons whatsoever, ever had, have, or ought to have, any Coercive Power over the Persons of the Kings of this Realm."

Mr. Dee. My Lords, The next is Dr. Delaune's Sermon, preach'd before the House of Commons, upon the 30th of January 1702.

Clerk reads.] 'Lune, 1 die Feb. 1702. Ordered,

'That the Thanks of this House be given to Dr. Delaune, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, for the Sermon by him preach'd before this House on Saturday last, at St. Margaret's Westminster: And that he be desir'd to Print the same. 'The Civil Laws of a Country are in the Nature of Articles of Agreement between the Rulers and their Subjects; Duty and Obedience are secured on one Hand, and on the other, Protection in Civil Rights. If the Subject breaks his Part of the Covenant, (as I may call it) his Punishment is at Hand; and if the Supreme Power breaks his, his Punishment is no less certain, tho' more remote; for he is guilty before God, who is his Ruler; tho' it is impossible he should be accountable for it in his own Dominions, for that ' would infer a Power Superior to the Supreme,

' which is a flat Contradiction.

Mr. Dodd. Your Lordships observe by all these Sermons, how generally this Point is laid down, without making any Exception; and yet I don't doubt, but that there is an Exception included in every one of these; yet it is always laid down in general Terms: And we desire that the same Exception may be allowed to the Doctor, as is to all these: And if he has erred, he can only be said Errare cum Patribus.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We have thus far made good our Defence, That this is the Doctrine of the Church of England; That the Fathers of the Church have always avow'd it; That it has been preach'd in the same Terms in which the Doctor has preach'd it, ever since her Majesty's Accession to the Throne, and no Objection has been made to it till now; and that it has been approv'd by both Houses of Parliament, and by her Majesty. We will now proceed to shew, that it is confirm'd by several Acts of Parliament: The first is in the 12th of Charles II. cap. 30.

Clerk reads.] ' And be it hereby declared, That by the Undoubted and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together, in Parliament, or out of Parliament, nor the People Collectively or Representatively, nor any other Persons whatsoever, ever had, have, hath, or ought to have, any Coercive Power over the Persons of the Kings of this Realm.

Mr. Dodd. The next Act of Parliament we shall read to your Lordships, is the Corporation-Act, 13 Car. II. Stat. 2. §. 5.

Clerk reads.] ' I A. B. do declare and believe, That it is not Lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take up Arms against the King; and that I do abhor that Traiterous Position, of taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are commissioned by him. So help me GOD.

Mr. Dodd. This is a General Oath, to be taken by all the Officers of Corporations.

Sir Jos. Jekyll. I can't but observe, my Lords, that it is a little extraordinary, the Doctor's Counsel should open this Act of Parliament, and offer it to be read, and not inform your Lordships that it is repealed.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, We did open it that it is repealed; but we did insist, That as this Oath had been taken by all Officers of Corporations so many Years, so it was then a true Proposition, and still remains so, altho' it be repealed: That Repeal don't make the Proposition false.

Mr. Phipps. We admit, my Lords, that in the Act for abrogating the Oaths, and appointing others, this Paragraph was omitted. But what we offer it for, is to shew that this Doctrine has been sworn to by most of the Great Men, and all the Great Officers of England, for so many Years together.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, The next is the Militia Act, 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 3. We desire to read the Preamble of that Act, and then the Oath appointed to be taken.

Clerk reads.] ' Forasmuch as within all his Majesty's Realms and Dominions, the Sole and Supreme Power, Government, Command and Disposition of the Militia, and of all Forces by Sea and Land, and of all Forts and Places of Strength, is, and (by the Laws of England) ever was the undoubted Right of his Majesty, and his Royal Predecessors, Kings and Queens of England; And that both, or either of the Houses of Parliament, cannot, nor ought to pretend to the same; nor can, nor lawfully may, raise or levy any War, Offensive or Defensive, against his Majesty, his Heirs, or Lawful Successors: And yet the contrary thereof hath of late Years been practised, almost to the Ruin and Destruction of this Kingdom: And during the late Usurped Governments, many evil and rebellious Principles have been instilled into the Minds of the People of this Kingdom, which may break forth, unless prevented, to the Disturbance of the Peace and Quiet thereof.

§. 18. ' I A. B. do declare and believe, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take up Arms against the King: And that I do abhor that Traiterous Position, That Arms may be taken by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are commissioned by him, in Pursuance of such Military Commissions. So help me GOD.

Mr. Dee. My Lords, The next is the Act of Uniformity, 13 & 14 Car. II. cap. 4.

Clerk reads.] ' And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every Dean, Canon, and Prebendary of every Cathedral or Collegiate Church, and all Masters and other Heads, Fellows, Chaplains, and Tutors of or in any College, Hall, House of Learning, Hospital, and every Publick Professor and Reader in either of the Universities, and in every College elsewhere, and every Parson, Vicar, Curate, Lecturer, and every other Person in Holy Orders, and every Schoolmaster keeping any publick or private School, and every Person instructing or teaching any Youth in any House or private Family as a Schoolmaster, who upon the First Day of May, which shall be in the Year of our Lord God 1662, or at any Time thereafter, shall be incumbent, or have Possession of any Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professor's Place, or Reader's Place, Parsonage, Vicarage, or any other Ecclesiastical Dignity or Promotion, or any Curate's Place, Lecture or School, or shall instruct or teach any Youth as Tutor or Schoolmaster, shall before the Feast-Day of St. Bartholomew, which shall be in the Year of our Lord 1662, or at or before his or their respective Admission to be Incumbent, or have Possession aforesaid, subscribe the Declaration or Acknowledgment following; (scilicet)

' I A. B. do declare, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King; and that I do abhor that Traiterous Position, of taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are commissioned by him: And that I will Conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England, as it is now by Law established. And I do declare, That I hold there lies no Obligation upon me, or any other Person, from the Oath commonly call'd The Solemn League and Covenant, to endeavour any Change or Alteration of Government either in Church or State; and the same was in it self an unlawful Oath, and imposed upon the Subjects of this Realm, against the known Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom.

Mr. Phipps. The Reason of our Reading this, is to let your Lordships see, what Obligations were on on all Clergymen to subscribe this Declaration; and then we submit it to your Lordships Judgment, whether the Doctor is Criminal for Preaching that which all Parsons were (before that Act was repeal'd) oblig'd to Subscribe, in order to qualify themselves for Preaching. And I beg Leave just to observe to your Lordships, That by 16 Car. II. the Act for Select Vestries, all Vestrymen were oblig'd to Subscribe the same Declaration.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, There are Two other Acts, but I think we need not read them, because they were so lately made: The one is for the Association, the other for the Abjuration, which is taken almost every Day in Westminster-Hall.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordships please, we shall offer nothing more on this Article, but only some Part of his late Majesty's Declaration, to shew that there was some Reason for what the Doctor said of his late Majesty's disclaiming all manner of Resistance.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. My Lords, I perceive they are going to read some Part of his late Majesty's Declaration: We should have offered some Part of that Declaration, as a material Proof against the Doctor; but we would not produce any Papers as Evidence, which are not so; tho' we allow that to the Doctor. But since it is produced as Evidence for the Doctor, I desire it may be read quite through.

Clerk reads.] The Declaration of his Highness, William Henry, by the Grace of God Prince of Orange, &c. of the Reasons inducing him to appear in Arms in the Kingdom of England, for preserving of the Protestant Religion, and for restoring the Laws and Liberties of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

1. IT is both certain and evident to all Men, That the Publick Peace and Happiness of any State or Kingdom cannot be preserv'd, where the Laws, Liberties, and Customs Establish'd by the Lawful Authority in it, are openly transgressed and annulled: More especially, where the Alteration of Religion is endeavour'd, and that a Religion which is contrary to Law, is endeavour'd to be introduced: Upon which those who are most immediately concerned in it, are indispensibly bound to endeavour to preserve and maintain the Establish'd Laws, Liberties and Customs, and above all, the Religion and Worship of God that is establish'd among them; and to take such an effectual Care, that the Inhabitants of the said State or Kingdom, may neither be depriv'd of their Religion, nor of their Civil Rights. Which is so much the more necessary, because the Greatness and Security, both of Kings, Royal Families, and of all such as are in Authority, as well as the Happiness of their Subjects and People, depend in a most especial manner upon the exact Observation and Maintenance of these their Laws, Liberties and Customs.

2. Upon these Grounds it is, that we cannot any longer forbear to declare, That to our great Regret, we see that those Counsellors, who have now the Chief Credit with the King, have overturned the Religion, Laws and Liberties of those Realms, and subjected them in all Things relating to their Consciences, Liberties and Properties, to Arbitrary Government; and that not only by secret and indirect Ways, but in an open and undisguised manner.

VOL. V.

3. Those Evil Counsellors, for the advancing and colouring this with some plausible Pretexs, did invent and set on foot the King's Dispensing Power; by virtue of which, they pretend, that, according to Law, he can suspend and dispense with the Execution of the Laws that have been enacted by the Authority of the King and Parliament, for the Security and Happiness of the Subject, and so have rendered those Laws of no Effect: Tho' there is nothing more certain, than that as no Laws can be made, but by the joint Concurrence of King and Parliament; so likewise Laws so enacted, which secure the Publick Peace and Safety of the Nation, and the Lives and Liberties of every Subject in it, cannot be repealed or suspended but by the same Authority.

4. For tho' the King may pardon the Punishment that a Transgressor has incurred, and to which he is condemned, (as in the Cases of Treason or Felony) yet it cannot be with any Colour of Reason infer'd from thence, that the King can intirely suspend the Execution of those Laws relating to Treason or Felony; unless it is pretended, that he is cloathed with a Despotick and Arbitrary Power; and that the Lives, Liberties, Honours and Estates of the Subjects, depend wholly on his good Will and Pleasure, and are intirely subject to him; which must infallibly follow, on the Kings having a Power to suspend the Execution of the Laws, and to dispense with them.

5. Those Evil Counsellors, in order to the giving some Credit to this strange and execrable Maxim, have so conducted the Matter, that they have obtained a Sentence from the Judges, declaring, That this Dispensing Power is a Right belonging to the Crown: As if it were in the Power of the Twelve Judges to offer up the Laws, Rights, and Liberties of the whole Nation to the King, to be disposed of by him arbitrarily, and at his Pleasure; and expressly contrary to Laws enacted for the Security of the Subjects. In order to the obtaining this Judgment, those Evil Counsellors did before-hand examine secretly the Opinion of the Judges, and procur'd such of them as could not in Conscience concur in so pernicious a Sentence, to be turned out, and others to be substituted in their rooms, 'till by the Changes which were made in the Courts of Judicature, they at last obtained that Judgment. And they have rais'd some to those Trusts, who make open Profession of the Popish Religion, tho' those are by Law rendred incapable of all such Employments.

6. It is also manifest and notorious, That as his Majesty was, upon his coming to the Crown, received and acknowledged by all the Subjects of England, Scotland, and Ireland, as their King, without the least Opposition, tho' he made then open Profession of the Popish Religion; so he did then promise, and solemnly swear at his Coronation, That he would maintain his Subjects in the free Enjoyment of their Laws and Liberties; and in particular, that he would maintain the Church of England as it was establish'd by Law. It is likewise certain, that there have been at divers and sundry Times several Laws enacted for the Preservation of those Rights and Liberties, and of the Protestant Religion; and among other Securities, it has been enacted, That all Persons whatsoever, that are advanced to any Ecclesiastical Dignity, or to bear Office in either University, as likewise all other that should be put in any Employment, Civil or Military, should declare that they were not

Papists,

‘ Papists, but were of the Protestant Religion, and that by their taking of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and the Test; yet these Evil Counsellors have in effect annulled and abolished all those Laws, both with Relation to Ecclesiastical and Civil Employments.

‘ 7. In order to Ecclesiastical Dignities and Offices, they have not only without any Colour of Law, but against most express Laws to the contrary, set up a Commission, of a certain Number of Persons, to whom they have committed the Cognizance and Direction of all Ecclesiastical Matters; in the which Commission there has been, and still is one of his Majesty’s Ministers of State, who makes now publick Profession of the Popish Religion, and who at the time of his first professing it, declared that for a great while before he had believed that to be the only true Religion. By all this, the deplorable State to which the Protestant Religion is reduced, is apparent, since the Affairs of the Church of England are now put into the Hands of Persons who have accepted of a Commission that is manifestly illegal, and who have executed it contrary to all Law; and that now one of their chief Members has abjur’d the Protestant Religion, and declared himself a Papist; by which he is become incapable of holding any publick Employment. The said Commissioners have hitherto given such Proof of their Submission to the Directions given them, that there is no Reason to doubt, but they will still continue to promote all such Designs as will be most agreeable to them. And those Evil Counsellors take Care to raise none to any Ecclesiastical Dignities, but Persons that have no Zeal for the Protestant Religion, and that now hide their Unconcernedness for it, under the specious Pretence of Moderation. The said Commissioners have suspended the Bishop of London, only because he refused to obey an Order that was sent him to suspend a worthy Divine, without so much as citing him before him to make his own Defence, or observing the common Forms of Process. They have turned out a President chosen by the Fellows of Magdalen College, and afterwards all the Fellows of that College, without so much as citing them before any Court that could take legal Cognizance of that Affair, or obtaining any Sentence against them by a competent Judge. And the only Reason that was given for turning them out, was their refusing to chuse for their President, a Person that was recommended to them by the Instigation of those Evil Counsellors; tho’ the Right of a Free Election belonged undoubtedly to them. But they were turn’d out of their Freeholds contrary to Law, and to that express Provision in the Magna Charta, That no Man shall lose Life or Goods, but by the Law of the Land. And now these Evil Counsellors have put the said College wholly into the Hands of Papists, tho’ as is above said, they are incapable of all such Employments, both by the Law of the Land, and the Statutes of the College. These Commissioners have also cited before them all the Chancellors and Archdeacons of England, requiring them to certify to them the Names of all such Clergymen as have read the King’s Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, and of such as have not read it; without considering that the reading of it was not enjoined the Clergy by the Bishops, who are their Ordinaries. The Illegality and Incompetency of the said Court of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners was so notoriously known, and it did so evidently appear that it tended to the Subversion of the Protestant Religion, that the most Reverend Father in God, William Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate and Metropolitan of all England, seeing that it was raised for no other End but to oppress such Persons as were of eminent Virtue, Learning and Piety, refused to sit, or to concur in it.

‘ 8. And tho’ there are many express Laws against all Churches or Chapels for the Exercise of the Popish Religion, and also against all Monasteries and Convents, and more particularly against the Order of the Jesuits; yet those Evil Counsellors have procured Orders for the building of several Churches and Chapels for the Exercise of that Religion. They have also procured divers Monasteries to be erected; and in Contempt of the Law, they have not only set up several Colleges of Jesuits in divers Places for the corrupting of the Youth, but have raised up one of the Order to be a Privy-Counsellor, and a Minister of State. By all which they do evidently shew, that they are restrained by no Rules of Law whatsoever; but that they have subjected the Honours and Estates of the Subjects, and the establish’d Religion to a Despotick Power, and to Arbitrary Government. In all which they are served and seconded by those Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

‘ 9. They have also follow’d the same Methods with relation to Civil Affairs; for they have procured Orders to examine all Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, and all others that were in any Publick Employment, if they would concur with the King in the Repeal of the Test and Penal Laws; and all such whose Consciences did not suffer them to comply with their Designs, were turned out, and others were put in their Places, who they believed would be more compliant to them in their Designs of defeating the Intent and Execution of those Laws which had been made with so much Care and Caution for the Security of the Protestant Religion. And in many of these Places they have put professed Papists, tho’ the Law has disabled them, and warranted the Subjects not to have any Regard to their Orders.

‘ 10. They have also invaded the Privileges, and seized on the Charters of most of those Towns that have a Right to be represented by their Burgesses in Parliament, and have procur’d Surrenders to be made of them, by which the Magistrates in them have delivered up all their Rights and Privileges, to be disposed of at the Pleasure of those Evil Counsellors, who have thereupon placed new Magistrates in those Towns, such as they can most intirely confide in; and in many of them they have put Popish Magistrates, notwithstanding the Incapacities under which the Law has put them.

‘ 11. And whereas no Nation whatsoever can subsist without the Administration of good and impartial Justice, upon which Mens Lives, Liberties, Honours and Estates do depend, those Evil Counsellors have subjected these to an Arbitrary and Despotick Power. In the most important Affairs, they have studied to discover, before-hand, the Opinion of the Judges, and have turned out such as they found would not conform themselves to their Intentions, and have put others in their Places, of whom they were more assured, without having any Regard to their Abilities. And they have not stuck to raise even professed Papists to the Courts of Judicature, notwithstanding their Incapacity by Law, and that no Regard is due to any Sentences

‘ tences flowing from them. They have carried this
 ‘ so far, as to deprive such Judges, who in the com‘ mon Administration of Justice, shewed that they ‘ were governed by their Consciences, and not by ‘ the Directions which the others gave them. By ‘ which it is apparent; that they design to render ‘ themselves the absolute Masters of the Lives, Ho‘ nours and Estates of the Subjects, of what Rank ‘ or Dignity soever they may be; and that without ‘ having any Regard either to the Equity of the ‘ Cause, or to the Consciences of the Judges, whom
 ‘ they will have to submit in all Things to their own ‘ Will and Pleasure; hoping by such Ways to in‘ timidate those who are yet in Employment, as ‘ also such others, as they shall think fit to put in ‘ the Rooms of those whom they have turned out;
 ‘ and to make them see what they must look for,
 ‘ if they should at any Time act in the least contrary ‘ to their good liking; and that no Failings of that ‘ Kind are pardoned in any Persons whatsoever. A ‘ great deal of Blood has been shed in many Places
 ‘ of the Kingdom, by Judges governed by those ‘ evil Counsellors, against all the Rules and Forms
 ‘ of Law, without so much as suffering the Persons ‘ that were accused to plead in their own De‘ fence.

‘ 12. They have also, by putting the Admini‘ stration of Justice in the Hands of Papists, brought ‘ all the Matters of Civil Justice into great Uncer‘ tainties; with how much Exactness and Justice
 ‘ soever that these Sentences may have been given.
 ‘ For since the Laws of the Land do not only exclude ‘ Papists from all Places of Judicature, but have put ‘ them under an Incapacity, none are bound to ac‘ knowledge or to obey their Judgments, and all ‘ Sentences given by them are null and void of them‘ selves: So that all Persons who have been cast
 ‘ in Trials before such Popish Judges, may justly ‘ look on their pretended Sentences, as having no
 ‘ more Force than the Sentences of any private ‘ or unauthoriz’d Person whatsoever. So deplorable ‘ is the Case of the Subjects who are obliged to an‘ swer to such Judges, that must in all Things stick ‘ to the Rules which are set them by those evil ‘ Counsellors, who, as they raised them up to those ‘ Employments, so can turn them out of them at ‘ Pleasure, and who can never be esteemed lawful ‘ Judges; so that all their Sentences are in the ‘ Construction of the Law of no Force and Efficacy.
 ‘ They have likewise disposed of all military Em‘ ployments in the same Manner; for tho’ the Laws
 ‘ have not only excluded Papists from all such Em‘ ployments, but have in particular provided, that ‘ they should be disarm’d; yet they, in Contempt of ‘ these Laws, have not only arm’d the Papists, but ‘ have likewise raised them up to the greatest mili‘ tary Trust both by Sea and Land; and that ‘ Strangers, as well as Natives, and Irish, as well
 ‘ as English; that so by those Means, having ren‘ dered themselves Masters both of the Affairs of the ‘ Church, of the Government, of the Nation, and ‘ of the Courts of Justice, and subjected them all
 ‘ to a despotick and arbitrary Power, they might ‘ be in a Capacity to maintain and execute their ‘ wicked Designs, by the Assistance of the Army,
 ‘ and thereby to enslave the Nation.

‘ 13. The dismal Effects of this Subversion of ‘ the establish’d Religion, Laws, and Liberties in ‘ England, appear more evidently to us, by what we ‘ see done in Ireland; where the whole Govern‘ ment is put into the Hands of Papists, and where ‘ all the Protestant Inhabitants are under the daily

‘ Fears of what may be justly apprehended from the ‘ arbitrary Power which is set up there; which ‘ has made great Numbers of them leave that King‘ dom, and abandon their Estates in it, remembring
 ‘ well that cruel and bloody Massacre which fell
 ‘ out in that Island in the Year 1641.

‘ 14. Those evil Counsellors have also prevailed ‘ with the King to declare in Scotland, that he is ‘ clothed with absolute Power, and that all the ‘ Subjects are bound to obey him without Reserve:
 ‘ Upon which he has assum’d an arbitrary Power
 ‘ both over the Religion and Laws of that King‘ dom; from all which it is apparent, what is to ‘ be looked for in England; as soon as Matters are ‘ duly prepared for it.

‘ 15. Those great and insufferable Oppressions, ‘ and the open Contempt of all Law, together with ‘ the Apprehensions of the sad Consequences that ‘ must certainly follow upon it, have put the Sub‘ jects under great and just Fears; and have made ‘ them look after such lawful Remedies as are al‘ lowed of in all Nations; yet all has been without ‘ Effect. And those evil Counsellors have endea‘ voured to make all Men apprehend the Loss of ‘ their Lives, Liberties, Honours, and Estates, if ‘ they should go about to preserve themselves from ‘ this Oppression by Petition, Representations, or ‘ other Means authoriz’d by Law. Thus did they ‘ proceed with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and ‘ the other Bishops, who having offer’d a most ‘ humble Petition to the King, in Terms full of Re‘ spect, and not exceeding the Number limited by ‘ Law; in which they set forth in short, the Rea‘ sons for which they could not obey that Order,
 ‘ which, by the Instigation of those evil Counsellors, ‘ was sent them, requiring them to appoint their ‘ Clergy to read in their Churches the Declaration
 ‘ for Liberty of Conscience; were sent to Prison,
 ‘ and afterwards brought to a Trial, as if they had ‘ been guilty of some enormous Crime. They were ‘ not only obliged to defend themselves in that Pur‘ suit, but to appear before profess’d Papists, who ‘ had not taken the Test, and by Consequence were ‘ Men whose Interest led them to condemn them;
 ‘ and the Judges that gave their Opinions in their ‘ Favours, were thereupon turned out.

‘ 16. And yet it cannot be pretended, that any ‘ Kings, how great soever their Power has been,
 ‘ and how arbitrary and despotick soever they have ‘ been in the Exercise of it, have ever reckon’d it
 ‘ a Crime for their Subjects to come in all Submissi‘ on and Respect, and in a due Number, not ex‘ ceeding the Limits of the Law, and present to ‘ them the Reasons that made it impossible for them
 ‘ to obey their Orders. Those evil Counsellors
 ‘ have also treated a Peer of the Realm as a Cri‘ minal, only because he said, That the Subjects
 ‘ were not bound to obey the Orders of a Popish ‘ Justice of Peace; though it is evident, that they ‘ being by Law rendred incapable of all such Trusts, ‘ no Regard is due to their Orders. This being the ‘ Security which the People have by the Law for ‘ their Lives, Liberties, Honours, and Estates, that ‘ they are not to be subjected to the arbitrary Pro‘ ceedings of Papists, that are contrary to Law put ‘ into any Employments Civil or Military.

‘ 17. Both We ourselves, and our dearest and ‘ most intirely beloved Consort the Princess, have ‘ endeavoured to signify, in Terms full of Respect ‘ to the King, the just and deep Regret which all ‘ these Proceedings have given us; and in Com‘ pliance with his Majesty’s Desires signified to us,
 ‘ We

‘ We declared both by Word of Mouth, to his Envoy, and in Writing, what our Thoughts were, touching the Repealing of the Test and Penal Laws; which We did in such a Manner, that We hoped We had proposed an Expedient, by which the Peace of those Kingdoms, and a happy Agreement among the Subjects of all Persuasions, might have been settled: But those evil Counsellors have put such ill Constructions on these our good Intentions, that they have endeavoured to alienate the King more and more from us; as if We had design’d to disturb the Quiet and Happiness of the Kingdom.

‘ 18. The last and great Remedy for all those Evils, is the Calling of a Parliament, for securing the Nation against the evil Practices of those wicked Counsellors: But this could not be yet compassed, nor can it be easily brought about. For those Men apprehending, that a lawful Parliament being once assembled, they would be brought to an Account for all their open Violations of Law, and for their Plots and Conspiracies against the Protestant Religion, and the Lives and Liberties of their Subjects; they have endeavoured, under the specious Pretence of Liberty of Conscience, first to sow Divisions among Protestants, between those of the Church of England and the Dissenters: The Design being laid to engage Protestants, that are all equally concerned to preserve themselves from Popish Oppression, into mutual Quarrellings, that so by these, some Advantages might be given to them to bring about their Designs; and that both in the Election of Members of Parliament, and afterwards in the Parliament itself. For they see well, that if all Protestants could enter into a mutual good Understanding one with another, and concur together in the preserving of their Religion, it would not be possible for them to compass their wicked Ends. They have also required all Persons, in the several Counties of England, that either were in any Employment, or were in any considerable Esteem, to declare before-hand, that they would concur in the Repeal of the Test and Penal Laws; and that they would give their Voices in the Elections to Parliament, only for such as would concur in it. Such as would not thus pre-engage themselves, were turned out of all Employments; and others who enter’d into those Engagements, were put in their Places, many of them being Papists. And contrary to the Charters and Privileges of those Boroughs that have a Right to send Burgesses to Parliament, they have ordered such Regulations to be made, as they thought fit and necessary, for assuring themselves of all the Members that are to be chosen by those Corporations: And by this Means they hope to avoid that Punishment which they have deserved; tho’ it is apparent, that all Acts made by Popish Magistrates, are null and void of themselves. So that no Parliament can be lawful, for which the Elections and Returns are made by Popish Sheriffs and Mayors of Towns; and therefore as long as the Authority and Magistracy is in such Hands, it is not possible to have any lawful Parliament. And tho’ according to the Constitution of the English Government, and immemorial Custom, all Elections of Parliament Men ought to be made with an intire Liberty, without any Sort of Force; or the requiring the Electors to chuse such Persons as shall be named to them; and the Persons thus freely elected, ought to give ‘ their Opinions freely, upon all Matters that are brought before them; having the Good of the Nation ever before their Eyes, and following in all Things the Dictates of their Conscience; yet now the People of England cannot expect a Remedy from a Free Parliament, legally called and chosen. But they may, perhaps, see one called, in which all Elections will be carried by Fraud or Force; and which will be composed of such Persons, of whom those evil Counsellors hold themselves well assured; in which all Things will be carried on according to their Direction and Interest, without any Regard to the Good or Happiness of the Nation. Which may appear evidently from this, that the same Persons tried the Members of the last Parliament, to gain them to consent to the Repeal of the Test and Penal Laws; and procured that Parliament to be dissolved, when they found that they could not, neither by Promises nor Threatnings, prevail with the Members to comply with their wicked Designs.

‘ 19. But to crown all, there are great and violent Presumptions, inducing us to believe, that those evil Counsellors, in order to the carrying on of their ill Designs, and to the gaining to themselves the more Time for the effecting of them, (for the encouraging of their Complices, and for the discouraging of all good Subjects) have published, that the Queen hath brought forth a Son; tho’ there have appeared, both during the Queen’s pretended Bigness, and in the Manner in which the Birth was managed, so many just and visible Grounds of Suspicion, that not only we ourselves, but all the good Subjects of those Kingdoms, do vehemently suspect, that the pretended Prince of Wales was not born by the Queen. And it is notoriously known to all the World, that many both doubted of the Queen’s Bigness, and of the Birth of the Child; and yet there was not any one Thing done to satisfy them, or to put an End to their Doubts.

‘ 20. And since our dearest and most intirely-beloved Consort the Princess, and likewise we ourselves have so great an Interest in this Matter, and such a Right (as all the World knows) to the Succession to the Crown: Since also the English did in the Year 1672, when the States General of the United Provinces were invaded in a most unjust War, use their utmost Endeavours to put an End to that War, and that in Opposition to those who were then in the Government; and by their so doing, they run the Hazard of losing both the Favour of the Court, and their Employments: And since the English Nation has ever testified a most particular Affection and Esteem, both to our dearest Consort the Princess, and to ourselves, We cannot excuse ourselves from espousing their Interests, in a Matter of such high Consequence; and from contributing all that lies in Us, for the maintaining both of the Protestant Religion, and of the Laws and Liberties of those Kingdoms, and for the securing to them the continual Enjoyment of all their just Rights. To the doing of which, We are most earnestly solicited by a great many Lords, both Spiritual and Temporal, and by many Gentlemen, and other Subjects of all Ranks.

‘ 21. Therefore it is, that We have thought fit to go over to England, and to carry over with us a Force, sufficient by the Blessing of God, to defend us from the Violence of those evil Counsellors.

fellors. And We being desirous that our Intentions in this may be rightly understood, have, for this End, prepared this Declaration, in which, as we have hitherto given a true Account of the Reasons inducing us to it; so, We now think fit to declare, that this our Expedition is intended for no other Design, but to have a free and lawful Parliament assembled, as soon as is possible: and that in order to this, all the late Charters, by which the Election of Burgeffes are limited contrary to the antient Custom, shall be considered as null and of no Force: And likewise all Magistrates who have been unjustly turned out, shall forthwith resume their former Employments, as well as all the Boroughs of England shall return again to their antient Prescriptions and Charters: And more particularly, that the antient Charter of the great and famous City of London, shall again be in Force: And that the Writs for the Members of Parliament shall be addressed to the proper Officers, according to Law and Custom. That also none be suffer'd to chuse, or to be chosen Members of Parliament, but such as are qualified by Law: And that the Members of Parliament being thus lawfully chosen, they shall meet and sit in full Freedom; that so the two Houses may concur in the preparing of such Laws, as they, upon full and free Debate, shall judge necessary and convenient, both for the confirming and executing the Law concerning the Test, and such other Laws as are necessary for the Security and Maintenance of the Protestant Religion; as likewise for making such Laws as may establish a good Agreement between the Church of England and all Protestant Dissenters; as also for the covering and securing of all such who will live peaceably under the Government, as becomes good Subjects, from all Persecution upon the Account of their Religion, even Papists themselves not excepted; and for the doing of all other Things, which the two Houses of Parliament shall find necessary for the Peace, Honour and Safety of the Nation, so that there may be no more Danger of the Nations falling at any Time hereafter under Arbitrary Government. To this Parliament we will also refer the Enquiry into the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales, and of all Things relating to it, and to the Right of Succession.

22. And We, for our Part, will concur in every Thing that may procure the Peace and Happiness of the Nation, which a free and lawful Parliament shall determine; since we have nothing before our Eyes in this our Undertaking, but the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, the Covering of all Men from Persecution for their Consciences, and the securing to the whole Nation the free Enjoyment of all their Laws, Rights and Liberties under a just and legal Government.

23. This is the Design that we have proposed to ourselves, in appearing upon this Occasion in Arms: In the Conduct of which, We will keep the Forces under our Command, under all the Strictness of Martial Discipline; and take a special Care, that the People of the Countries, through which we must march, shall not suffer by their Means; and as soon as the State of the Nation will admit of it, We promise that We will send back all those foreign Forces that we have brought along with us.

24. We do therefore hope that all People will judge rightly of us, and approve of these our Proceedings: But we chiefly rely on the Blessing of God for the Success of this our Undertaking, in which We place our whole and only Confidence.

25. We do in the last Place invite and require all Persons whatsoever, all the Peers of the Realm both Spiritual and Temporal, all Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, and all Gentlemen, Citizens, and other Commons of all Ranks, to come and assist us, in order to the executing of this our Design, against all such as shall endeavour to oppose us; that so we may prevent all those Miseries which must needs follow upon the Nations being kept under Arbitrary Government and Slavery: And that all the Violences and Disorders which have overturned the whole Constitution of the English Government, may be fully redressed in a free and legal Parliament.

26. And We do likewise resolve, that as soon as the Nations are brought to a State of Quiet, We will take Care that a Parliament shall be called in Scotland, for the restoring the antient Constitution of that Kingdom, and for bringing the Matters of Religion to such a Settlement, that the People may live easy and happy, and for putting an End to all the unjust Violences, that have been in a Course of so many Years committed there.

We will also study to bring the Kingdom of Ireland to such a State, that the Settlement there may be religiously observed; and that the Protestant and British Interest there, may be secured. And we will endeavour by all possible Means to procure such an Establishment in all the three Kingdoms, that they may all live in a happy Union and Correspondence together; and that the Protestant Religion, and the Peace, Honour and Happiness of these Nations, may be establish'd upon lasting Foundations.

Given under our Hand and Seal, at our Court in the Hague, the tenth Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1688.

WILLIAM HENRY, PRINCE of ORANGE.

By his Highness's Special Command,

C. HUYGENS.

His Highness's Additional Declaration.

After We had prepared and printed this our Declaration, We have understood, that the Subverters of the Religion and Laws of those Kingdoms, hearing of our Preparations to assist the People against them, have begun to retract some of the Arbitrary and Despotick Powers that they had assumed, and to vacate some of their unjust Judgments and Decrees. The Sense of their Guilt, and the Distrust of their Force, have induced them to offer to the City of London some seeming Relief from their great Oppressions; hoping thereby to quiet the People, and to divert them from demanding a Re-establishment of their Religion and Laws under the Shelter of our Arms: They do also give out, that we do intend to conquer and enslave the Nation; and therefore it is that we have thought fit to add a few Words to our Declaration.

We are confident, that no Persons can have such hard Thoughts of us, as to imagine that We have any other Design in this Undertaking, than to procure a Settlement of the Religion, and of the Liberties and Properties of the Subjects, upon so sure sure a Foundation, that there may be no Danger of the Nations relapsing into the like Miseries at any Time hereafter. And as the Forces that We have brought along with us, are utterly disproportioned to that wicked Design of conquering the Nation, if We were capable of intending it; so the great Numbers of the principal Nobility and Gentry, that are Men of eminent Quality and Estates, and Persons of known Integrity and Zeal both for the Religion and Government of England, many of them also being distinguished by their constant Fidelity to the Crown, who do both accompany us in this Expedition, and have earnestly solicited us to it, will cover us from all such malicious Insinuations: For it is not to be imagined, that either those who have invited us, or those that are already come to assist us, can join in a wicked Attempt of Conquest, to make void their own lawful Titles to their Honours, Estates and Interests. We are also confident, that all Men see how little Weight there is to be laid on all Promises and Engagements, that can be now made; since there has been so little Regard had in the Time past, to the most solemn Promises. And as that imperfect Redress that is now offered, is a plain Confession of those Violations of the Government that We have set forth; so the Defectiveness of it is no less apparent: For they lay down nothing which they may not take up at Pleasure; and they reserve entire, and not so much as mentioned, their Claim and Pretences to an Arbitrary and Despotick Power; which has been the Root of all their Oppression, and of the total Subversion of the Government. And, it is plain, that there can be no Redress, no Remedy offer'd but in Parliament; by a Declaration of the Rights of the Subjects that have been invaded, and not by any pretended Acts of Grace, to which the Extremity of their Affairs has driven them. Therefore it is that We have thought fit to declare, that We will refer all to a free Assembly of the Nation, in a lawful Parliament.

Given under our Hand and Seal, at our Court in the Hague, the twenty fourth Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1688.

WILLIAM HENRY, PRINCE of ORANGE.

By his Highness's Special Command,

C. HUYGENS.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The Reason why we humbly offer this Declaration, is with Relation to that Passage in the Sermon, which says, that the Prince of Orange disclaimed all Manner of Resistance. All we observe is, that it don't appear that he came over with an Army with any other Intent than to defend himself against evil Counsellors: And if the Doctor has made a wrong Inference, we submit it to your Lordships, whether such a Misapprehension of his Highness's Meaning, shall subject him to a Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, We have finished what we have to offer on this Article, and submit it to your Lordships whether we have not made good our Defence. We are ready to go on to the second Article, if it be your Lordships Pleasure.

Then the LORDS adjourned to their House above.

Monday, March 6. The Seventh Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-hall, and being seated in the Manner before-mention'd, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly Charge and Command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, you that are Counsel for the Prisoner, may proceed in his Defence.

Mr. Dodd. MY Lords, We who are Counsel for Doctor Sacheverell, beg the Favour that we may enter on the Doctor's Defence as to the second Article: This Article is divided into three Heads. 1. That the Toleration is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable. 2. That he is a False Brother, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience. 3. That it is the Duty of the chief Pastors to thunder out Anathemas, &c.

The first Head I shall speak to is, as to the Toleration. My Lords, we say there is no such Thing as a Toleration granted by Law; the Word is not to be found in the Act of Parliament; there is an Act (which we suppose is intended) to exempt Protestant Dissenters from the Penalties of certain Laws therein mentioned: However, in this Debate, we shall take Notice of it as a Toleration; altho' we think, when there is a legal Proceeding, the Act should have been called by its own proper Name: Now, my Lords, this Act of Parliament hath several Restrictions and Limitations in it, and (amongst others) not to exempt any Persons from the Penalties, that do not frequent some religious Assembly thereby allowed. The Doctor no where finds Fault with a legal Toleration, or a Toleration granted by Law, within the Description and Meaning of this Act of Parliament. My Lords, we think the Doctor has taken such Care, lest any Expression should undergo a wrong Construction, as if he were uneasy at the Toleration, that he explains himself very particularly about it: We shall read the Words out of the Sermon, which I think will clear the Doctor as to this Objection; the Doctor says, Pray do not misunderstand me, as if I reflected upon that Indulgence the Government has given the Dissenters, which I am sure all Well-wishers to our Church are ready to grant; nor do I intend to cast the least Reflection on that Indulgence, which the Law has given to Consciences truly scrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has prescribed.

Now after such a Declaration, so plain a Confession, so full in the Case, in Words as significant as can be to shew his Meaning, we hope there is no Room to tax him with this Part of the Article by any incoherent Words, or Inferences, when it is is directly contrary to what he has in Words at length exprest'd.

My Lords, This being considered, we think it is too hard to draw Inferences, and Consequences, that the Doctor is against the Toleration allowed by Law; it is not to be done with Candor, by any one that reads the Sermon without Prejudice, and considers the Care he takes to avoid giving any Offence in this Case.

As to the second Part of this Article, we think it may receive the same Answer; That he is a False Brother who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience. The Doctor does not say they are False Brethren that defend a legal Toleration; No-body complains of that; but the Persons intended, are those that defend an unlawful Toleration, and not a legal Exemption; which legal Exemption the Doctor admits to be good and just, in the Passage I have before repeated. We apprehend, the Doctor means those are False Brethren, and blameable, that excuse the Separation from the Church, not on account of the Toleration, but by laying the Faults on the true Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high; these are the People, the False Brethren, that cry out against the Church upon all Occasions.

As to the Doctor's Expressions about Archbishop Grindall, the Doctor thought he had good Grounds for them; but at least they were but unwary Expressions, and we hope not criminal. The Toleration he mentions Archbishop Grindall to be blamed for, was quite another Thing from the present Indulgence now granted; the first was by Q. Elizabeth alone, or by the Archbishop's Authority under her, and without the Parliament; the Dissenters were then few, and it had been no great Difficulty to have prevented that Schism at the Beginning. But now the Dissenters are a considerable Part of the Nation, have great Riches, and Properties amongst us, and it became the Wisdom of the Legislature, to give them an Indulgence according to the Restrictions in the Act of Parliament: But this is a different Case, and by a different Authority, from what was in Archbishop Grindall's Time. The Story of that Archbishop, as related by one of the Gentlemen Managers, does indeed acquit the Archbishop, but how far it clears Queen Elizabeth, we must leave to your Lordships; for should a great Favourite Attempt to procure a Grant of the Archbishop's Palace, or a chief Revenue of that See or Church, and that the Archbishop's opposing the Favourite herein (as was by the Gentleman suggested) should be the Reason of his Disgrace; or, if the Archbishop did prosecute or punish a Man in the Spiritual Court, for having two Wives at the same Time; (which Prosecution or Punishment was highly commendable in the Archbishop, and was his Duty to do) it would be hard to think, that Queen Elizabeth should suspend him from the Archbishoprick for such a Proceeding, for thus discharging his Duty; therefore we cannot give Credit to that History as it is related; but we shall shew your Lordships, from the Archbishop's Letter to the Council, and Letters from Beza and Calvin at that Time, that it was his Indulgence to the Dissenters of that Time, that drew the Anger of Queen Elizabeth on him; and that this was the Reason of it, we shall make out by undeniable Proof. Now, my Lords, we apprehend the Fault the Doctor finds in his Sermon is against an universal general Toleration that tends to a Dissolution of all Things; and such a Toleration, would make Religion like that of the Samaritans, a Mixture of all Sorts, that was odious to the World, and an Abomination to the Jews; and indeed, my Lords, we apprehend such a Toleration the Doctor had great Reason to find Fault with. Surely such a Toleration is not to be defended, nor would be of any Service to either Church or State: This is the Toleration which we think the Doctor intended, and not against a legal or particular Exemption, which the Wisdom of the Nation hath thought fit to give. Indeed he thinks, that Occasional Conformists do attempt to hoist the Toleration into an Establishment, and come into the Communion of the Church to serve a particular Purpose; and this at most can only be said to be the Doctor's Opinion of that Matter, and whether true or false, cannot be criminal. To speak against a Law, or to break a Law, is not to be justified: Nor has he spoke against this Law; but if he had, surely he had been punishable in the ordinary Methods of Justice, and not in a Proceeding of this Nature.

As to the next Head, that is, as to that Part of the Charge about thundering out Anathema's; the Discourse is general, and not determined to any Persons, nor pointed at the Dissenters, but properly intended against Irreligion; and the Sentence that he dares any Power on Earth to reverse, is such, and such only, as is ratified in Heaven. He believes some Sentences of the Church to be ratified in Heaven; and if that Sentence which is pronounced here on Earth, be ratified in Heaven, it is, beyond all Dispute, out of the Power of Man to reverse it. He supposes some Persons exempt from Punishment by particular Laws, may yet, by the Law of Christ, be liable to such a Sentence: But from hence, or his Answer to the Articles, to draw a Conclusion, that he asserts the State had not Power to reverse the Sentence of the Spiritual Court, (of which there can be no doubt, but that the Legislature has such a Power) or that the Legislature is guilty of Blasphemy, (as has been objected by one of the Gentlemen Managers) is neither true Reason nor Logick.

That Schism is a Sin punishable by the Laws of the Church, will not be disputed, if it be a Separation without a just Cause; and how far this is such a Separation, or that the Act of Parliament hath taken away this Schism, this Sin, we submit to your Lordships.

Mr. Phipps. MY Lords, We are come now to the second Article, and we humbly apprehend, shall give your Lordships as full Satisfaction of the Doctor's Innocence, as to that Crime charg'd in this Article, as we hope we did as to those contain'd in the first Article.

As to that Part of the second Article which says, That the Doctor does suggest and maintain, that the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable: He conceives there is nothing in his Sermon can warrant that Charge. The Toleration Act is not what the Doctor finds Fault with, but the Persons that abuse it; and I beg Leave to say, that the ill Use which is made of it, is unreasonable and unwarrantable. But, that the Doctor asserts the Toleration itself to be unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable, will appear to be a great Mistake, when the Paragraphs in the Doctor's Sermon, upon which this Article is founded, are consider'd.

My Lords, The first Passage is in Page the 8th, where the Doctor says thus: If upon all Occasions to comply with the Dissenters, both in publick and private Affairs, as Persons of tender Consciences and Piety, to promote their Interests in Elections, to sneak to them for Places and Preferment, to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and under the Pretence of Moderation, to excuse their Separation, and lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church for carrying Matters too high, &c. These are some of the Characters which the Doctor gives of False Brethren: But, is there any Thing in this Passage that avers Toleration to be unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable?

Page the 10th, the Doctor hath these Words, which were urged to prove this Article: Our Constitution, both in Church and State, has been so admirably contrived, with that Wisdom, Weight and Sagacity, and the Temper and Genius of each, so exactly Suited and Modell'd, to the mutual Support and Assistance of one another, that 'tis hard to say, whether the Doctrines of the Church of England contribute more to authorize and enforce our Civil Laws, or our Laws to maintain and defend the Doctrines of our Church. The Natures of both are so nicely correspondent, and so happily intermixed, that 'tis almost impossible to offer a Violation to the one, without breaking in upon the Body of the other. So that in all those Cases before mentioned, whoever presumes to innovate, alter, or misrepresent any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be arraign'd as a Traitor to the State; Heterodoxy in the Doctrines of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring Rebellion and High Treason in the other; and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate as much to punish and restrain, as the Ecclesiastical. Can this be meant of the Toleration? Is the Toleration so much as mentioned here? Does he not here speak against such as innovate, alter, or misrepresent the Articles of our Faith? Is there any Innovation, Alteration, or Misrepresentation of any Article of our Faith by the Protestant Dissenters? The Dissenters do not differ from us in Matters of Faith, but in Matters of Form and Ceremony; if they differ'd from us in Matters of Faith, they would be Hereticks, and Heresy was never intended to be tolerated by the Act of Indulgence: And therefore what the Doctor says in this Paragraph, can never be taken to be a Reflection on the Toleration.

I shall next humbly offer to your Lordships Consideration another Clause, which was cited by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons to support this Article, which is Page 14. where 'tis said, These False Brethren in our Government, do not singly, and in private, spread their Poison, but (what is lamentable to be spoken) are suffer'd to combine into Bodies, and Seminaries, wherein Atheism, Deism, Tritheism, Socinianism, with all the bellish Principles of Fanaticism, Regicide and Anarchy, are openly profess'd, and taught, to corrupt and debauch the Youth of the Nation, in all Parts of it, down to Poverty, to the present Reproach, and future Extirpation of our Laws, and Religion. Certainly the Toleration was never intended to indulge, and cherish such Monsters and Vipers in our Bosom, that scatter their Pestilence at Noon-day, and will rend, distract, and confound, the firmest and best settled Constitution in the World. Is there any Thing in this Clause that can maintain this Article? The Doctor says, Certainly the Toleration was never intended to indulge and cherish such Monsters, and Vipers in our Bosom, as Atheists, Tritheists, Socinians, &c. And the Doctor is well warrant'd in saying that, because those enormous Crimes are particularly excepted in the Act of Toleration, and for this we refer to the Act itself.

The next Clause that was urg'd to maintain this Article is in the 16th Page, where the Doctor expresseth himself in these Words: But since this Model of an universal Liberty and Coalition fail'd, and these False Brethren could not carry the Conventicle into the Church, they are now resolv'd to bring the Church into the Conventicle, which will more plausibly and slyly effect her Ruin: What could not be gain'd by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church can't be pull'd down, it may be blown up; and no Matter with these Men how 'tis destroy'd, so that it is destroy'd. Does this suggest the Toleration to be unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable? It rather excuses it from having hurt the Church: For he says, What could not be gain'd by Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; so that the Injury which is done to the Church is ascribed by him to some other Cause. Thus your Lordships observe there is not any Passage in the Doctor's Sermon, whereby he suggests that the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable, and consequently no Foundation for this Article, unless it is to be supported by Inferences contrary to the Doctor's express Words: For the Doctor in his Sermon, Page 20. says, I would not here be understood, as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government has condescended to give them, which I am sure all those that wish well to our Church are very ready to grant to Consciences truly scrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has prescrib'd. By which 'tis evident, he allows the Indulgence given by the Act to Dissenters, and is very far from suggesting, that it is unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable. He wishes with all his Heart they may enjoy it in the full Limits of the Law. And therefore if there be any other Expressions concerning Toleration, which may seem to carry a dubious Sense, 'tis humbly conceiv'd they ought not to be apply'd to the Exemption granted by Law, but will be so interpreted as may consist with his avowed Approbation of that Law. For in all Writings, such Exposition is to be made, that one Part may not contradict or be inconsistent with the other. But to strain the Sense of any ambiguous Clause, and to put such a Construction upon it, as to make it contradict a plain and positive Assertion in the same Writing, was never allow'd, and I am sure will not be permitted by your Lordships, who have shew'd such a just Abhorrence of strain'd and foreign Insinuations and Innuendo's. And therefore where he seems to blame those who defend Toleration, he cannot be thought to condemn the Indulgence granted by Law, because he hath in such positive and express Terms allowed and approved of it.

But it must have some other Meaning, and I think his Meaning is very plain. For by condemning such as defend Toleration, 'tis evident, he means such as maintain, that the Act of Indulgence is a Justification of their Separation, and excuseth them from the Sin of Schism: For the Defence of Toleration, and Excuse of Separation, are mentioned in one and the same Clause of the Sentence, and in one and the same Branch of their Character of False Brethren. So that the true and genuine Sense of what he hath said in his Sermon concerning Toleration is,

1. That he intirely approves of the Exemption by the Act of Indulgence of Protestant Dissenters from the several Penalties inflicted by the several Statutes for their Non-Conformity.

2. That tho' they are exempt from the Penalties, yet that does not excuse their Separation from the Sin of Schism in foro Conscientiæ. And is the Doctor alone in this Notion? Is he not justified in it by the Opinion of many learned Men, who have writ on that Subject? Nay, I appeal to your Lordships, whether it be not the concurrent Opinion of the greatest Part, if not all the learned Men of our Church at this Day.

And since the Act of Uniformity is in Force, and is not repeal'd or enervated by the Act of Indulgence, since the Doctrine and Worship of the Church of England is the establish'd Religion of this Kingdom, whether a Separation from the Church, since the Act of Indulgence, is not as much a Schism in foro Conscientiæ, as it was before, is humbly submitted.

But suppose that Separation from the Church by Dissenters, since the Act of Indulgence, should not be thought a Schism, yet he having the Opinion of so many learned Men of his Side, his Assertion cannot be said to be wicked, malicious, and seditious, nor to be so high a Crime and Misdemeanor, as to be the subject Matter of an Impeachment.

But the Passages in the Doctor's Sermon, which are supposed to condemn the Toleration, or to reflect on the Dissenters, are open to another plain and natural Construction. For since he positively, and in express Terms, allows Liberty of Conscience to Consciences truly scrupulous, and which are intitled to the Benefit of the Act: Where he condemns or speaks against Toleration, it must be intended as to such Dissenters who are not intitled to the Benefit of the Act, but are excepted out of it: And those are such as by Printing or Writing deny the Trinity, such as do not come to some Assembly of Religious Worship allowed by that Act; and no Assembly of Religious Worship is allow'd by that Act 'till the Place of meeting be certified to the Bishop, Archdeacon, or Justices at the Quarter-Sessions, and recorded, and a Certificate thereof given: And, what Multitudes frequent Religious Assemblies which are not allow'd by that Act? Nay, how few Religious Assemblies are qualified according to the Act? What vast Numbers go to no Religious Worship at all? And how many there are who deny the second Person of the Trinity, is too evident: And against every one of these, all the Laws for frequenting Divine Service on the Lord's Day are still in Force, by the express Words of that Act. Therefore all those who defend a general Toleration, who maintain that the Act extends to all such Dissenters, are justly censur'd by the Doctor; and all the Expressions in the Doctor's Sermon against Toleration must be intended against those excepted in the Act, since he so expressly approves the Indulgence allow'd to those that conform to the Terms prescribed by the Act.

My Lords, As to that Branch of this second Article, which charges the Doctor with asserting, That Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbishop Grindall to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline; whether he be not warranted in this Assertion, is humbly submitted to your Lordships, when 'tis consider'd, That Archbishop was once in the highest Esteem with the Queen, She made him Bishop of London, then Archbishop of York, and afterwards promoted him to the See of Canterbury; and that after this he was in Disgrace, and died in her Majesty's Displeasure, cannot be deny'd. The Reason assign'd for his Disgrace was, that he was a great Encourager of unlawful Conventicles, or Prophesyings, as they were then called. Whether that Charge against him was true, or whether it was only a false Suggestion of the Earl of Leicester, to remove him from the Queen's Favour, I will not presume to determine. The learned Manager who spoke first to this Article, was pleas'd to acquit the Archbishop, and lay the Fault upon the Queen; though, whoever reads Calvin's and Beza's Letters to him, when Bishop of London, whoever reads Queen Elizabeth's Letter to the Bishops, dated the third of May, 1577, and the Archbishop's own Letter to the Lords of the Council the 25th of November, 1577, will be fully satisfied that he was not innocent; for he confesses he was commanded by the Queen and Council to suppress the Prophesyings, and that he refused, and could not comply with that Command; and acknowledged it to be an Act of great Clemency in her Majesty, that she carried her Repentment no higher. So, I think, that pious good Queen is intirely acquitted by the Archbishop himself.

All Historians admit, that in his Time the Puritans were very numerous, and their Party very strong; and it is evident they grew so dangerous, that the Statute of the 35th of Elizabeth was made to suppress their Conventicles, and compel them to come to Church. And at his Death the Affairs of the Church were in so great Confusion, that his Successor, Archbishop Whitgift, was put to great Trouble to check that growing Faction, and reduce Things into good Order again. If therefore the Doctor was of Opinion the Puritans receiv'd too great Encouragement by the Countenance of that great Man, and if it was his Zeal for the Church, and the Repentment he had that it should receive any Prejudice by the Connivance of one at the Head of it, that provoked him to use a harsh Expression of that Archbishop, 'tis humbly to be hoped that is not a sufficient Ground for an Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

The Gentleman that spoke first to this Article, was pleas'd to admit, that what the Doctor said in relation to that Archbishop, was not an offence, as it was a Reflection on the Archbishop; but that using such Expressions of the Archbishop for his Moderation to the Puritans, was a Reflection on the late Act of Toleration granted to Protestant Dissenters; and that calling the Prosecutions against the Prophesyings in Queen Elizabeth's Time Wholesome Severities, is an Encouragement to use such Severities against the Protestant Dissenters now.

Can what was done in Queen Elizabeth's Time reflect on the Toleration? Can calling the Prosecutions by Queen Elizabeth against such as frequented Conventicles against the Law, and for which there was no Toleration; I say, can the calling such Prosecutions Wholesome Severities, reflect on this Toleration granted by Law? Or can it encourage a Prosecution against the Dissenters, who are intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration, and are exempt from the Penalties of the Laws?

The only Thing that can be inferr'd from what the Doctor says, in relation to the Wholesome Se-

verities is, That he intended to excite the Magistrates to put the Laws in Execution against such Dissenters as were excepted out of the Act of Toleration; and I am at a Loss to find how that can make him an Offender. For surely the Parliament never intended that any Person should have the Benefit of the Act of Toleration, that did not comply with the Terms and Conditions of it: And therefore when the Doctor presseth the Execution of the Laws against such as are not intitled to the Benefit of the Act, he seems to me rather to Vindicate than Reflect upon the Toleration. Great Offence hath been taken at the Words Wholesome Severities in the Doctor's Sermon; yet my Lords, I cannot think the Word Wholesome an improper Epithet for the Severities used by Queen Elizabeth against the Puritans; for Faction was then in its Infancy, Schism did but just begin to disturb the Church; and by the Severities of the Laws that were put in Execution, and the Courage, Learning, and Prudence of Archbishop Whitgift, a Stop was put to them. And, I presume, such Severities as suppress'd these bold and daring Crimes in their Infancy, may be called Wholesome without a Catachresis; and can never be construed to be a Suggestion, that the Toleration now granted by Law is unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable.

As to that Part of the Second Article, which chargeth the Doctor with maintaining, That it is the Duty of Superior Pastors to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration: The Doctor humbly apprehends there is nothing in his Sermon can be a just Foundation for that Charge.

The Sermon hath this Sentence, Page 25. Let our Superior Pastors do their Duty, in thundering out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's; and let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratified in Heaven. This is an intire and independent Sentence, that doth not relate to any particular Person, or any particular Crimes, and does not mention the Persons intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration.

Nor can it be imagin'd that he should desire Anathema's to be thundered out against such Persons who he wisheth may enjoy the Toleration in the full Limits the Law hath prescrib'd. But the Anathema's must be intended to be against the Works of Darkness, Atheism, Prophaneness, Faction, and other enormous Crimes which are mentioned in the preceding Part of this Sermon, since it is not applied by him to any particular Sins or Offences.

The thundering Anathema's, is declaring those Judgments which are denounced in Scripture against Sin. And he desires the Superior Pastors of the Church to thunder out these Anathema's, because the greater the Authority is of the Person that declares these Judgments, the greater Influence they are like to have upon the Persons guilty of such Sins.

But if he had desir'd Anathema's, or Excommunications, (as they would infer) should be thundered out against Dissenters, yet it must be intended only against such as are not intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration; and since the Act of Indulgence leaves such Persons open to the Laws, it cannot be a Crime in the Doctor to press the Execution of the Laws against them.

For not to accept of the Toleration on the Terms offer'd by the Act, is what the Doctor calls boisting the Toleration into an Establishment, in despite of the Act, and setting up a Toleration of their own in Defiance of it.

As to the last Part of the Second Article, which charges, that the Doctor insolently dares and defies any Power on Earth to reverse such Sentences, which Sentences are there insinuated to be the Sentences, or Anathema's, given and thundered out by Superior Pastors; there are no such Words in the Doctor's Sermon: For, the Doctor's Words are, Let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratified in Heaven. So that the bare Recital of the Doctor's Expression, is a sufficient Confutation of that Part of the Article.

For, if the Judgments or Anathema's denounced by Superior Pastors against Sin, are such as are denounced against such Sins in Scripture, such Sentences may truly be said to be ratified in Heaven: And if so, then no one can dare to think, that such Sentences, so ratified in Heaven, can be reversed by all the Powers on Earth united together. And therefore, the Doctor hopes it will not be thought Insolence, or a High Crime or Misdemeanor in him, to assert what he conceiv'd would be Blasphemy in any one to deny. This is what I humbly offer to your Lordships Consideration on this Article.

Mr. De. MY Lords, I humbly beg the Favour of a few Words on this Article. It is divided into Three Parts. The first is concerning Toleration; the Charge against the Doctor is, That he has reflected on the Toleration as it is Established by Law. I crave Leave to take Notice, that on considering the whole Sermon, there are two distinct Tolerations mentioned in it; a Toleration that is Legal, (for so I call the Act of Indulgence) and a Toleration that is general; and we think that Distinction, well observed, will clear the Doctor of any Crime in this Particular. Where he reflects on Toleration, it is not the Legal Toleration, but the general; and if it will bear this Construction, you will not put the other upon it; for where he has taken Notice of a Legal Toleration, (which he hath done only in one Place of his Sermon) he is for extending it to the utmost Bounds; his Words are these, I would not here be misunderstood, as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government hath condescended to give them; which I am sure all those that wish well to our Church, are very ready to grant to Consciences truly Scrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law hath prescribed. But where he speaks against Toleration, it is a Toleration of such enormous Crimes, as are not fit to be tolerated in any Christian Nation.

As to the Second Part of the Article, for reflecting on Archbishop Grindal, and thereby reflecting on the Toleration, it was given up on the other Side; and admitted, that, whether True or False, it was not material, and then surely that will hardly amount to a Crime. But, we shall be so far from giving up that Point, that we shall shew he was False to the Church at that Time; and it was a Crime in him, to give up the Discipline of the Church. No Laws were then made to indulge any Separation: And for the Head of the Church, under the Queen, to give up the Discipline of the Church, was a high Crime in him; and though it may be thought harsh, will bear the true Term of a False Brother.

As to the Third Part of the Article, the thundering out Anathema's, I would beg Leave to read that Part of the Doctor's Sermon, which, I hope, shall not be applied to those that are within the Legal Toleration. Schism and Faction are Things of impudent udent and incroaching Natures, they thrive upon Concessions, take Permission for Power, and advance a Toleration immediately into an Establishment: (I hope the Dissenters will not take these Characters on themselves:) And are therefore to be treated like growing Mischiefs, or infectious Plagues, &c. Presently after follows, Let our Superior Pastors, do their Duty, in thundering out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's; and let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratified in Heaven. Now, my Lords, I would beg Leave to say, that this is only Advice; and altho' the Doctor may be accounted pretty Pert, to give Advice to his Superior Pastors, that they ought to thunder out Anathema's; yet this cannot be construed to extend to them that are described in the Act of Toleration, those that could not conform to some Ceremonials by reason of Scrupulous Consciences, these could not be called Factious, but is meant of other People described in the Sermon. But if the Doctor had advised to thunder out Anathema's against Dissenters; (supposing, but not granting it) the Question would come to this Point, whether he was deceived in Point of Judgment or no: For, if they were Schismatics before, the Schism remains the same, notwithstanding the Toleration; and if it was Sin before the Act of Toleration, it is so still, notwithstanding the Act; and then his Advice to the Superior Pastors, is, to do that which is, (with Submission) their Duty to do, 'till prohibited by the Temporal Courts. My Lords, I shall mention one Case, that will shew you, that it is still Schism to separate from the Church, and that it is the Duty of Dissenters to Communicate with the Church. That was the Case of one Mr. Larwood: In Hillary Term, sixto of King William. An Information was exhibited against him, for refusing to take upon him the Office of Sheriff of the City of Norwich; he pleads he had not taken the Sacrament in Twelve Months; the Attorney replied, that he ought to have done it. He rejoins, that he was a Protestant Dissenter, and was excused by the Act for Toleration. There were two Points in the Case; the first was, whether it appear'd by the Information that the Defendant was duly elected; the other, whether the Plea in Bar was good, (for the whole Court held, that the Rejoinder was a Departure from the Bar, and that the Replication was insufficient); so that Judgment was to be given upon the Information, and the Plea in Bar. Samuel Eyre, Justice, was of Opinion with the Defendant as to both Points; my Lord Chief Justice Holt, and Mr. Justice Giles Eyre, were of Opinion against him as to both Points, and held the Bar to be insufficient, because it was only excusing of one Fault by another, which no Man shall be admitted to do; and they held, that the Duty of Communicating with the Church remain'd notwithstanding the Act of Toleration: And I submit it to your Lordships Consideration, whether, if it be a Duty to Communicate with the Church of England, it be not Schism to Separate from it. My Lords, I shall say no more to this Article, but submit it to your Lordships.

Dr. Henchman. MY Lords, We are now endeavouring to defend Doctor Sacheverell against the Charge contain'd in the Second Article of Impeachment, in the two first Clauses of which he is laid to suggest and maintain, That the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable: And to assert, That he is a False Brother with Relation to God, Religion and the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience. But it has not been said by any of the Learned Managers on this Head, that either of those two Branches of this Article are expressly delivered in any Part of the Sermon preached at St. Paul's; but what is no where affirm'd, is said to be suggested, and this Charge is maintained by Inferences only, because there is no plain positive Proposition that it can be supported by.

My Lords, It is humbly hop'd, That if an Inference may be allowed as Proof to accuse him, an open Declaration will be heard in his Defence: If what another Man makes him say be thought Ground enough for an Accusation, then certainly what he himself openly declares will be esteemed something more than a dry Caution, and have its due Weight with your Lordships in his Vindication. I would therefore beg Leave to read a Passage where he explains himself, and plainly declares what his Thoughts are concerning the Indulgence granted by Law: This Passage is in the twentieth Page, where speaking of some wholesome Severities used in former Reigns, he adds, I would not here be misunderstood, as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government has condescended to give them, which I am sure all those that wish well to our Church are very ready to grant to Consciences truly scrupulous; let 'em enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has prescribed.

My Lords, these Words are plain and express, and not capable of being misconstrued or misunderstood: Whether those Learned Gentlemen, who have applied some Parts of this Sermon to Purposes directly opposite to this plain Declaration, have misunderstood or misconstrued those Passages, must be submitted to your Lordships Judgment; but it seems hardly reconcileable, that the same Person in the same Discourse should declare, That all who wish well to the Church are ready to grant Indulgence to Consciences truly scrupulous; and at the same time maintain, That such Toleration is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; that he should desire it may be enjoy'd in its full Latitude, and yet assert that he is a False Brother that defends it.

My Lords, This seeming Difficulty will be easily reconciled, by considering who those Persons are who are designed to be eased by the Act of Exemption, and who the False Brethren are, described by Doctor Sacheverell in this Sermon.

That Act, in the Preamble, is said to be intended for the Ease of scrupulous Consciences; one Sett of the False Brethren, mention'd in the Sermon, are Men of no Conscience at all; whether Dissenters, or such as profess themselves with Zeal to be of the established Church, but yet break her Communion by not obeying her Precepts.

That Act was intended for such only, as qualify themselves according to the Directions laid down in that Act; the False Brethren which the Doctor every where speaks of are such, and such only, as neither qualify themselves according to that Act, nor think themselves subject to the Penalties of former Acts.

This Act was intended in favour of such as either subscribe the Articles of Religion, excepting only the thirty fourth, thirty fifth and thirty sixth, some Part of the twentieth, and that Part of the twenty seventh which relates to Infant-Baptism; or else for such as subscribe a Profession of their Christian Belief in these Words; I profess Faith in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ his Eternal Son the true true God, and in the Holy Spirit, one God blessed for evermore; and do acknowledge the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be given by Divine Inspiration. These are the Qualifications required of such as will intitle themselves to the Benefit of this Act.

On the other hand, the False Brethren described by Doctor Sacheverell, are Atheists, Deists, Tritheists, Socinians, Revilers of the Holy Scripture, and such like. Are not Men of these Opinions False Brethren, with Relation to God and Religion? Or shall such Men be suffered to cover themselves under the Protection of an Act of Parliament, designed only for the Ease of scrupulous Consciences. That there are Men among us of these Principles, will be but too visible, from a Passage or two, which I beg Leave to lay before your Lordships from Books lately publish'd.

The first which I shall mention, is intitled, A brief but clear Confutation of the Trinity: If the Title itself has not given too much Offence to your Lordships, I will proceed to look into the Book it self; and in the Ninth Page there is this Proposition laid down, The Divinity attributed to the Son and Holy Ghost is unscriptural and idolatrous; and in Page the Tenth he goes on in these Words, This one Fundamental False Principle, as well with Jews and Turks, as Heathens, has done more Mischief to Christianity than all other Errors besides. These are such bare-fac'd Blasphemies as must make every Man's Ears tingle that hears them; and the Respect which is due to your Lordships, and this Assembly, makes me forbear instancing any Thing more from this Author: But he does not stand alone; out of many more of the like Sort I shall mention but one only, and

This is a Book, intitled, The Rights of the Christian Church; and the Author, in p. 108, lays down this Doctrine.

Among Christians one no more than another can be reckoned a Priest. And a little after, The Clerk has as good a Title to the Priesthood as the Parson.

Thus, my Lords, these two Men strike off our whole Religion at once; the Fundamental Doctrine of our Faith is destroyed by the first of 'em; and the Ministers, who are to support and defend that Doctrine, are set aside by the other.

If these and such like Opinions have any where prevailed, is it not high time that some wholesome Severities were used to stop the growing Contagion? Or, if the Superior Pastors of the Church should thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathemas against the Authors and Abettors of such horrible Blasphemies, by what Construction can this be said to be done against Persons intitled to the Benefit of the Toleration?

But, my Lords, there is one Passage in this Sermon, which has been urg'd by the Learned Managers on this Head with more than ordinary Force, and as a direct Breach and Insult upon the Toleration; with your Lordships Patience, I shall endeavour to set that Passage in a true Light. It is in the Eighth Page: Should any one, out of Ignorance or Prejudice to the antient Rights and essential Constitution of the Catholick Church affirm, that the Divine Apostolick Institution of Episcopacy is a novel Doctrine, not sufficiently warranted by Scripture, and that it is indifferent, whether the Church be governed by Bishops or Presbyters; is not such an one an Apostate from his own Orders?

It was said, my Lords, that all those Dissenters who do not acknowledge the Divine Right of Episcopacy, and are therefore specially exempted by the Act of Indulgence from Subscribing some of the Articles of Religion, and who are immediately under the Protection of that Act, are yet, in the End of this Paragraph, charged with being False Brethren, where he prays, That God would deliver us from all such False Brethren.

But, my Lords, it is plain, that these Words are not meant, nor can be construed, generally of Dissenters, who deny the Divine Institution of Episcopacy; but are intended peculiarly of such Persons as have themselves been Episcopally ordain'd; the first of these cannot be said to be Apostates from that Doctrine which they never owned, nor Subscribed to; the latter, who could not be admitted to their Orders 'till they had subscrib'd the receiv'd Doctrine of our Church, are the only Persons who can be said to be Apostates from their own Orders, if they deny that Divine Institution, by which they themselves had been Ordain'd, and consequently, the only Persons that are intended in this Passage, and term'd False Brethren.

My Lords, I shall not presume to say, what the Duty of the Superior Pastors of the Church is, when our Religion and Discipline is invaded by Atheists and Schismatics, much less to determine what Sentences justly pass'd by them on Earth, may be ratify'd in Heaven. Thus much I hope I may say without Offence, That the Spiritual Power of Church-Pastors, is not derived from the Civil Magistrate, but from God; that one Branch of that Power is the censuring of notorious Offenders, and excluding them from the Communion of the Church; and that this has in all Ages, in Fact, and of Right too, been exercised by the Pastors of the Church, by Permission of the Civil Magistrate. The Reverend and Learned Bench of Bishops well know, That before the Civil Magistrate did embrace the Christian Religion, the Pastors of the Church did inflict Spiritual Censures on Offenders, for doing such Things as the Imperial Edicts did not only permit, but command; and this Power of inflicting Censures on Persons exempted from Punishment by the Laws of the Land, has been always challeng'd, and is now exercised by the Reformed Churches abroad; and by the Rubrick of our own Liturgy, open and notorious Evil Livers are to be repell'd from the Lord's Table, until they have openly declar'd their Repentance and Amendment.

We are told by the Learned Managers, That in case any Ecclesiastical Judge should inflict an illegal Censure of Excommunication, the Temporal Courts may, and would soon give Relief, by sending forth a Prohibition. But, your Lordships will consider, that there is a wide and manifest Difference betwixt an Excommunication founded upon a Prosecution in the Ecclesiastical Courts, and the pronouncing Censures purely Spiritual. The external coercive Jurisdiction of Ecclesiastical Courts being derived from the Laws of the Land, may, and is frequently by those Laws restrain'd; but such Restraint does not hinder the Pastors of the Church from exercising the Spiritual Power of the Keys, which they derive not from the Laws of the Land, but from the Institution of Christ; and therefore tho' it be provided in the Act of Exemption, that Persons taking the Oaths, and making the Declaration in that Act mention'd, shall not be prosecuted in any Ecclesiastical Court for not conforming to the Church of England, yet it is not by that Act express'd or intended that Non-conformity to the Established Church should no longer be looked upon as Schism; or that that Separatists may not, by the Pastors of the Church, be pronounced Schismatical. If Separatists from the Church of England were guilty of Schism before the Act of Exemption, they are as much guilty of it since; the Laws of the Land which require Conformity, being not by that Act repeal'd, tho' the Transgressors of those Laws are released from those Pains and Penalties to which they were before obnoxious: But were the Laws of the Land which require Conformity to the Church of England expressly or virtually repeal'd; yet whilst the Laws of God requiring Church-Unity, and forbidding Schism, are uncancell'd, and remain in their full Force, those who make causeless and unnecessary Divisions are still guilty of Schism, and may, by the Pastors of the Church be censur'd as such.

My Lords, I shall add but one Word in relation to Archbishop Grindal, not to disturb his Ashes, or blacken his Character, but to vindicate the Memory of that Glorious Queen, under whose Displeasure he died.

It was said, my Lords, that the true Ground of that Archbishop's Suspension, was partly because he would not give up his Manor of Lambeth to the Earl of Leicester; and partly because he had censur'd one Julio an Italian for an illegal Marriage. Had these been the known Reasons of his Suspension, he would have had just Cause to complain loudly of that Censure; but without entering into the Secret History of that Reign, I shall put the whole Matter upon that Archbishop's own Sentiments, both as to the Cause of his Suspension, and the Justice of it.

By the Account which is yet extant under his own Hand it appears, that there were in those Days Men of a Fanatical Spirit that call'd themselves Prophe-siers; that that Archbishop had been order'd by the Queen and Council to suppress such Exercises within his Province, as contrary to the Laws of the Land, and the Establish'd Discipline of the Church; but this Archbishop thought fit not only to delay, but absolutely to refuse to join in suppressing those Exercises; and for this Disobedience to the lawful Commands of his Sovereign he was suspended.

My Lords, His own Words which he uses upon this Occasion are very remarkable, when he applies to the Council to intercede with her Majesty to be restor'd to her gracious Favour, viz.

And whereas I have sustain'd the Restraint of my Liberty, and the Sequestration of my Jurisdiction, now by the Space of Six Months; I am so far from repining thereat, or thinking my self injuriously or hardly dealt withal therein at her Majesty's Hands, that I do thankfully embrace, and frankly, with all Humility, acknowledge her Princely and Gracious Care and Clemency towards me, who having Authority and Power to have used greater and sharper Severity against me, and for good Policy and Example thinking it so expedient, hath notwithstanding dealt so mercifully, mildly and gently with me.

My Lords, In this Letter that Archbishop frankly acknowledges that he had given Offence, and was, for good Policy and Example, justly punished by her Majesty; but had it been known that he was suspended for not tamely parting with the Revenues of his See, or for pronouncing a Sentence in a Court of Justice against an unlawful Marriage, there could have been no Reason for him to have acknowledged the Justice of his Suspension; neither could it be for good Policy and Example expedient, that he should be punished for not alienating the Revenues of his Church, or for not pronouncing Julio's Marriage with another Man's Wife lawful.

Mr. Dodd. We shall spend a little of your Lordships Time in reading to this Head; we shall only read the Toleration-Act, to shew the Exception in it; and offer the Archbishop's Letter to the Council; and the Queen's Letter to the Bishops. We have the Letters of Calvin and Beza; but I believe we shall not have occasion to read them, but only the other Three. The first is the Act of Toleration.

Clerk reads.] Anno Primo Gulielmi & Mariæ.

Then Mr. Rawlinson was Sworn.

Mr. Dodd. Pray give my Lords an Account, whether you examin’d that Paper; and where: and whether it be a True Copy.

Rawlinson. I examin’d it in the Cotton Library, and (Errors excepted) I believe it a True Copy.

Rawlinson. Yes, I do believe it.

‘ Clerk reads] ‘ A Letter from the Queen’s Majesty, sent to the Bishops through England, for the suppressing of the Exercise called Prophecying.

RIGHT Reverend Father in God, Cotton Library, Cleopatra, F. 2.
We greete you well. We hear fol 287, 288, 289.
to our great Griefe, that in sundry Parts of our Realme there are no small Numbers of Persons presuming to be Teachers, and Preachers of the Church, tho’ neither lawfull thereunto called, no yet for the same, which contrary to our Laws established for the publique Devine Service of Almighty God, and the Administration of his holie Sacrement within this Church of England, doe dailie devise, imagine, propound and put in execution sundrie new Rites and Forms in the Church, as well by their preaching, readings, and ministring the Sacraments, as well by procureing unlawful Assemblies of a great Number of our People out of either their ordinary Parishes, and from Place far distant; and that also of some of good-will, calling (though therein not well advised) to be Hearers of their Disputations, and new devised Opinions upon points of Devinities, farre and unmete of unlarge People; which manner of Invasions they in some places call Propheciings, and in some other places Exercises. By which manner of Assemblies great Numbers of our People, especially the vulgar sort, meete to be otherwise ouccupied with honest Labour for there Livinge, are brought to Idleness, and seduced, and in a manner schismatically divided amongst themselves into varietie of dangerous Opinions, not only in Towns and Parishes, but even in some Families; and manifestly thereby incorraged to the Violation of our Laws, and to the Breach of common Order, and finalie to the Offence of all our quiett Subjects that desire to serve God according to the uniforme Orders off established in the Church, wherof the Sequele cannot be but over-dangerous to be suffered. Wherefore, considering it should be the Duty of the Bishoppes, being the principal ordinary Officers in the Church of God, as you are one, to see this Dishonors against the Honor of God, and the Quietnes of the Church reformed: And that we see that by the Increase of these, through Sufferance, great danger may ensue even to the decay of the Cristianne Faith, whereof we are by God appointed the Defendor; besides the other Inconveniencies, to the disturbance of our peaceable Government. We therefore, according to Authoritie we have, do Charge and Command you, as the Bishopp of that Dyocesse, with all manner of Diligence, to take Order through your Diocesse, as well in Places exempt as otherwise; that no manner of Publique and Devine Service, nor other Form of th’ Administration of the Holy Sacraments, nor any other Rightes or Ceremonies be in any sort used in the Church, but directlie according to the Orders established by our Laws. Nether that any manner of Person be suffred within your Diocesse to preach, teach, read or ani exercise any Function in the Church, but such as shall be lawfully Approved and Licensed, as Persons able for their Knowledge, and conformable to the Ministrie in the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England. And where there shall not be sufficient able Persons for Learning in any Cures, to preach or instruct their Cures as were requiset, there shall you

‘ you lymitte the Curates to read the publique
 ‘ Homlines, according to the Injunctions heretofore
 ‘ by us given for like Causes: And furthermore ‘ considering, for the great Abuse that have byn in ‘ fundrie Places of our Realme, by reason of our ‘ forsaide Assemblies called Exercises, and for that the ‘ same are not, nor have not been Appointed nor ‘ Warranted by us or by our Laws, we Will and ‘ straightlie Charge you, that you do charge the ‘ same forthwith to cease, and not to be used: But ‘ if any shall attempt, or continew or renew the ‘ same, We will you not onlie to committe there-‘ unto Prison, as Maynteyners of Disorders, but al‘ so to advertise Us or our Counsaile of the Names
 ‘ and Qualities of them, and of their Mayntainers
 ‘ and Abbettors, that thereupon for better Example
 ‘ their Punishment may be more sharp for their Re‘ formation. And in these things we charge you to ‘ be so careful and villiant, as by your Negligence if ‘ we should hear of any Person attempting to fend ‘ in the Premisses without your Correccion or In‘ formation to us, we be not forced to make some ‘ Example or Reformation of you, according to ‘ your Deserts.

Given under our Signet, at our Mannor of Greenwich, the 7th of May, 1577.

Mr. Phipps. Your Lordships observe, this is a Letter from Queen Elizabeth to the Bishops, taking Notice of the Danger that might arise from the Prophesyings, and directs them to take care to suppress those unlawful Assemblies; and now we will read to your Lordships the Letter from the Archbishop to the Council, wherein he tells them, that he could not comply with Her Majesty's Command.

Clerk reads.]

To the Lords of the Privy-Council.

‘ RIGHT Honorable and my singuler good ‘ Lords; I cannot deny but that I have been ‘ commanded both by the Quenes Majestie her ‘ self, and also by divers of your Honorable Lord‘ ships in Her Name, to suppress all those Exercis‘ es within my Province, that are commonly called ‘ Prophecies; but I do protest before God, the Judge
 ‘ of all Hartes, that I did not of any Stubberness ‘ or Wilfulness refuse to Accomplish the same, but ‘ onely upon Conscience; for that I found such ‘ kind of Exercise set down in the Holie Scriptures, ‘ and the use of the same to have contynued in
 ‘ the Primitive Church, and was perswaded that ‘ (the Abuses being reformed which I always offer'd ‘ myself ready to Labour in) the said Exercise might ‘ yet serve to the great Profit of the Church, and ‘ feared that the utter suppressing of them would ‘ breed Offence, and therefore was a most humble ‘ Suter unto Her Majestie, that I might not be ‘ made the chiefe Instrument in suppressing the ‘ same: Yet not prejudicing or condemning any
 ‘ that in respect of Pollicie or otherwise should be ‘ of contrary Judgment, or being of Authority, ‘ should suppress them: For I know right well, that ‘ there be some things of that Nature, wherein di‘ verse Men may be of diverse Opinions, and abownd
 ‘ in their owne Sense, (being not repugnant to the ‘ Analogie of Faith) without any Prejudice to the
 ‘ their Salvation, or any Prejudice of ether to other.

 ‘ thought it not safe for me (being so perswaded

 ‘ greatest Griefe that ever I have had or have, is the ‘ Loss of Her Majesties Favour, and the susteyninge

EDM. CANTUAR.

Mr. Dodd. We hope these Two Letters have set that Matter in a true Light, that the Reason of the Archbishop's Disgrace was, for not complying with the Commands of the Queen. We will add no more upon this Article, but proceed to the Third.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The Dates of these Letters are Material; for your Lordships take notice, they were written in the Year 1577; and Her Majesty's Commands for suppressing the Prophecysings not being obeyed, the Puritans in few Years became so dangerous, that the Parliament was necessitated to make the Act of the 35th Year of Her Reign, (with those severe Penalties, which have been so much censured by one of the Learned Managers) to give a Check to them.

Mr. Dodd. MY Lords, The Third Article that the Doctor is charged with, is,
 That he does suggest and assert, That the Church of England is in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under Her Majesty's Administration; And that, in order to arraign and blacken the Vote or Resolution of both Houses of Parliament, approved by Her Majesty, be, in Opposition thereto, does suggest the Church to be in Danger. And, my Lords, this we take the Liberty totally to deny: the Doctor asserts no such Thing in his Sermon, nor hath it (as we apprehend) been proved upon him.

But true it is, that he asserts That when National Sins are ripened to Maturity, with other Immoralities

ties and Irreligious Practices therein mentioned, then such a People and Church are in very great Danger, as we apprehend, from the Sins and Vices of wicked Men. My Lords, This we conceive no ways to be opposite to the Votes of the Two Houses of Parliament, nor to Her Majesty's Declaration: We think we have followed the Act of Parliament of the 9th and 10th of King William, for suppressing Blasphemy and Prophaneness, and other Acts of Parliament, in asserting this Matter. It must be agreed, that the Church, as a Church Militant, is always in Danger, till it is a Church Triumphant: It is always taken Notice so to be; she has many Enemies; she ought to be always on her Guard and Watch, and all good People ought to pray for her Support. The Prayers directed by Her Majesty to be used, and that are used in all Churches, are, That no Sedition may disturb the State, nor Schism distract this Church; and that we all ought to lay it to Heart, how great Dangers we are in by our unhappy Divisions: These are the Prayers that are put up every Day in the Churches. Now to object from this, that we look on the Church to be in Danger under Her Majesty's Administration, is so directly contrary to what the Doctor has asserted in his Sermon, wherein he does, as a good and loyal Subject, pray, and pray heartily for the Best of Queens, that she may long live for the Comfort and Support of this Church and Nation; after this, one would think, when he has so positively laid it down in plain Words, there could be no Ground to quarrel with him on this Head. And as to that which was urged by one of the Gentlemen Managers for the House of Commons, observing that the Doctor's Expressions were taken out of the Lamentations, and that when the Lamentations were written, the King was a Prisoner, and the People in Captivity; and therefore the Doctor intended the Parallel to answer the present Times; surely no such Inference can be drawn from these Passages: I hope the People are in no Captivity whatsoever; nor is our Queen (blessed be God) a Prisoner. And if it was intended by the Gentleman Manager, (as I suppose it was) that the Doctor herein meant the Pretender; the Doctor utterly denies it, and has all along disclaimed his Right, and asserted Her Majesty's Right in very express Terms. But in this Place cited by the Doctor, is represented the Prophet's Lamentation for the Sins of the People, and the Judgments that had overtaken the Jews for their Sins and Rebellion. The like Prayers may be observed to have been made by King David, and yet the Church of the Jews was in the greatest Prosperity in his Time: However, there is scarce a Psalms but he laments the Sins of the People, for fear lest they should bring down Judgments on the Jewish Church and State. This is pathetically expressed almost throughout all the Psalms.

As to the Allegation, That the Members of both Houses were Conspiring the Ruin of the Church, he totally denies it; nor has the Doctor, in all his Sermon, mentioned the Votes of the Two Houses: Therefore for the Article to charge the Doctor with asserting, That the Members of both Houses, who pass'd the Vote relating to the Danger of the Church, were Conspiring her Ruin, when they Voted her out of Danger, is a mistaken Fact. That Vote was almost Four Years ago. There could be no Reason to think he reflected on that Vote; nor is there any Thing that can induce your Lordships (as we humbly apprehend) in the Doctor's Sermon, to believe such a Charge. The Passage in the Doctor's Sermon relates to the Wars in the late Times: And as in those Days there were many ill Men, and God permitted them to bring their ill Designs about; so it is plain, that there were many good Men innocent, as my Lord Clarendon expresses it, that had no such ill Designs. Now, when your Lordships and the Commons pass'd that Vote, no doubt it was a just Vote, and gave a great Satisfaction: But no body could expect that Passage to be turned on the Doctor, as a Reflection on your Lordships, the Commons, and Her Majesty, in relation to that Vote. But what he reflects upon is quite another Thing: He takes notice, that the Church is in Danger from evil Men, from evil Practices, and evil Books that are daily published. We hope your Lordships will not take it, that when we urge this, we intend to reflect either on the Pastors of the Church, or the Ministry of the Queen; for it would be hard, that they should be answerable for all those Pamphlets. But when such are published to poison the Notions of the People, and a Minister in the Pulpit takes Notice of them, to prevent the ill Consequences of them; whether this can have such a Construction as has been contended for, we may safely submit to your Lordships. The now asserting the Christian Faith to be in Danger by Vice and Irreligion, cannot be contrary to the Votes in the Articles alledged, nor affect him, who makes the Assertion, with any Crime, or (as we think) subject him to any Punishment.

My Lords, We shall be the shorter in opening this Article, because we fear we shall be very long in our Evidence upon this Head; we shall produce and give in Evidence several Books that daily come out, which contain the highest Blasphemy, Irreligion and Heresy that can be published. I will not take upon me to open them, they are so horrid, I leave the Passages to be read, that your Lordships may see what Grounds there are for a Preacher in the Pulpit to take Notice of these Matters. When the Church is run down, the Clergy vilify'd; when they tell us a grey Coat has as much Authority to administer the Sacrament as a black Coat; and that a Country-Man may make as good a Priest as the Parson of the Parish: These Things may excuse the Zeal of the Doctor in so warmly Reprehending them.

We shall read abundance of this sort of Learning, and we shall do it only to shew that there was Reason for the Doctor in the Pulpit to forewarn the People, to caution them that they may not have ill Impressions made upon them, by such wicked and scurrilous Writings. We shall humbly offer our Evidence to your Lordships, and then submit this Article.

Mr. Phipps. MY Lords, I am now to speak to the Third Article exhibited by the Commons of Great Britain against Doctor Sacheverell: And I humbly beg your Lordships Patience, while I take Notice of the several Branches of this Article, and shew your Lordships, that the Doctor is not guilty of any Offence therein charged.

As to such Part of this Article as charges the Doctor, That he doth falsely and seditiously suggest and assert, that the Church of England is in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under Her Majesty's Administration; and that to arraign and blacken the Vote and Resolution of both Houses of Parliament, approv'd by Her Majesty, he, in Opposition thereto, doth suggest the Church to be in Danger:

I beg Leave to take Notice, that the First Part of the Fourth Article explains this Branch of the Third Article, and shews what the Commons meant by the Church being in Danger under Her Majesty's Administration: For the First Part of the Fourth Article says, That the Doctor suggests, that her Majesty's Administration in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs tends to the Destruction of the Constitution. So that by charging that the Doctor asserts the Church is in Danger under Her Majesty's Administration, it must be intended that he asserts the Church to be in Danger by Reason of Her Majesty's Administration. And therefore if there be any Expression in the Doctor's Sermon which suggests the Church to be in Danger; yet if it be not also therein asserted that the Danger proceeds from Her Majesty's Administration, the Doctor cannot be an Offender within the Meaning and Intention of this Article: And the Doctor denies, that he hath asserted any thing in his Sermon, from whence any such Suggestion can be inferred.

To give your Lordships full Satisfaction in this Point, I shall first take Notice of the several Clauses in the Doctor's Sermon at St. Paul's, which have been cited to make good this Article.

The first Passage quoted for this Purpose, is in Page the 5th, where the Doctor thus expresseth himself: I shall take the Expression in its full Latitude, without confining it to the express Design of the Place, tho' it were very obvious to draw a Parallel here betwixt the sad Circumstances of the Church of Corinth formerly, and of the Church of England at present; wherein her Holy Communion has been rent and divided by factious and schismatical Impostors; her pure Doctrine has been corrupted and defiled; her Primitive Worship and Discipline prophaned and abused; her sacred Orders denied and vilified; her Priests and Professors (like St. Paul) calumniated, misrepresented and ridiculed; her Altars and Sacraments prostituted to Hypocrites, Deists, Socinians and Atheists; and this done, I wish I could not say, without Discouragement, I am sure with Impunity, not only by our professed Enemies; but, which is worse, by our pretended Friends and False Brethren.

This is the Passage which is chiefly insisted on to make good this Branch of the Article. My Lords, Is there not too much Truth in this Clause? Hath not the Communion of the Church been rent and divided by some Factious and Schismatical Teachers in Separate Congregations, who have no Orders at all; and by others who refuse to take the Oaths, and will not comply with the Act of Toleration; by Popish Priests, who have drawn away Persons from our Communion to their Church? Have not her Sacred Orders been denied and vilified by the Papists, who pretend Archbishop Parker was consecrated at the Nag's-Head? Are not her Altars and Sacraments prostituted to Atheists, Deists and Socinians, who communicate to qualify themselves for Offices and Places of Trust; and yet, Is there any thing in this Clause can support this Article? Are these Evils charged upon Her Majesty; or is it asserted, that these Mischiefs are owing to, or proceed from Her Majesty's Administration?

The next Paragraph cited to maintain this Article, is in the 14th Page, where the Doctor says, In short, as the English Government can never be secure on any other Principles, but strictly those of the Church of England; so I will be bold to say, where any Part of it is trusted in Persons of any other Notions, they must be false to themselves, if they are true to their Trusts; or if they are true to their Opinions and In- terest, must betray that Government they are Enemies to upon Principle. Indeed, we must do them that Justice, to confess, That since the Sectarists have found a way (which their Fore-fathers, God knows, as wicked as they were, would have abhorred) to swallow not only Oaths, but Sacraments, to qualify themselves to get into Places and Preferments; these sanctified Hypocrites can put on a shew of Loyalty, and seem tolerably easy in the Government, if they can ingross the Honours and Profits of it: But, let Her Majesty reach out Her little Finger to touch their Loins, and these Sworn Adversaries to Passive Obedience, and the Royal Family, shall fret themselves, and Curse their Queen and their God, and shall look upwards.

Here is not one Word of the Church being in Danger by Her Majesty's Administration: He only shews the Danger the English Government may be in by Occasional Conformists put into Offices and Places of Trust. For Occasional Conformists, who are Dissenters, Republicans, Atheists and Deists, that communicate only to qualify themselves for Places, if they are true to their Opinions, cannot be true to the Church of England in which they communicate, cannot be true to the Government by which they are entrusted in such Offices; for they will be always promoting their own Principles in Religion, and their own Forms of Government in the State.

Both Lords and Commons were of Opinion, it was not safe to trust Occasional Conformists with the Guardianship of our Church or Crown, when they agreed to the Bill for preventing Occasional Conformity, which Enacts, That if any Person, who had any Office Civil or Military, or any Command or Place of Trust under Her Majesty; or if any Person bearing any Office of Magistracy, or Place of Trust in Corporations, who by the Laws are obliged to receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the Rites and Usage of the Church of England, should after their Admission into their respective Offices, and during their Continuance in such Offices, resort unto any Conventicle, Assembly or Meeting, under Colour or Pretence of any Exercise of Religion, in any other Manner than according to the Liturgy and Practice of the Church of England, they should, being convicted thereof, be disabled from henceforth to hold such Office or Offices. Though this was never Enacted into a Law, yet as it was the Opinion of both Houses of Parliament, I beg Leave to offer it as a Reason, to confirm what the Doctor hath asserted.

My Lords, I shall trouble your Lordships only with one Passage more, which was urged to prove this Article, which is in Page the 15th, where the Doctor hath these Words; To lay before you the great Peril and Mischiefs of these False Brethren in Church and State; which I shall endeavour to do, by proving that they weaken, undermine, and betray in themselves, and encourage, and put it into the Power of our professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment of both. These False Brethren are the Occasional Conformists mentioned in the Page preceding.

I heartily wish, that all who communicate in the Church, were true Sons of the Church; but if, as the Doctor suggests, there are any that communicate at her Altars, who disown her Mission, who refuse to comply with her Liturgy, and are Enemies to her Constitution; if Arians, Socinians, Deists, and almost all Dissenters, and other Enemies to the Church, communicate with her to get Places and Preferments in Church and State, what Prejudice the Church may receive from such False Brethren, I submit to your Lordships Judgment; begging Leave only to offer to your Lordships, what was said by the Commons at a Conference with your Lordships, upon the Bill for preventing Occasional Conformity; and which, I hope, in an Impeachment by the Commons, will have some Weight with your Lordships.

The Commons upon that Conference were pleased to take Notice, "That when the Corporation-Act was made, the Parliament had fresh in their Minds the Confusions and Calamities that had been brought upon the Nation, by such as pretended to be at the same time in the true Interest of Religion and their Country. That the Parliament by that Act, and afterwards by the Test-Act, thought they had secured our Establishment both in Church and State; and that they had provided a sufficient Barrier to defeat and disappoint any Attempts upon them, by Enacting, That all in Office should receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the Rites and Usages of the Church of England; and never imagined a Set of Men would rise up, whose Consciences were too tender to obey the Laws, but harden'd enough to break through any."

Thus, my Lords, having shewn that the Passages cited by the Managers do not maintain this Article, and that the Doctor hath not asserted the Church to be in Danger by Her Majesty's Administration; I will next shew, from what Causes the Doctor doth suggest the Danger of the Church to arise: And of these, Schism is one.

That Schism may distract the Church, a Prayer lately added to our Liturgy tells us. That Separation from the Establish'd Church, which imposeth no Sinful Terms of Communion, is Schism, all the Learned Men of our Church agree; and that there are many People in this Nation that are guilty of Schism, I think no body will deny. And altho' it cannot be imagined, nor is it asserted by the Doctor, that such Schism should grow to such a Head as to endanger the Church, during Her Majesty's happy Administration; yet, what ill Consequence it may be to the Church in another Age, no body can pretend to know, tho' every body may have too much Reason to fear.

So, my Lords, when Men attack the Articles of our Religion and our Homilies, and represent them as Spurious; when they call the Doctrine of Non-Resistance and Passive-Obedience a Blasphemous Doctrine, what Influence that may have hereafter upon our Government both in Church and State, your Lordships are the best Judges.

I submit to your Lordships, if the Queen can be safe, when it shall be averr'd in Print, that there is one on the other Side of the Water that is a Jure Divino King, and hath an Hereditary Right. Can the Queen or Church be safe, when all the whole Administration is vilify'd and abus'd as it is in the Observer, in this Manner? Countryman asks the Question, Have you any more Knaves to talk of? Obs. Honest Countryman, What would you have me to do? If I must run through all the Lists of Knaves, I must bring in all the Courts, all the Employments, all the Classes of Publick Affairs in the Nation.

Can the Queen be safe, when the Murder of King Charles the First is justify'd in Print, by the Review and Observer? When the Wet Martyrdom of King Charles the First, and Dry Martyrdom of King James the Second are said to be all one, and no Difference between them? I say, How can Her Majesty be safe, when such Rebellious Principles are so publickly avowed? And if Her Majesty be in Danger, can the Church be safe?

All Learned Men that understand our Constitution, have always agreed, that there is such a near Relation between the Church and Monarchy, such a Dependence of one upon the other, that where one falls, the other cannot stand.

Can either Church or Queen be safe, when so great and necessary a Part of our Constitution, our Parliament, is struck at? When it shall be said that the Members sit in the House to do nothing, making long Speeches without Meaning, and Voting Bills without Design to have them pass? And when such Rebellious Principles are broached, as I mentioned to your Lordships upon Friday last out of the Review, to shew the Necessity of Preaching the Doctrine of Passive Obedience, viz. If the next Parliament should prove like this, the Nation will be so much the nearer that Crisis of Time, when English Liberty being brought to the last Extremity, must open the Magazine of Original Power? These are some of the Things alleged by the Doctor to be dangerous to the Church and State.

But the chief Causes from whence the Doctor suggests the Danger of our Church and State to proceed, are Atheism, Prophaneness, and Immorality; for he thus expresseth himself, Pag. 20. What Reason have we to think but that the National Sins are ripen'd up to a full Maturity to call down Vengeance from Providence on a Church and Kingdom thus debauch'd in its Principles, and corrupted in its Manners; and instead of the True Faith, Discipline and Worship, given over to all Licentiousness both in Opinion and Practice; to all Sensuality, Hypocrisy, Lewdness and Atheism?

From these Sins it is he apprehends the Church and Nation to be in Danger; and what Judgments have been brought down upon Kingdoms and Nations for these Sins, we have Multitudes of Instances, both in Sacred and other Histories; sometimes they have been deprived of the true Worship of God, and overwhelmed with Idolatry and Mahometanism. Is not the Name of God forgot in the Place of his miraculous Birth? And is not the Light of the Gospel totally extinguished where it at first so gloriously shined? And by what Means? By Infidelity, Prophaneness and Immorality. And may not the same Causes produce the same Effects?

Can England be always secure from such Judgments, when some amongst us scarce own the first Person of the Trinity, by whom they were created? But many have the Boldness to deny the Divinity of the second Person, by whom they were redeemed, and many other such Blasphemies and Atheistical Notions are daily propagated and spread abroad among us; of which I shall beg your Lordships Permission to cite some few Instances, of those many we shall offer to your Consideration in the Course of our Evidence; and they are such as I hardly dare name, and as your Lordships will scarce bear to hear.

There is a Treatise call'd, A brief but clear Confutation of the Doctrine of the Trinity, Page the 9th, he says, The Divinity attributed to the Son and Holy Ghost is unscriptural and idolatrous. Page the 14th, To be short, Trinitarianism is Polytheism and Idolatry, if there be any such Thing in Nature.

And a Book called Brief Notes on the Creed of Athanasius, speaking of the Trinity and Incarnation, says, A Belief in these Points is in no Degree necessary, much less necessary before all Things.

The Account of the Growth of Deism, Page 17. says, Many Doctrines are made necessary to Salvation, which it is impossible to believe, because they are in their Nature Absurdities. Idem, p. 22. One of my Old Acquaintance always thought the moral Part of the Bible very good; but he also thought that by the Strength of his own Reason, he could have writ as good a Moral himself.

These are Sins of a very deep Dye, and may justly draw down very heavy Judgments; and altho' we are very well assured, that the Piety of her Majesty alone is sufficient to avert those Judgments that are due to such Crimes during her own Life; and altho' we are sure, that, by her Majesty's Care, and the Vigilance of Her Ministers, those Sins will not grow to such a Head during her Majesty's Life, as to endanger the Church and State; yet (if not prevented) they may take such Root now, as may hereafter endanger the State, the Church, and even Christianity it self: For as among Men, Nemo repente fuit turpissimus, so Heresies and Schisms in the Church, Factious and Seditious Principles in the State, are not invented and arrive to the Height at once, but steal by degrees into the Church and State: And therefore, as in the Body Natural, so in the Body Politick, we must meet the Disease, and prevent the spreading of its Contagion: And one of the best Methods to do it, is by our Ministers shewing the Heinousness of these Crimes, and the dangerous Consequences that attend them. And we submit it to your Lordships, whether the Doctor hath any otherwise asserted the Church to be in Danger, than what may happen to her as the Consequences of such Sins; and whether he any where avers the Church to be in Danger by or under her Majesty's Administration.

As to the Votes of both Houses, we dare not presume to say how far they were design'd to extend: But I humbly submit to your Lordships Consideration, whether the Vote of both Houses in 1705, did relate only to such Suggestions and Insinuations of the Church's Danger, as should be made about that Time, or some short time after; or whether it was intended to have a Prospect, and relate to what should be suggested four Years after; whereas it was impossible for the Wit of Man to foresee what should happen in so long a Time.

We were then, as we are now, engaged in a War with a powerful Enemy; a Pretender, supported by that Enemy, and who, since that Vote, attempted to invade these Kingdoms, if that Army of the French had been successful in Flanders, and the Advantage of the War had turn'd on their Side; and if the Pretender had landed with such a successful and powerful Army of French Papists in Great Britain, I believe it would have been impossible to have made the Generality of the People avoid thinking both Church and State too in Danger under those Circumstances.

To conclude this Branch, If there be any Thing in his Sermon, from whence it can be infer'd that he suggests the Church to be in Danger, yet if it be not suggested to be by Reason of her Majesty's Administration; and if it was not done with a wicked, malicious, and seditious Intent to defame Her Majesty's Administration, and to contradict and arraign the Resolutions of both Houses of Parliament; and unless such Intention plainly appears, without Innuendo's, he cannot be guilty within the Intent of this Article.

And as to so much of the third Article, which chargeth that the Doctor, as a Parallel, mentions a Vote that the Person of King Charles the First was voted to be out of Danger, at the same time that his Murderers were conspiring his Death, thereby wickedly and maliciously insinuating, that the Members of both Houses who pass'd the said Vote were then conspiring the Ruin of the Church; I cannot give a better Answer than the Doctor himself hath given to it, viz.

1. That he doth not draw any Parallel between the Vote concerning the King's Person, and the Vote of the Two Houses.

2. That he does not in his Sermon mention the Vote of the Two Houses.

3. That if he had mentioned it, he would not thereby wickedly and maliciously have insinuated that the Members of both Houses, who pass'd that Vote, were then conspiring the Ruin of the Church; but would have insinuated, that as some Persons were conspiring the Murder of the King, whilst others, no way privy to their wicked Intentions, voted his Person to be out of Danger; so when the Two Houses voted the Church to be in no Danger under her Majesty's Administration, there might be some others who were conspiring the Ruin of the Church, and many others, who by their Vice and Infidelity were drawing down God's Vengeance both on Church and State.

Mr. Dee. MA Y it please your Lordships to indulge me a little upon his Article, and I beg leave to make a Distinction, as on the last Article, that is, that these Words, Danger of the Church, seem in the Articles to bear one Sense, and in the Doctor's Sermon another. The Danger suggested in the Article, is a Danger under Her Majesty's Administration. I must beg leave to say, these Words were put in, to insinuate, that the Doctor does in his Sermon urge the Danger of the Church to arise from her Majesty's Administration; which, I think, is not to be found there; and if they were omitted, then it will stand only thus, That the Doctor doth affirm that the Church of England is under great Peril and Adversity; and if so, I hope, the Assertion is not Criminal. I can't, by all the Observation I have made on the Doctor's Sermon, find that the Doctor suggests that there is any form'd Body of Men conspiring to overthrow the Church; but the Doctor says, that there are such Men that are false Brethren that endanger the Doctrines and Discipline of the Church. That there is some sort of Danger, appears by the Form of Prayer that is daily offered up for her Safety, and therefore a general Suggestion of Danger would not have answered the End of the Commons to make the Doctor Criminal, without adding the Words under Her Majesty's Administration; and if they can shew that the Doctor in any Part of his Sermon has charg'd the Queen with such Administration as endangers the Church, I am sure I should be very much to blame to appear for him at this Bar: but the contrary, I think, appears, when he prays for her Life, with these Words added, for the Comfort and Support of this Church and Nation.

My Lords, I shall say no more to that Part of the Article, it having been fully spoken to already, but beg leave to take Notice, that the Managers for the House of Commons have been pleased to say, That the Doctor has reflected upon the Resolutions of both Houses of Parliament, by drawing a Parallel between the Vote relating to the Murder of King Charles, and the Vote of the Two Houses that that the Church was not in Danger. My Lords, To make a Parallel there must be Two Lines, a Line first given to draw the Parallel Line to; and I beg leave to say, that in the Doctor's Sermon there is no such first Line given; for he has not in all his Sermon taken Notice of any Vote of both Houses. If he has not taken Notice of this Resolution of both Houses in his Sermon, the Law will not imply that he had any Notice of it. For Votes are private Resolutions of the Houses, and always were so till of late they have been published in Print, and the Printing of them will not infer that he had Notice of them. The Doctor's Distinction in his Answer is very true and plain, that he doth not charge the Persons concerned in passing that Vote with being concerned in that odious and execrable Design of carrying on the Murder of that Royal Prince; (and I hope Charity will carry us so far as to think that very many Persons that join'd in that Vote were not concerned in it) but that yet at the same Time they passed that Vote, that bloody Design was carry'd on by a private Junctio of Blood-thirsty Men.

My Lords, I do not admit, but supposing I should admit the Doctor hath contradicted the Resolutions of both Houses, I submit it to your Lordships what Crime the contradicting a Vote of the House of Commons, or the Resolution of both Houses, is. The contradicting a known establish'd Law may be Seditious; but I submit it whether a Vote is so publick an Act, that contradicting it, at least without taking Notice of it, be any Crime, or at least be so high a Crime as to deserve a Censure. It is very certain he may be thought Saucy and Unmannerly to do it, or it may be a Breach of Privilege; but whether your Lordships will interpret it to be a Crime, and such a Crime as will bear an Impeachment for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, I submit to your Lordships.

My Lords, We humbly hope, that notwithstanding any thing yet offered against the Doctor, that your Lordships will be of Opinion, that the acquitting the Doctor of this Impeachment will be a noble and convincing Proof of the undoubted Truth of that Vote, That the Church of England, (of which the Doctor is a true, though an unfortunate Son, whilst under a Charge by the Commons of Great Britain for High Crimes) under Her Majesty's Administration, is in a safe and flourishing Condition.

Dr. Henckman. MY Lords, We are now upon the Third Article of Impeachment, in which Doctor Sacheverell is charged with [falsely and seditiously suggesting and asserting, That the Church of England is in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under Her Majesty's Administration.] If by these Words, under Her Majesty's Administration, your Lordships are to understand By the Course and Tendency of Her Majesty's Administration, that Charge we positively deny, and humbly assure ourselves that the Learned Managers have not been able to maintain it, either from the general Scope and Design of the whole Sermon, or from any Passages contained in it.

If by those Words, under her Majesty's Administration, is to be understood only during the Time of her Majesty's Administration, then we apprehend that there may be Perils under her Majesty's Administration, which do no ways proceed from such her Administration, and which may be mentioned without any seditious Thought or Intention of Reflecting upon her Majesty's happy Administration.

If your Lordships look thro' the whole Sermon, it will appear, that he who now stands accused for casting this foul Asperision upon her Majesty, never once mentions her throughout this whole Discourse, but in Terms full of the profoundest Respect and Reverence: In the very beginning of this Sermon, in the second Page, this is reckoned as one chief Part of that Day's Deliverance, which he was then solemnizing, That this good and pious Relict of the Royal Family sits now happily upon the Throne of her great Ancestors. In the 19th Page we find him with an honest and hearty Zeal asserting Her Majesty's Right to the Throne, and praying God to bless her in it; and within a few Lines he again repeats that Prayer, That God would long preserve her on that Throne, for this very remarkable Reason, because She is the Comfort and Support of the Established Church.

Is this, my Lords, the Language of one that would suggest and assert, that very Church to be in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity from her Majesty's Administration? Or can your Lordships presume, that any one can so far prevaricate with God and Man, as openly to thank God for the peculiar Happiness that we now enjoy by her Majesty's sitting on the Throne of her Ancestors, and to beseech him long to preserve her there for the Support and Comfort of the Established Church, and yet assert that that Church is in great Adversity under, that is from her Majesty's Administration?

In this Case your Lordships will suffer me to shew what those Perils are which the Church is said to be in, in this Discourse, and how they do not proceed from her Majesty's Administration.

The Dangers spoken of in this Sermon are either such as arise from the Infidelity and Prophaneness, the Vice and Immorality of the Age, or else such as always have attended the Christian Church from her first Foundation, and always will attend her whilst she continues Militant upon Earth.

That there are Dangers arising to the Church from Infidelity and Prophaneness, is already, I doubt, too evident from those Authors I mentioned under the second Article, and from what the Gentlemen who have spoke before me, have observ'd upon this: If it yet wants a Confirmation, we shall beg leave to lay before your Lordships a black Catalogue of Prophaneness and Blasphemy, not fit to be heard more than once.

As to the Dangers proceeding from Vice and Immorality, the Laws of the Land, and the many Proclamations issued out by Royal Authority upon that Occasion, are an undeniable Evidence of the growing Danger to the Church on that Head, and of her Majesty's special Care to suppress and prevent that Danger. In the Close of those Proclamations Her Majesty declares Her Royal Resolution to punish all manner of Vice, Immorality and Prophaneness in Persons of all Degrees whatsoever, and particularly in such as are near her Royal Person; and these Proclamations are ordered to be read by all Ministers in their respective Congregations at least Four Times in every Year; and they are directed to incite and stir up their Congregations to the Practice of Piety and Virtue, and the avoiding all Immorality and Prophaneness. My Lords, hard is the Fate of Ministers, if they must reprove Prophaneness in Men of all Degrees under Her Majesty's Displeasure; and yet if they once happen to mention Men of Characters and Stations in their publick Discourses, courses, that too must be made one Part of the Impeachment against him.

My Lords, It was said indeed by a Learned Manager, that the Pulpit was not a proper Place for Complaints of this Nature; that these things ought not to be spoken of in Publick, unless they could be proved; and if they could be proved, those that are known to be guilty should be prosecuted in a due Course of Law. But, my Lords, I humbly apprehend it to be the Duty of a Minister of the Gospel to be instant in season, and out of season; to exhort and rebuke with all Authority, and without Distinction. This their Holy Function obliges them to do, and the Dignity of that Function does and ought to protect them in the Performance of that Duty; but that Ministers should be obliged to prosecute every Offender in a Court of Justice, is not yet known to be any Part of their Office; and he that at any time should take that Part upon him, would hardly avoid that Imputation which many People are ready to lay upon the whole Profession.

In the next Place, your Lordships will consider whether the Dangers mentioned in this Sermon are not such as have in all Ages, and under the best Princes, infested the Church.

I appeal to the Reverend Bench of Bishops, whether even in the Apostles Time there were not Men of unstable Minds crept in among them; some carried about with every wind of Doctrine, deceiving, and being deceived; others teaching for Doctrines the Traditions of Men; and whether in the immediate succeeding Ages the Church was not miserably rent and divided by factious and schismatical Impostors. Their Lordships well know that the pious Care of Christian Emperors was not able to prevent the spreading of old Errors, and the continual springing up of new ones; neither has Her Majesty's peculiar Piety and Zeal prevented many Instances of Prophaneness and Irreligion under Her happy Administration; but certainly no Inference ought to be made from an Historical Account, or bare Mention of such like Perils of the Church, as if that was intended to arraign the Administration of those Princes in whose Times they happen'd.

My Lords, That there are such Dangers attending the Church, even under her Majesty's happy Administration, needs no other Evidence than that Form of Prayer which is by Her Majesty's Authority directed to be used in all Churches; in which we beseech God, That no Sedition may disturb this State, nor Schism distract this Church; and that he would give as all Grace seriously to lay to Heart the great Danger we are in by our unhappy Divisions. My Lords, this Prayer is enjoined to be used by publick Authority; and particularly mentions the great Danger of the Church, in being at this Time distracted with Schism; and I must submit it to your Lordships Consideration, how hard it is that a Minister may not from his Pulpit mention those Dangers without Offence, which he is specially commanded to pray against in his Desk.

Mr. Dodd. We shall beg leave to produce several Books, wherein there are the strongest Opinions that perhaps your Lordships ever heard of: And we shall first confine ourselves unto them which relate to Blasphemy, Irreligion and Herefy, which we confess are not pleasant to be heard, or fit to be published, if it were not absolutely necessary for the Doctor's Defence.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, We begin with some Miscellaneous Tracts, published by Mr. Edward Hickeringill. And we offer them first to your Lordships Consideration, because he was a false Brother; and we think his Tracts will justify the Doctor in what he hath said in relation to the Church being in Danger, from the Blasphemy and other enormous Crimes mentioned in his Sermon.

Mr. Dee. It's in Page 12.

' St. Paul, that I have the Spirit of God.

Mr. Thompson. My Lords, upon what is offered to be given in Evidence, the Managers apprehend there is something that will require their Consideration.

Accordingly the Managers withdrew, and then the Lords adjourned to their House above; and in a short time their Lordships being returned, and seated as before, and the Managers being returned to the Place appointed for them at their Lordships Bar, Proclamation for Silence was made by the Serjeant at Arms.

Mr. Thompson. My Lords, The Managers have consider'd the Nature of the Evidence open'd by the Council; and without troubling your Lordships to observe how material it is for the Prisoner's Defence, submit it to your Lordships, whether such impious and blasphemous Passages as the Council were ashamed to repeat, shall be republish'd in so solemn a Manner, by reading them in Evidence before your Lordships.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, You that are of Council for the Doctor may proceed in your Evidence as you shall think proper.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, We must own there are a Multitude of Sentences never to be repeated, if it were not necessary for our Defence; but we think it so material for the Doctor's Defence, that we dare not depart from it without your Lordships Order.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The Reason that Learned Gentleman gave against reading them, is the very Reason we offer for reading them; for the Doctor ascribes the Danger of the Church to those Blasphemies and impious Doctrines and Tenets, that are so frequently published, and which call for God's Judgments on the Nation.

Mr. Dee. My Lords, we desire he may read in the same Book he was reading before.

‘ That this Sacrament cannot be rightly celebrated ‘ without the Assistance of a Priest, who must con‘ secrate the Elements to the Use for which they are ‘ design’d; whereby the Priest is made absolutely ‘ necessary to the very Being of the Sacrament.
‘ The Priest also making himself Judge of every ‘ one’s Preparation for this Sacrament, has it in his ‘ power to admit to a Participation whom he thinks ‘ fit; as likewise to exclude whom he pleases from ‘ this necessary Means of Salvation: And hereby ‘ he is enabled to make his Terms with his People,
‘ who must be contented to save their Souls upon ‘ what Conditions he will admit. No wonder,
‘ then, that so great a Noise has been made con‘ cerning this Sacred Commemorative Repast.
‘ That Christian Communion which you read of as ‘ practised in the Apostles Days, was nothing else
‘ but a Religious Conversation with Christians one ‘ amongst another. ’Twas for Society-sake that

‘ that this sort of Religious Conversation may be ‘ kept up among Christians without either Priest

‘ It was long after the Apostles were dead and ‘ buried, before the Temples were built, or Altars ‘ erected, or set Orations were made to the People
‘ in Churches. And what if you should further

‘ Church-Communion that might not have been

' that these things were Mysteries, and so above
' our Understanding. But he asked me, To what
' End could an unintelligible Doctrine be revealed?
' Not to instruct, but to puzzle and amuse.

' One of my old Acquaintance al-
' Bible very good; but then he also ' thought that by the Strength of his own Reason
' he could have written as good a Moral himself.

' If you look over the State of Re' ligious, as it standeth in Christendom, Ibid. p. 24.
' there is no Church whatsoever which ' will accept you as a Member of its Communion,

' but upon some particular Terms of Belief, or ' Practice, which Christ never appointed, and it ' may be such as an honest and wise Christian can' not consent to.—It looks like a Trick in all ' Churches to take away the Use of Men's Rea' son, that they may render us Vassals and Slaves
' to all their Dictates and Commands. But what ' greater Slavery than to force on Men a Belief of ' such Things as necessary to Salvation, of which
' it's not possible to form an Idea? Though I am sa' tisfied there is no such Thing as a Change of ' Bread into the Flesh of Christ, yet I can form an ' Idea that such a Thing may be, that the same
' Power that changed Earth into a Man, may change
' Bread into Flesh; but I can frame to my self no
' Idea of what your Church teacheth in the Sacra' ment, That the Body and Blood of Christ are verily
' and indeed taken and received of the Faithful:
' And when I ask, how can this be understood by
' a Protestant who believeth that there is no other ' Body but that of Bread? I am told that the ' Church means it in a Spiritual Sense. Now I have ' try'd, and find it impossible for me to form to my ' self an Idea of a Body verily and indeed in a ' Spiritual Sense.

' Your Church will require me to ' believe other Absurdities as bad Ibid. p. 25.
' as these; as that Kings and Bi' shops have Divine Right to that Power which ' they exercise over us; whereas with my own Eyes,
' I saw our great and gracious King accept the ' Crown of England as the Gift of the People. And ' I see as plainly that Bishops are an Order of ' Men of their own (not of Christ's) making.
' I can find no Footsteps of any
' Jurisdiction given to the Twelve Ibid. p. 26.
' over the Seventy, or indeed over ' any body else.

' rious Rites of sacrificing, good for nothing but

' Parties upon one another.

Mr. Dodd. The next is Asgyl's Argument.

Pag. 36. 'Clerk reads.] God told Adam,
' that if he did eat he should die;
' the Devil told Eve, that they might ' eat and not die; and these were the first Words
' spoken to Man by God, or the Devil; upon the ' Truth or Falshood whereof, the very Beings of ' them both were to depend for ever: For which ' ever of them could maintain the Truth of his ' Word against the other, he must have been God,
' and the other the Devil. And therefore God,
' having turn'd the Lye upon the Devil, he is from ' thence call'd a Lyar from the Beginning, and the ' Father of it, and will never be believed again for ' ever. God could not have dispensed with his ' Word, without complimenting the Devil, with his ' Godhead.

Ibid. p. 82. 'What is it that you do, or would ' believe of Christ, or in Christ?
Ans. Why, we believe him for ' our Saviour. Save you! from what? Why, from ' our Sins. Why, what hurt will Sin do you?
' Why, it will kill us. How do you know? Why,
' the Law of God saith so: In the Day thou eatest
' thereof, thou shalt die. Why, but then will not
' this Saviour save you from this Law, and from
' this Death? No, he'll save us from Sin. Why,
' then it seems you have got a Pardon for Horfe-
' Stealing, with a Non-Obstante to be hanged. Do
' but see now what a Jest you have made of your ' Faith. And yet I defy the Order of Priesthood to ' form a better Creed than this, without admitting ' the Truth of my Argument, or to make Sense of ' their own Faith without adding mine to it. It's ' much easier to make a Creed, than to believe it af' ter it's made: Nor can any Man really believe any ' Part of the Gospel that doth not believe it at all.
' For it is a Doctrine so dependant upon it self,
' that unless we know the whole of it from the Be' ginning to the End, we can't know the Use and ' Reason of any Part of it. Wherefore (notwith' standing this Inundation of Death in the World,
' and the Infection of Fear contracted upon Man
' from hence) I am not affrighted from re-assuming
' my Assertion at the beginning, That this long ' Possession of Death over Man, is a Possession
' against Right.

Ibid. p. 97. 'Behold, ye Despisers, and won' der! Wonder at what? Wonder to ' see Paradise Lost, with the Tree ' of Life in the midst of it! Wonder and curse at ' Adam for an Original Fact, who in the Length ' of one Day, never so much as thought to put ' forth his Hand for him, and us, and pull, and ' eat, and live for ever. Wonder at, and damn your ' selves for Fools of the last Impression, that in the ' Space of 1700 Years, never so much as thought ' to put forth our Hands every one for himself, and
' seal and execute the Covenant of Eternal Life,
' and live for ever.

Ibid. p. 98. 'To be even with the World at ' once, he that wonders at my Faith,
' I wonder at his Unbelief. And ' stare at me as long as you will, I am sure that ' neither my Physiognomy, Sins, nor Misfortunes,
' can make me look so unlikely to be translated, as
' my Redeemer was to be hanged.

Mr. Dee. The next is a Book call'd, Christianity

Mr. Phipps. We shall next shew some Papers that reflect on the Church and Clergy; and shall first offer to your Lordships Consideration the Rights of the Christian Church.

Ibid. pag. 240. Ibid. pag. 137. It's absurd to imagine every Christian is not capable of such Circumstances, as praying aloud, distributing the Bread and Wine, or (according to the present Mode) of sprinkling an Infant, and repeating a set Form of Words.

Ibid. pag. 402. Have they not inserted this Power of theirs in an Article of the Creed, commonly called the Apostles, viz. I believe the Catholick Church?

Mr. Dee. We shall next offer the Review:

Vol. 2. N. 112. Clerk reads.] Whether our Fathers had a Necessity to make those exclusive Laws, and impose as necessary their indifferent Things, acknowledged to be so, as Terms of Communion: Nor is this all, but supposing they had; which nevertheless I do not grant; then this Address is further press'd to your Lordships, to examine whether that Necessity does yet continue, or no? Either of which will be the same Thing. For if there either was not a Necessity at the Time of their Enacting, or that Necessity does not yet remain, let which will happen to fall out, the Act of Uniformity, imposing such and such indifferent Things, as Terms of Communion, will appear scandalous to the Church, Injurious to the publick Peace, and a Grievance to the whole Nation.

Ibid. Vol. 3. Numb. 27. Left it become a new, proverbial Jest, To be as wicked as an English Priest. p. 106.

Ibid. Numb. 27. p. 107. I cannot but tell him, should I publish the Matters of Fact which I am Master of, with respect to the High-flying Gentlemen of the Clergy; should I give a faithful Account of the most infamous and scandalous Behaviour, the Notorious Lives, the Beastly Excesses, and the furious Treatment of their Brethren the Dissenters, which on a small Search I have been acquainted with; the Inferior Clergy of his Party would appear the most wretched, provoking, abominable Crew, that ever God suffered to live unpunish'd, since he destroyed Sodom and Gomorrab by Fire from Heaven.

If Words could be made Treason, one third at least of the Inferior Clergy in England would be hang'd. Ibid. Vol. 2. Numb. 105. p. 418.

I again appeal to you, Gentlemen, Whether, generally speaking, all over this unhappy Nation, the Clergy are not Three Parts in Five, in a close Conjunction with the Enemies of the Church's Peace, and the profess'd Enemies of the Government?

Others, not so directly, but altogether as fatally, and tending to the same End, with subtle Designs to divide and amuse the People, by Preaching, Writing, and Printing, endeavour to revive the said exploded Doctrines of Non-Resistance, and absolute uncondition'd Obedience, as things the People of England ought to think themselves oblig'd by; which tho' in themselves of no force, yet manifestly tend to unravel the Constitution, to invalidate the Queen's Title to the Crown, and destroy the legal Authority of Parliaments in the Nation. An eminent Proof of which is now depending before the House.

Drunkennes, Oaths, and abominable Lewdness; Ignorance, Negligence, and scandalous Insufficiency; abhor'd Error, Deism and Socinianism, have over-run the Clergy.

You know the Church he means is High-Church, which is a Fiction, a Church of the Brain, supported by a little, insignificant, trifling Number of Brainless People; and the People of England are no more concern'd about that Church, than about the Institutions of Government laid down in Moor's Utopia, Harrington's Oceana, or Bacon's New Atlantis; and all the Canons, Rites, and Ceremonies of that Church are no more to be consider'd by you, or me, than so many Ballads, or Duck-Lane Penny Histories.

The Universities have large Endowments, which I fancy may be better employ'd for the publick Good than at present. Let you and I Vote them useless.

Country-M. With all my heart, Master.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, The next Thing we should go upon, is to shew several Passages which reflect upon the Queen, the State, and Ministry; there are Five or Six Instances which we shall read, and then we shall have done.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, we shall offer but one Passage more, and that is out of The Divine Rights of the British Nation vindicated.

Clerk reads.] 'And if he will but stay till the end of this present Session of Parliament, he'll find several new Powers annex'd to the Regal Office, and perhaps some made void and repealed for the Publick Good.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, we have now done with our Proofs; we have gone over the Heads of Blasphemy, Irreligion and Heresy; the Church reflected on; the Queen, Ministry, and all Orders of Men reflected upon and abused. We have cited these Books and Passages, not to reflect on the Government, but as those which put the Doctor in some Heat and Concern both for the Church and State; and we hope your Lordships will make the best Construction of the Doctor's Intentions in this Matter.

Mr. Phipps. If Blasphemy and Irreligion can endanger the Church; if Treason and Rebellion can endanger the Nation, I think, with great Submission, the Doctor has made good his Answer; and therefore I hope he is not guilty of any Part of this Article.

Mr. Dee. My Lords, I beg leave that we may apply some Part of the Proofs we have read to-day to the Fourth Article.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The other Article, I fear, will be longer than will be fit to trouble your Lordships with now; we shall be ready to proceed when it is your Lordships Pleasure.

Then the LORDS Adjourned to their House Above.

Tuesday, March 7. The Eighth Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly Charge and Command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

The Doctor appearing at the Bar accordingly, with his Council, as before:

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, you that are Council for the Prisoner may proceed in his Defence.

Mr. Dodd. IF your Lordships please, we will proceed to the fourth Article. That Article contains several Heads: 1. That the Doctor suggests Her Majesty's Administration tends to the Destruction of the Constitution. 2. That there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, who are False Brethren, who undermine and betray, and put it in the Power of others to overturn and destroy the Constitution. 3. That the Doctor charges her Majesty, and those in Authority under Her, with a general Male-Administration. 4. That he persuades the Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Faction and Parties, instils Jealousies, foment Divisions, and stirs up the Subjects to Arms, and perverts several Texts of Scripture.

My Lords, As to the First, the Doctor is so far from suggesting that her Majesty's Administration tends to the Destruction of the Constitution, that he has not, as we apprehend, said any thing that can bear such a Construction. The Doctor denies, that he has made any Mention of Her Majesty's Administration in Church or State in his Sermon: Therefore, How can he argue that it tends to the Destruction of the Constitution? It has not been proved. But he takes all Opportunities to speak of the Blessings we enjoy under her Majesty's Government; prays for Her Preservation; and that She may long Reign for the Comfort and Support of the Church; professes what he spoke proceeded from a tender Concern for Her Majesty and Her Government: So that we humbly apprehend there was little Occasion for such a Charge against him.

The Second Part of the Article is, That there are False Brethren, that are Men of Character and Station in Church and State, who undermine and betray, and put it in the Power of others to overturn and destroy the Constitution. Now the false Brethren by him described, are Persons who propagate false Doctrines, who give up the Discipline and Worship of the Church, who are for Neutrality in Religion, or who wish well to the Church, but do not shew their Zeal in obeying her Precepts, and defending her Rights. These are the False Brethren intended; and this is very different from the Allegation in the Impeachment. As to that Part of the Charge, of putting it in the Power of others to destroy the Constitution, he does not mention Men of Characters and Stations in this Place; but, as I take it, in Pag. 15. where this Passage is supposed to be contained; and yet it is Twelve Pages after, before these Words are mentioned. They are not joined together, as is supposed by the Article; and speak nothing of that Matter. It is a Conjunction of Passages widely different from, and not relating to one another. The Betrayers of the Constitution, to whom the Doctor does refer, are such as by Writing endeavour to subvert the Foundation of our Church and State; such as are of a Latitudinarian Principle, who neither believe her Faith, own her Mission, submit to her Discipline, or comply with her Liturgy. My Lords, These are the Heads, and Persons, that the Doctor refers to; and not such Persons or Things, as are pretended by the Article.

As to a General Male-Administration under Her Majesty, he abhors the Charge; has no where said it: Always, as a good Subject, mentioned Her Majesty with the profoundest Duty and Respect; nor does he tax any in Authority with a Male-Administration. And surely it is not sufficient to charge the Doctor, as if he had fallen foul on the Ministry, when there is no Proof of it, and when there is no Passage in his Sermon, as we apprehend, that tends to it. The Doctor has on all Occasions, as a good Subject, justified her Majesty's Title; and particularly at the Beginning of this War, he preach'd a Sermon at Oxford, before the University, therein justifying Her Majesty's Title to the Crown, and Her entering into the War against France and Spain; wherein he has very clearly demonstrated these Two Points. And as to the Charge of endeavouring to keep up Distinction of Parties, he is so far from it, that he complains of those that have divided us with a Distinction of High and Low Churchmen; They have villanously divided us with knavish Distinctions: And what could he mean by all this, but a Service to the Government; and that they which raise such false Insinuations, such Fears and Jealousies, are the People he intended, and complains of?

And

And as he has done that, so he takes all Opportunities to pray, that we may be one Fold under one Shepherd, and that all invidious Distinctions might be laid aside.

My Lords, The next Thing is, The raising these groundless Fears and Jealousies, that are suggested. As to that, the Passage we read before is quite opposite: The Doctor rebukes them, that do it as ill Christians, and ill Subjects; and earnestly sets forth the Mischiefs of them. He is so far from encouraging it, that he has upon several Occasions severely censured it. And as to stirring up Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence, he abhors it, and throughout his Sermon asserts the Doctrine of Non-Resistance; which is quite contrary to this Part of the Charge, altho' he conceives it to be the Ground of the Impeachment. Sure there is not any one Passage, that tends to excite the Subjects to Arms, in his Sermons.

My Lords, There was Notice taken of a Passage (that has little in it) exciting Christians to put on the whole Armour of God: But sure that is distinguished from the Arms of Flesh and Blood: It cannot be so misinterpreted, as to be understood of any Earthly Power whatsoever; for as it is in the Scripture, so it is in the Doctor's Sermon, the whole Armour of God; Patience, Submission, &c. This is the Armour he excites Christians to put on; nothing of fleshly Arms.

As to the Charge of perverting several Texts of Scripture, to make ill Impressions on the People; he denies it, and had no ill Impression to make on any Person whatsoever: His Work was to do good, and make good and religious Impressions on his Hearers. But he thinks it hard, when he cites Texts of Scripture against Vice and Immorality, by a Construction in Prejudice of the Preacher, those Texts should be said to be applied to particular Persons. The Story of the Prophet, in the Second Book of Kings, Chap. vi. as printed in the Doctor's Sermon, is mistaken; but the Two Reflections made upon it, are very unnatural, and not credible. The first Inference was, That he had it by Hearsay, and that he had not read it. Sure your Lordships cannot think, but that he, that is a Doctor of Divinity, has read every Chapter in the Bible: He, that has been a Student in the University of Twenty Years standing, and more, and constantly keeping to the Church, certainly none can think but he has read the Bible. But then it is turn'd the other way upon him; That, taking it to be so, then he represents himself to be the Prophet that could see the Danger, and makes the Lords and Commons the People that were blind.

My Lords, This, I suppose, was intended to be wittily said; but if it be seriously (and without Raillery) considered, there is no Wit or Sense in it. He mentions not the Lords and Commons at all: But it is true, he, as a Preacher, warns the People to have their Eyes open, to see the Dangers of Sin and Vice; so that we apprehend, there is no Ground, from that Passage, to charge the Doctor with corrupting the Scripture.

My Lords, The next Text that is quoted against the Doctor upon this Head, is, Blow the Trumpet in Sion; sound an Alarm. Now it is urged by the Gentlemen Managers, That this can be for nothing but for War; and this (it's pretended) was only to be done in Time of War, when the Priests with the Silver Trumpets were to sound in Battle. But, my Lords, this cannot have that Construction; for whoever looks into the Scripture, particularly into the Prophet Joel, and other Places, (where that Expression is used) will find it to proclaim a Fast: They were to blow the Trumpet, to signify the Generality, and that all should take notice of it. The Allusion is carried by an Elegancy to the Trumpet, to shew the Generality of it, and that all the People should humble themselves before the Lord. Now, to make this Sedition, to infer it to be to excite the People to War and Rebellion, is not right Reasoning, nor is there the least Colour for it.

Another Quotation he makes is much pressed upon the Doctor, where speaking of the Church, he cites that Passage out of the Lamentations: Her Adversaries are chief, and her Enemies at present prosper. This is press'd upon us, as if the Doctor had an Eye in it on the Ministry. But this, we think, is straining the Words beyond their Sense or Meaning: For, first, he does not say her Adversaries are the chiefest, but in the lowest Degree of Comparison, her Adversaries are chief; that is, that amongst her Adversaries there are some considerable Persons, some Men of Estates and Figure. And this, I think, appeared Yesterday in Pamphlets that were read, some whereof are supposed to be wrote by no mean Persons; the Doctor cites the Words of Scripture, and we think it can have no ill Construction. As to the second Part of the Expression, Her Enemies at present prosper, they are the Words of the Prophet; and how true in the present Case, we must submit to your Lordships, upon what has been already offered, whether any ill Construction can, or ought to be made of them. Neither the first nor second Part of these Words are determined to any particular Persons; we cite the Words themselves; they are not determined to any Person whatsoever; and so we hope no Offence can be taken at them, nor any such Inference drawn from them, as hath been endeavoured to be represented to your Lordships. The Doctor declares in his Sermon, as we formerly mentioned, and read to your Lordships, that he hoped what he had spoken would be without any Offence, as it proceeded from an honest and good Intention, and a tender Concern for Her Majesty's Person and Government, and an hearty Zeal for the Honour and Safety of our excellent Church and Constitution: And so we hope your Lordships will construe and intend it. And so we submit this Article, and the Doctor's Defence, with all Humility, to your Lordships. We shall read no more than two or three Proclamations: The first is against Vice and Immorality, and to stir up Magistrates to take care to execute the Laws. A second takes Notice that Her Majesty's Commands had not been obeyed nor the Laws executed to suppress Vice, and commands the Magistrates to be careful to do their Duty herein: And, thirdly, a Direction that this Proclamation shall be read to the People out of the Desk. And sure the reading them there, and preaching them, or the Subject Matter of them in the Pulpit, are consistent together.

Mr. Phipps. MY Lords, We are now humbly to offer to your Lordships Consideration, our Answer to the fourth and last Article of the Impeachment, to which we think there is no Necessity of giving any Answer, because we humbly apprehend there is not any Offence charg'd upon the Doctor in that Article; for the Article saith, that the Doctor doth falsely and maliciously suggest, &c. Now to suggest can amount to no more than to insinuate, and is far short of an Averment or Assertion; and whether a bare Suggestion or Infination can be a sufficient Foundation to ground an Impeachment, is humbly submitted to your Lordships. But since 'tis made an Article against the Doctor, we humbly hope we shall give as full an Answer to the Suggestions and Infinitions contain'd in that Article, as we have to the Offences charged in either of the other Articles.

The first Part of the Article saith, That the Doctor doth falsly and maliciously suggest that Her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution. In answer to which 'tis humbly offered, that the Doctor doth not any where mention Her Majesty's Administration, either in Ecclesiastical or Civil Affairs. He esteems it one of the greatest Blessings and Deliverances, That her Majesty now happily sits on the Throne of Her Ancestors; he prays, that God would long preserve Her, for the Comfort and Support of the Church; he professeth, That what he speaks proceeded from a tender Concern for Her Majesty and Her Government, and an hearty Zeal for the Honour and Safety of our excellent Church and Constitution; he solemnly declares, That his only Aim and Intention was earnestly to contend for the Safety, Rights and Establishment of her Majesty, together with those of the Church. And how after all this it can be inferred, he suggests that her Majesty's Administration, in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution, I cannot imagine. I humbly submit, whether such a Charge can be infer'd from his Sermons, without carrying Innuendo's farther than ever hath been attempted.

As for that Part of the Fourth Article, which chargeth, that the Doctor doth suggest that there are Men of Characters and Stations in the Church and State, which do themselves weaken, undermine and betray, and do encourage and put it into the Power of others, who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment: The Doctor denies he suggesteth any such things concerning Men of Characters and Stations.

I can't but observe what Art hath been used to make up this Article, and I do not doubt but your Lordships will be of that Opinion; for the Doctor in Page 22, mentions Men of Characters and Stations, but does not mention Men of Character and Station in Church or State; but says, there are Men of Character and Stations that shift and prevaricate with their Principles, and start from their Religion upon any Occasion of Difficulty. Which is a Charge upon them in their private Capacity, and does not charge them with any Misbehaviour in their Stations, or in any thing relating to the Publick Administration; nor does he mention in that Place their weakening, undermining and betraying, or the encouraging or putting it in the Power of our profess'd Enemies to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment.

And in Page 15, where he mentions the weakning, undermining and betraying in themselves, and the encouraging and putting it in the Power of our professed Enemies to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment of both: There he does not mention Men of Character and Station, but chargeth the weakning, &c. on the False Brethren in Church and State; so that he thinks it very hard that a Part of one Sentence in Page 22, should be brought back seven Pages, and coupled with Part of another Sentence, Page 15, and put together as one Sentence, to make an Article of High Crimes and Misdemeanors;

VOL. V.

whereas one of the Sentences hath no manner of Relation to, or Dependance upon the other, and neither of the Sentences alone can amount to or be charged as a High Crime and Misdemeanor.

By this Method they might have charged him with High Treason, or any other Crime. Nay, my Lords, by this transposing and altering of Sentences, by taking a Part of one Sentence and coupling it with Part of another, they may make the Scripture it self speak Blasphemy.

But suppose it had been one entire Sentence, had this been a Ground for an Impeachment? By Men of Characters and Stations, must Men of the highest Characters and Stations be necessarily understood? No, my Lords: Are not inferior Officers, even Constables, Mayors, Justices of the Peace, Officers of the Militia, Deputy-Lieutenants, Officers of the Army, Officers of the Customs, and other Branches of the Revenues, all Men of Station? And are not some of the Stations very good ones? And are not many of the Persons that enjoy them Men of Characters too? And if among all these there may be found some whose Consciences are so tender, that they think it a Sin to communicate with the Church upon any other Account than to qualify themselves for their Offices and Stations; and such who vilify her Orders, calumniate, misrepresent and ridicule her Priests and Professors: Is it a High Crime and Misdemeanor in the Doctor to call such Persons False Brethren, and to suggest that they are Enemies to our Constitution, and that they endeavour to weaken and undermine it? And yet this is all that can be infer'd from these two Pieces of Sentences put together, to form this Article. And does this bring the least Blemish or Reflection on the Ministry, or those of the Highest Character and Stations in the Church? By no means: For the Ministry presumes that Men in those inferior Stations are well-affected to our Constitution, when they qualify themselves according to Law, by taking the Sacrament and Oaths; and if any of them are not so, it cannot be presumed to fall under the Notice of the Ministry: And in many Cases, if they did know it, yet it would not be in their Power to redress it. I remember one Instance, in an eminent Borough in this Kingdom. It was proved, at the Hearing of an Election for that Borough, that the Mayor declared that no Person should be admitted into the Corporation and qualified to Vote for Members of Parliament, but such as were Dissenters from the Test; so that there may be Mayor, Aldermen, and the whole Corporation who may take the Sacrament in the Church of England, and the Oaths, and yet every one Dissenters: And they may elect Persons into much higher Stations, if they please, which are equally disaffected to our Church, and it is not in the Power of her Majesty or the Ministry to help it. And when there are such found among us, whether the Doctor, when he chargeth them for being False Brethren, can be said to reflect on the Ministry, can be said to be guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, I submit to your Lordships.

The Learned Gentleman who spoke first to this Article, seemed to allow that Men of the highest Characters and Stations were not intended; but he objected, that to charge the inferior Magistrates with a Neglect of their Duty, is charging the Government with Male-Administration; in which I cannot concur with him. But as this Case is, I take it to be plain, that to charge inferior Officers or Magistrates with a Neglect of their Duty, cannot reflect on Her Majesty's Administration; for there are Magistrates which Her Majesty cannot remove; there are Neglects which Her Majesty or Her Ministry cannot be presumed to know, as I before mention'd. And to set this in a true Light, and to give a full Answer to this Objection, we have Her Majesty's Authority to vindicate the Doctor in this Point; for Her Majesty chargeth the Magistrates with a Neglect of their Duty, and carrieth the Charge higher than can be inferr'd from the Doctor's Sermon, I mean the several Proclamations that have been issued by Her Majesty, by the Advice of her Privy-Council (which are Her Ministry) for suppressing Profaneness and Immorality. Those Proclamations take Notice of the several Acts of Parliament against Profaneness and Immorality, and charge the inferior Magistrates with a Neglect of their Duty, in not putting those Laws in Execution. And is it an Offence for the Doctor to mention that in his Pulpit, which hath been so often repeated by her Majesty under Her Great Seal?

It has been objected, That the Doctor, speaking of the Church, says, That Her Adversaries are Chief. This is a Quotation out of Scripture, which signifies that they are Mighty; but that this reflects on the Ministry, or Her Majesty's Administration, I cannot apprehend.

But it is also objected that the Doctor, Page 5, saith, That the Communion of the Church hath been rent and divided by Faction and Schismatical Impostors, &c. Is the saying this is done with Impunity, a Reflection on the Administration? That Blasphemy, Atheism and Profaneness have been justify'd in Print; that the Worship and Discipline of the Church hath been profaned and abused, her Orders denied and vilified, her Priests and Professors calumniated, misrepresented and ridiculed; that Trumpets have been sounded to Rebellion; that Her Majesty and Her whole Administration have been reflected on, I think was sufficiently proved to your Lordships Yesterday; and that it hath been done with Impunity hitherto, I believe will not be denied, for I have not heard that any of these bold Offenders have yet been punish'd; and that the inferior Magistrates have neglected their Duty in that respect, we have Her Majesty's Authority for it. But that this is a Reflection on Her Majesty, or Her Ministry, is totally denied; for the Execution of the Laws against such Offenders is within the Province of inferior Magistrates; and God forbid that the Faults of inferior Magistrates should be charged upon her Majesty. The several Proclamations issued out by Her Majesty, by the Advice of Her Privy-Council, shew, Her Majesty and Her Ministry have done all that in them lies to suppress Blasphemy, Profaneness, and other Vices; and that the Fault and Neglect lies entirely at the Door of the inferior Magistrates: And this sufficiently answers the Objection, that what is charged upon inferior Magistrates cannot reflect on Her Majesty, or Her Ministry. And this is also a full Answer to that Part of the Fourth Article, which accuseth the Doctor with charging Her Majesty, and those in Authority, both in Church and State, with a general Male-Administration; to which I would only add what the Doctor hath said in his Answer to this Article, viz. "That he abhors the Thoughts of bringing " any Charge against Her Sacred Majesty, whom he " never mentions but in Terms of the profoundest
" Duty and Respect; that he doth not charge those " in Authority with any Male-Administration; that " he doth not so much as mention the Word Male-

Administration, nor any other Word Synonymous " with it, or from whence it can be inferr'd, or in " which it is or can be imply'd.

As to such Part of the Fourth Article, which chargeth, that the Doctor, as a publick Incendiary, persuades her Majesty's Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Factions and Parties; he invites the Dissenters to leave their Schism, and come sincerely into the Church: He complains of those who have villainously divided us with the knavish Distinctions of High and Low Church. He wisheth we were all one Fold under one Shepherd; and that all those invidious Distinctions, that distract and confound us, were lost.

If wishing that People would leave their Schism, and come sincerely into the Church; that we were all one Fold under one Shepherd, makes a Man a publick Incendiary; if blackning those that divide us with knavish Distinctions with the Character of Villainous; and wishing that all those invidious Distinctions which distract and confound us were lost, be to keep up Distinctions of Factions and Parties, the Doctor is Guilty; but if not, then he conceives there is nothing in his Sermons which can be a Foundation for the Charge in this Branch of the Fourth Article.

But it hath been objected, That tho' the Doctor invites the Dissenters to come into the Church, yet he invites them upon his own Terms: And I hope, my Lords, they shall never come in upon any other Terms than their conforming to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church. I hope I shall never see the Constitution of our Church weakened, and her Pales and Fences broken down, to let her Enemies into it.

As to the other Part of the Article, which chargeth the Doctor with instilling groundless Jealousies, and fomenting destructive Divisions among her Majesty's Subjects, there is no Foundation for it; for, on the contrary, he rebukes and condemns those who by false Insinuations, and raising groundless Jealousies and Fears, embroil and bring it into Confusion.

As to that Part of the Fourth Article, which chargeth, That the Doctor excites and stirs up Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence; if Preaching up Passive Obedience be to stir up People to Rebellion; if Preaching up the Illegality of Resistance be to excite Her Majesty's Subjects to take up Arms against Her, I own there is a sufficient Ground in his Sermon for this Charge; but otherwise, there is not one Passage in the Sermon to warrant this Accusation.

I do admit, the Doctor, in the last Page of his Sermon, hath this Exhortation of St. Paul's Put on the whole Armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the Wiles of the Devil; for we wrestle not only against Flesh and Blood, but against Principalities, against Powers, against the Rulers of the Darkness of this World, against Spiritual Wickednesses in high Places. I pray, my Lords, What is it that the Doctor in the Words of St. Paul advises his Auditors to resist? Is it not the Wiles of the Devil? With what Armour are they to resist? 'Tis with the Armour of God. What is the Armour of God? Are Guns, or Swords of Iron or Steel, the Armour of God?

The Learned Manager that spoke to this Point said, the Doctor could not mean the spiritual Armour, because he departed from the Apostle's Spiritual Meaning. And to make good this Charge, he useth the same Method that was taken to make up the first Part of this Article; for the Words cited by the Doctor are in the Eleventh and Twelfth

Verfes

Verfes of the Sixth Chapter of St. Paul to the Ephesians; and to find out the Doctor's Meaning, he goes back to the Thirty-first Verfe of the Fourth Chapter, where St. Paul faith, Let all Bitternefs, and Wrath, and Anger, and Clamour, and Evil-speaking be put away from you, with all Malice. And why this fhould be alledged to fhew what the Doctor means, when in the Words of St. Paul he advifeth his Auditors to put on the Armour of God, I cannot imagine. If he had read but two Verfes after thofe Words cited by the Doctor, he would have found the Armour of God to be The Sword of the Spirit, the Shield of Faith, the Breast-plate of Righteoufnefs, and the Helmet of Salvation; and the Doctor could mean no other Armour: And how Her Majesty, or thofe in Authority under Her, can be refifted by this Armour, or what Violence Her Majesty's Subjects can ufe with thefe Arms, I fubmit to your Lordships. 'Tis plain, that the Principalities, Powers and Rulers here meant, are not Earthly Principalities, Powers and Rulers; but the Principalities, Powers and Rulers of Darknefs, againft which Swords and Guns are but a very weak and feeble Defence. Thefe Things being confider'd, I think there is nothing to be collected from this Paragraph, that can excite Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence; unlefs it be, to take the Armour of God, to refift the Devil and all his Works; which, I hope, is not a High Crime and Misdemeanor.

As a further Evidence that the Doctor excites Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Rebellion, it is objected, That the Doctor, in his Sermon, Pag. 26. fays, Let us therefore, being well affur'd how much our Cause deserves, and how much at present it requires our bravest Refolutions, bold faft our Integrity and Religion without wavering, and earneftly contend for the Faith which was once deliver'd to the Saints. And is not this wholefome and religious Advice? The more ftrongly and openly the Cause is oppugned, the braver Refolution it requires to defend it. The Cause of Religion is attack'd by Atheifts and Deifts; the Cause of Monarchy, by Affertors of Republican and Seditious Principles; the Cause of the Church, by Papifts and Sectaries of all forts; and therefore it requires our bravest Refolutions to defend the Church, the Queen, and the Conftitution, with the fame Zeal they are attack'd, as the Doctor explains himfelf; Not doubting, if we fhew the fame Courage, and indefatigable Zeal and Labour to defend, as our Adverfaries to reproach, divide and ruin our Church; neither their united Malice nor Power, nor all the Plots and Machinations of Rome, nor the very Gates of Hell it felf, fhall ever be able to prevail againft Her. And fhall this be conftrued to excite Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence?

As to the laft Part of the Article, which chargeth, That the Doctor doth wickedly wrest and pervert divers Texts of Holy Scripture: It feems, the Printer of the Second Edition miftook one Text. If the Doctor had perverted, or wickedly wrested the Text, he muft have been fubject to a Profecution in another Place; but it would not have been a Ground for an Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

To conclude.—My Lords, If condemning the Dethroning and Murdering the Royal Martyr King Charles the Firft, be to caft black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the Revolution; if the averring the utter Illegality of Refiftance to the Supreme Power in all things lawful; if Preaching the Doctrine of Paffive Obedience and Non-Refiftance, which hath been enjoined by our Church, and confirmed by the Legiflature, and is the Doctrine of all Chriftian Churches, fhall be conftrued to be a Reflection on the Revolution, and a greater Reflection on it now, than the Preaching of the fame Doctrine was in the Reign of his late Majesty, who was the Happy Instrument of that Revolution: If the Doctor be a Criminal for Preaching that Doctrine which the Right Reverend Fathers of our Church, and other Eminent Divines, have preach'd, with the Approbation and Applaufe of the Crown, and both Houfes of Parliament; then the Doctor is guilty of the High Crimes and Misdemeanors in the firft Article.

And if to wifh that Diffenters, who qualify themfelves according to the Act, may enjoy the full Benefit of it; if to defire the Laws to be put in Execution againft fuch who will not comply with the Terms prefcribed by the Act, and againft Atheifts, Deifts, and fuch who frequent no Religious Worfhip at all, and are particularly excepted out of the Act of Toleration; and if to affert, that a Sentence ratified in Heaven cannot be reverfed on Earth, be to affirm the Toleration unreafonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; then the Doctor is alfo guilty of the High Crimes in the Second Article.

And if to affert the Prejudice the Church receives by Schifm and Occafional Conformity; if the fhewing the heavy Judgments which may be brought down upon a Church and Nation, by Blafphemy, Atheifm, Frophanenefs and Immorality; if to fhew the Danger the Queen and Church are in, by the rebellious Principles that are daily broach'd and publifh'd, be to affert the Church is in Danger under Her Majesty's Adminiftration; the Doctor is likewife guilty of the Crimes in the Third Article.

And laftly, If to pray for Her Majesty's long Continuance on the Throne, for the Comfort and Support of the Church and Nation; if to fhew that the Laws againft Atheifm, Blafphemy, Frophanenefs and Irreligion, be not put in due Execution by inferior Magiftrates; that is, if to affert in his Pulpit what Her Majesty, by Advice of her Miniftry, hath afferted in Four Proclamations, be to reflect on Her Majesty and Her Miniftry, and to charge Her Majesty with Male-Adminiftration in Church and State; and if exhorting the People to put on the Sword of the Spirit, the Shield of Faith, the Breast-plate of Righteoufnefs, and the Helmet of Salvation, to refift the Devil, and all the Powers of Darknefs, be to excite Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence againft her Majesty; and if Preaching up Paffive Obedience and Non-Refiftance, is to ftir up People to Rebellion; then the Doctor is guilty of the High Crimes and Misdemeanors in the Fourth Article; efpecially, if ftain'd, foreign and unnatural Inferences, Innuendoes and Innuendo's are to pafs for Proof. But otherwife I pre-fume to fay, the Doctor is not guilty of any of the Offences charged in either of the Articles; and I humbly hope, your Lordships will be of that Opinion.

Mr. Dec. MY Lords, This Article is fhort of the former Articles, in the manner of the Charge. The firft Part of it is a Charge upon the Doctor, That he fuggefts only, That Her Majesty's Adminiftration tends to the Deftruction of the Conftitution. As to this Part of the Article, (as has been observed) there is no Passage in the Sermon mentioning Her Majesty, but with the greatest Respect, and with hearty Prayers for Her. The Words Ministers, and Ministry, are not found in the whole Sermon: Therefore, to find any Charge on them by the Doctor, we must look to the Second Part of the Article, which charges the Doctor with suggesting, That there are Men of Character and Stations, who are False Brethren, and do undermine the Constitution, and endeavour to betray the Church; and consequently charges Her Majesty with a General Male-Administration.

My Lords, As to this Part of the Charge, viz. That the Doctor doth suggest, that Men of Characters and Stations are Underminers of our Constitution, it is not to be found in any Part of the Sermon: But if he doth suggest, that Men of Characters and Stations (not saying of what Characters, or what Stations) are False Brethren, (if your Lordships take notice what those Men are, whom the Doctor calls False Brethren) it will not be a sufficient Ground for a Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors. There are Four Sorts of Persons, that the Doctor charges as False Brethren: Those that propagate False Doctrines; Those that give up the Discipline of the Church; Those that are for a Neutrality in Religion; and Those that own themselves to be of the Church, but live not according to her Rules. Now to say, that there are some Men of Character and Stations in the Nation that are False Brethren, within some one or other of these Descriptions, I wish I could say it was not true. But when the Doctor comes to charge some Persons as Underminers of the Church and Constitution, they are described to be either those Persons that subvert the Fundamentals of Religion, as Atheists, Deists, Socinians, and such like; or Occasional Conformists, Persons that creep into the Church, only with a Design to do it a Mischief. And I think these Persons may be justly said to be Underminers of the Church.

My Lords, There is a General Charge against the Doctor, That he excites the People to Rebellion. If this could be naturally infer'd from his Words, he must be guilty of Self-Contradiction, and ought rather to be pitied as a weak, foolish Man, than punished as a cunning Incendiary. For when he hath so positively affirmed the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, if any Thing had dropp'd from him in the same Assembly tending to Rebellion; he would have expos'd himself to the utmost Ridicule.

My Lords, Some Things have been observed out of the Preface to his Sermon at St. Paul's: One Expression is that of sounding a Trumpet. I should not have thought this worth taking notice of, but that some of the Gentlemen did lay some Strefs on it, as if this were founding an Alarm, exciting People to Arms: But I conceive, that the Words out of the Mouth of the Doctor, bear the same Sense as out of the Mouth of the Prophet. But for fear that he should be misconstrued, the Doctor explains himself by the Words immediately following, and shews, that such Prohibition or Restraint laid on the Clergy, as are there suggested, are expressly contrary to the Command of God. His Words are these: We are told by these Men, who would shut both our Eyes and our Mouths, in order the more effectually to undermine and destroy us, that the Pulpit is not a Place for Politicks; and that it is the Business of a Clergyman to preach Peace, and not sound a Trumpet in Sion; so expressly contrary to the Command of God, to cry aloud, and spare not. So that these Words do plainly interpret what the Doctor meant by sounding a Trumpet.

My Lords, There was another Thing taken notice of from this Preface, and that was the Encouragement he gives to People to Arms and Violence, against such as would destroy the Church, &c. The Words of the Doctor are these: If honest Men will sit still, and give up their Cause through want of Courage, or a just Sense of the dangerous Attempts of our Enemies; we may, without the Spirit of Prophecy, foretel what will become of our Constitution, when it is so vigorously attacked from without, and so lazily defended from within. This was looked upon as dividing the People, and exciting them to make Resistance. But if the Gentlemen had looked a little before, in the same Paragraph, they would have found who the Assailants he mentions were; and then they would not, I conceive, have blamed the Doctor, for encouraging the People to make a vigorous Defence. The Assailants are those that make rebellious Appeals to the People, as the only Judges of Right and Wrong, and the Dernier Resort of Justice and Dominion: These, he says, are the fashionable Methods now made use of to undermine the Church and Legislature, by breaking in upon the Prerogative of the Crown, by threatening them with imaginary Legions, and a Popular Tribunal, where their Authority is to be tried and determined. To put a stop to this Thing, is what he says is the Intent of his Discourse. Now if these are the Persons that attack the Constitution, that appeal to the People as the only Judges of Right and Wrong, if these are the Assailants, surely the Doctor may encourage the People vigorously to defend themselves against them.

My Lords, There was one Thing more taken notice of by the Gentlemen Managers, That the Doctor had given great Offence to the Commons, by an Expression he has made use of, by way of Exclamation, in the Close of his Answer to the Articles; and that runs thus: Hard is the Lot of the Ministers of the Gospel, if when they cite the Word of God in their General Exhortations to Piety and Virtue, or in their Reproofs of Men's Transgressions, or where they are Lamenting the Difficulties and Conflicts with which the Church of Christ, whilst Militant here on Earth, must always struggle; the several Texts and Passages by them cited, shall be said to have been by them meant of particular Persons and Things, and shall be construed in the most Criminal Sense, and be made by such Construction one Ground of an Impeachment for High Crimes and Misdemeanors. If this Supposition, as the Doctor has put it, be turned into a Position, he hopes you will pardon him for his Exclamation. If Generals have not been tied to Particulars, to make up these Articles, then the Doctor had no Reason to make this Exclamation: But if the Doctor's Sermon hath been so treated, in order to frame the Articles against him, then he is not blameable for that Expression.

My Lords, The Doctor has never before been charged with Disloyalty to the Government: He hath always been a Man of that Probity, and of so blameless a Life and Conversation, that he hath not been so much as attack'd on that Account. And when a Man of his Character is brought before your Lordships, for a Sermon preached in a publick Congregation, for a Doctrine that is the Doctrine of the Church of England, and for which he has has the Authority of so many of the Fathers of that Church, as well as of many of her Learned Sons: For him, I say, to be brought before your Lordships (by an Impeachment) on that Account, surely he may be allowed to say this: His Lot (at least) is hard, that he should be made the first, and so solemn Example; when he only followed so many and great Examples, as have been set him from the Beginning of the Reformation down to this Time. And when your Lordships consider the Circumstances of the Doctor, I hope your Lordships will think, that the Defence of this Prosecution, must be a sufficient Punishment for any Crimes he is charged with, and of which he can be supposed guilty: And so I submit him, and his Cause, to your Lordships Justice.

Dr. Henckman. MY Lords, In the General Preamble to the Articles of Impeachment, Doctor Sacheverell is said to have preached and published Two Discourses, with an Intention to defame Her Majesty's Administration; and this last Article contains several particular Charges, of a very high Nature, and great Malignity, against Her Majesty's Happy Administration.

For a General Answer to this Article, I must beg your Lordships Patience, to look back again upon those Passages of this Sermon, which I humbly offer'd to your Lordships Consideration under the Third Article, which will set the Doctor's Intentions in a clear Light. In one of them, he readily acknowledges the great Blessing we at present enjoy, by Her Majesty's happily sitting on the Throne of Her Ancestors: And in the other Places, where he mentions Her Majesty, it is with great Respect, and hearty Addresses to God, long to preserve Her on that Throne; and at last concludes with this solemn Protestation; That what he had then spoken, proceeded from a good Intention, and tender Concern for Her Majesty's Person and Government, and a hearty Zeal for the Honour and Safety of our Excellent Church and Constitution.

My Lords, Some Regard is to be had to the Declarations of every honest Man, in relation to his own Thoughts and Intentions, which are known only to God and his own Conscience: And certainly, when a Priest of the Church of England does, in the Presence of God, and the Face of the Congregation, solemnly declare, That what he speaks is with a tender Concern, and hearty Zeal for Her Majesty's Person and Government; no loose Words, or distant and unconnected Expressions, ought to be construed to a direct contrary Sense of so express a Declaration. My Lords, The Sense of these Words is plain and obvious to every Man's Understanding: But if a Passage in the Two and Twentieth Page of this Sermon, in it self, and as it stands in its proper Connection, (not Criminal,) must be construed by what is said in the Fifteenth Page, little relating to the same Purposes, and both these Passages explain'd by a Third still farther distant; by such a Method, the most inoffensive Discourse may be made blameable, and it will be very difficult to make any Defence.

My Lords, It has been objected by the Learned Managers, That the Doctor chose an unseasonable Time, and an improper Place, to vent his Notions in. But how does it appear, that either the one or the other was of his own Choice? Does it not rather appear, that he was called to perform that Duty by the publick Magistrate; and that both the

Time and Place were of his Appointment? Or how can it, at this Time, be thought unseasonable, to maintain the Doctrine of our Church, when such Swarms of infamous Libels are daily published in Opposition to it? Or what Place can be more proper for this Purpose, than that in which such Libels usually first appear, and most prevail? Whether the Doctor performed his Duty, by Preaching that Doctrine there, which the Rubrick of our Liturgy expressly commands him to teach on that Day, must be submitted to your Lordships: And certainly it will always be thought proper, on that Day that our Church and State were delivered from a most horrid Conspiracy, to preach against the Sin of Rebellion: Upon that Day that the Whole Nation was delivered from a Popish Conspiracy, it will always be proper to shew, that Resistance of the Higher Powers is the Doctrine of Papists, and first proceeded from them. It is well known to your Lordships, what the General Duty of Ministers obliges them to; but upon State-Days, when they are commanded by Supreme Authority, and directed by the Rubrick, what Subject to treat of; it would be Contempt in them not to obey the Commands of their Superiors, or not to insist upon that Doctrine which they are peculiarly ordered to explain. And I humbly apprehend, that those Reverend Prelates, some of whose Expressions were lately read to your Lordships, would not have received the Thanks of this Honourable House, if they had not adapted their Discourses to the Solemnity of that Day, which they then celebrated.

My Lords, Upon a general View of this and the other Articles, the whole Charge will appear to be supported, not by any one plain Proposition, but by Inferences and suppos'd Constructions. It has been my Endeavour, under every Article, to lay before your Lordships one or more clear Passages of this Sermon, which sufficiently declare the Author's Intention as to that Article; and I must leave it to your Lordships Consideration, how far an Insinuation or Inference will be outweighed by an express Declaration. If there are any Words in this Discourse which seem to bear a doubtful Meaning, your Lordships will in all Cases incline to the most favourable Side; and in this Particular, the Character and Function of a Minister will deserve some more than ordinary Allowance. My Lords, It is a known Rule in the Roman Law, In ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eas protulisset. Where-ever Words are capable of a double Construction, there the Intention of the Speaker is chiefly to be looked after, and attended to. Every Man has a Right to explain his own Intentions; and the darker and more obscure Expressions of his Discourse must be construed by those Passages which are more plain and explicit. This is a Rule in all Civil and common Cases between Man and Man; but in Criminal Cases, there that Law exacts a stricter and a nicer Proof: Where-ever the Life or Liberty of a Citizen is concerned, there the Proofs ought to be Luce meridiana clariora, as evident as the Sun at Noon-day, and such as will convince every one at first Sight.

My Lords, I mention these Maxims of the Roman Law only as they are agreeable to the common Sense and Understanding of Mankind, as Rules of Reason and Equity, which your Lordships have always governed your selves by, and always will. The last of 'em I mention with the greater Confidence, because I find it has once already received the the Sanction of this honourable House, in Sir Samuel Bernardiston's Case; in which it is declared, That Innuendo's or supposed Constructions ought not to be allowed; for all Accusations should be plain, and the Crimes ascertained. This, my Lords, has once been the Resolution of this Honourable House, and we humbly hope your Lordships will not depart from a Precedent so well established. My Lords, one Part of this last Article is, That the Doctor has wrested several Texts of Scripture to seditious Purposes; but it has not yet appeared that he ever harboured one seditious Thought: Whether he has perverted any Texts of Scripture will be best explained by himself, when your Lordships shall be pleased to hear him.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, We desire to read two or three Proclamations: The First is to direct the Magistrates to put the Laws in Execution against Prophaneness and Immorality; and that not being duly observed, the Second Proclamation takes notice thereof, and directs the Magistrates to put the same in Execution: And there are two subsequent Proclamations to the same Purpose.

Clerk Reads.] By the Queen, A Proclamation, for Restraining the Spreading False News, and Printing and Publishing of Irreligious and Seditious Papers and Libels.

ANNE R.

Whereas by an Act of Parliament made in the Third Year of the Reign of King Edward the First, It is Enacted, that none be so hardy to tell or publish any false News or Tales, whereby Discord, or Occasion of Discord or Slander may grow between the King and his People, or the great Men of the Realm; and that he that doth so, shall be taken and kept in Prison until he hath brought him into Court which was first Author of the Tale. And by another Act made in the Second Year of the Reign of King Richard the Second, it is declared, That the devising, speaking and telling such false News and Tales, was likely to occasion great Peril and Mischiefe to, and the quick Subversion and Destruction of this Realm: For the preventing whereof, it is thereby Enacted, That none be so hardy to devise, speak or tell any false News, Lyes, or other false Things, of Prelates, Noblemen, and Officers of the Crown therein named, whereof Discord, or any Slander, might arise within this Realm, under the Pain ordained by the said Statute of King Edward the First. And by another Act made in the Twelfth Year of the Reign of the said King Richard the Second, it is Enacted, That when any such shall be taken and imprisoned, and cannot find him by whom the Speech be moved, that he shall be punished for such his Offence. And whereas the preventing of the spreading and publishing of false News and Tales, and the Writing, Printing and Publishing of Heretical, Blasphemous, Irreligious, Treasonable, Seditious and Scandalous Books, Pamphlets, Libels and Papers, is a Matter which requires our Publick Care, and is of great Concernment; especially considering, that by Reason of the general Licentiousness of the Times, since an Act for preventing Abuses in Printing Seditious, Treasonable and Unlicensed Books and Pamphlets, and for regulating of Printing and Printing-Presses, made in the Thirteenth Year of the Reign of Our late Royal Uncle King Charles the Second, and continued by an Act made in the Fourth Year of the Reign of the late King William and Queen Mary, expired, many Evil-disposed Persons have Written, Printed and Published divers Heretical, Blasphemous, Irreligious, Treasonable and Seditious Books, Pamphlets, Papers, and many false, infamous and scandalous Libels, and do continue such their unlawful and exorbitant Practices, endeavouring thereby to traduce and reproach the Ecclesiastical and Temporal Government of this Kingdom, and the publick Ministers of the same, and the Proceedings and Members of both Houses of Parliament, and other our loving Subjects, to the high Dishonour of Almighty God, and the endangering the Peace of these Kingdoms, contrary to the said Statutes, and the common Laws of our Realm: We therefore (with the Advice of our Privy-Council) do by this Our Royal Proclamation Charge and Command all our Subjects, of what State or Condition soever they be, That they do not henceforth presume, either by Writing, Printing or Speaking, to tell or publish any false News or Tales, contrary to the Statutes before-mentioned; nor Write, Print, Publish or Sell, or cause to be Written, Printed, Published or Sold, any Heretical, Blasphemous, Irreligious, Treasonable, or Seditious Books, Papers or Pamphlets, or any scandalous Libels, reflecting upon us, or upon the Ecclesiastical or Temporal Government of this Realm, or any of our publick Ministers or Officers, or on the Proceedings of either of our Houses of Parliament, or any the Members thereof, or upon any other of our loving Subjects. And we do hereby further declare, That we will proceed with the utmost Severity and Rigour of Law, against all such Persons who shall be Guilty of any the malicious and unlawful Practices aforesaid: We being resolved, as much as in us lies, to suppress the said Enormities by a more strict and exemplary Punishment of all such Offenders herein, as shall hereafter be discover'd: To the Discoverers whereof we will give all due Encouragement. And we do hereby straitly charge and command all and singular our Judges, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Mayors, Bailiffs, and all other our Officers and Ministers whatsoever, to take effectual Care for the speedy Apprehension, Prosecution and Punishment of all such Persons, who shall at any Time hereafter be found Offenders herein.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Twenty-Sixth Day of March, 1702. In the First Year of Our Reign.

GOD save the QUEEN.

Mr. Dodd. Now read the Second. Read the Date first.

Clerk Reads.] Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Five and Twentieth Day of February, 1702. In the First Year of Our Reign.

By the Queen, a Proclamation for the Encouragement of Piety and Virtue, and for Preventing and Punishing of Vice, Prophaneness and Immorality.

ANNE R.

Whereas on our Accession to the Throne, we thought fit, by the Advice of our Privy-Council, to issue out our Royal Proclamation for the Encouragement of Piety and Virtue, and for the Preventing and Punishing of Vice, Prophaneness and Immorality: And whereas we have been informed, that our Laws mentioned in the said Pro-

Proclamation have not been executed according to our just Expectation and Commands: We most seriously and religiously considering, That it is an indispensable Duty on us, to be careful, above all other things, to preserve and advance the Honour and Service of Almighty God, and to discourage and suppress all Vice, Prophaneness, Debauchery and Immorality, which are so highly displeasing to God, so great a Reproach to our Religion and Government, and (by Means of the frequent ill Examples of the Practicers thereof) have so fatal a Tendency to the Corruption of many of our loving Subjects, otherwise religiously and virtuously disposed, and which (if not timely remedied) may justly draw down the divine Vengeance on us and our Kingdoms: We also humbly acknowledging, That we cannot expect the Blessing and Goodness of Almighty God, (by whom Kings and Queens reign, and on which we entirely rely) to make our Reign happy and prosperous to our self and our People, nor hope for the Divine Assistance to deliver us from the great and imminent Dangers which our Kingdoms, and the true Protestant Religion established among us, are in this present Juncture threatned with, without a religious Observance of God's Holy Laws. To the Intent therefore that Religion, Piety, and good Manners may, (according to our most hearty Desire) flourish and increase under our Administration and Government; We have thought fit (by the Advice of our Privy-Council) to issue this our Royal Proclamation; and do hereby declare our Royal Purpose and Resolution to discountenance and punish all manner of Vice, Prophaneness and Immorality in all Persons, of whatsoever Degree or Quality, within this our Realm; and particularly in such as are employed near our Royal Person: And that for the greater Encouragement of Religion and Morality, we will, upon all Occasions, distinguish Persons of Piety and Virtue by Marks of our Royal Favour. And we do expect and require, That all Persons of Honour, or in Place of Authority will give good Example by their own Virtue and Piety, and to their utmost contribute to the discountenancing Persons of dissolute and debauch'd Lives, that they, being by that Means reduced to Shame and Contempt, for their loose and evil Actions and Behaviour, may be thereby also enforced the sooner to reform their ill Habits and Practices, and that the visible Displeasure of good Men towards them, may (as far as it is possible) supply what the Laws (probably) cannot altogether prevent. And we do hereby strictly enjoin and prohibit all our loving Subjects, of what Degree or Quality soever, from playing on the Lord's Day at Dice, Cards, or any other Game whatsoever, either in publick or private Houses, or other Place or Places whatsoever; and do hereby require and command them, and every of them, decently and reverently to attend the Worship of God on every Lord's-Day on Pain of our highest Displeasure, and of being proceeded against with the utmost Rigour that may be by Law. And for the more effectual reforming of all such Persons, who by Reason of their dissolute Lives and Conversations are a Scandal to our Kingdom; our further Pleasure is, and we do hereby strictly charge and command all our Judges, Mayors, Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, and all other our Officers and Ministers, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, and all other our Subjects, whom it may concern, to be very vigilant and strict in the Discovery, and the effectual Prosecution and Punishment of all Persons who shall be guilty of excessive Drinking, Blasphemy, prophane Swearing and Cursing, Lewdness, Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, or other dissolute, immoral or disorderly Practices; and that they take care also effectually to suppress all Bawdy-Houses, publick Gaming-Houses and Places, and other disorderly Houses; and to put in Execution the Statute made in the nine and twentieth Year of the Reign of our late Royal Uncle King Charles the Second, intituled, An Act for the better Observation of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday; and also an Act of Parliament made in the ninth Year of the Reign of our late dear Brother King William the Third, intituled, An Act for the more effectual suppressing of Blasphemy and Prophaneness; and all other Laws now in Force for the punishing and suppressing any of the Vices aforesaid; and also to suppress and prevent all Gaming whatsoever, in publick or private Houses on the Lord's Day; and likewise, that they take effectual Care to prevent all Persons keeping Taverns, Chocolate-Houses, Coffee-Houses, or other Publick Houses whatsoever, from selling Wine, Chocolate, Coffee, Ale, Beer, or other Liquors, or receiving or permitting Guests to be or remain in such their Houses on the Lord's-Day, (except in Case of Necessity and Charity) as they will answer it to Almighty God, upon Pain of our highest Displeasure. And for the more effectual Proceeding herein, we do hereby direct and command all our Judges of Assize and Justices of the Peace, to give strict Charges at their respective Assizes and Sessions, for the due Prosecution and Punishment of all Persons that shall presume to offend in any the Kinds aforesaid; and also of all Persons that contrary to their Duty, shall be remiss or negligent in putting the said Laws in Execution; and that they do at their respective Assizes and Quarter-Sessions of the Peace, cause this our Proclamation to be publickly read in open Court immediately before the Charge is given. And we do hereby further charge and command every Minister in his respective Parish-Church or Chapel, to read or cause to be read this our Proclamation, at least four Times in every Year, immediately after Divine Service, and to incite and stir up their respective Auditories to the Practice of Piety and Virtue, and avoiding of all Immorality and Prophaneness. And to the end that all Vice and Debauchery may be prevented, and Religion and Virtue practised by all Officers, private Soldiers, Mariners, and others, who are employed in our Service by Sea or Land; We do hereby strictly charge and command all our Commanders and Officers whatsoever, That they do take care to avoid all Prophaneness, Debauchery, and other Immoralities; and that by their own good and virtuous Lives and Conversations, they do set good Examples to all such as are under their Care and Authority; and likewise take care of and inspect the Behaviour of all such as are under 'em, and to punish all those who shall be guilty of any the Offences aforesaid, as they will be answerable for the ill Consequences of their Neglect herein.

GOD save the QUEEN.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, There are two subsequent Proclamations pressing Magistrates to put the Laws in Execution in this Case; but they are to the same Purpose, therefore I think we need not spend your Lordships Lordships Time to read them: They are to the same purpose with the last, taking notice that the Magistrates had not done their Duty as required.

My Lords, We have now done our Defence; only we have one Petition to make, That your Lordships would be pleas'd to hear the Doctor speak for himself: There are some things more proper for him to give an Account of, than for his Council. We apprehend the most proper Time will be after the Gentlemen Managers for the House of Commons have replied; but we thought it proper to mention it to your Lordships now, and humbly submit it to your Lordships.

Mr. Phipps. My Lords, The Reason why we troubled your Lordships with reading those Proclamations, was to shew your Lordships, that the inferior Magistrates being negligent of their Duty in putting the Laws in Execution against Prophaneness, her Majesty put out another Proclamation to quicken them to it; therefore when the Doctor charges the Magistrates with a Neglect of their Duty, it cannot be understood to be a Reflection on the Queen or the Ministry, because you see what great Care her Majesty has taken: So that we think this last Article is sufficiently clear'd by these Proclamations. One thing, my Lords, I think we have not troubled your Lordships with, and that is the Journal of your own House in the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston: If the Gentlemen of the House of Commons think it otherwise, we are ready to read it.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. My Lords, I have the Commands of the Gentlemen employed in this Service with me, to mention to your Lordships, that they are under a great Surprize, that the Council for the Doctor should take upon them to propose to your Lordships, that the Doctor might speak after the Commons Reply: I have Instructions (since the Doctor's Council have referred some Part of the Defence to himself) to tell the Doctor, that if he has any thing to say for himself, now is his Time before the Commons reply; the Commons claiming it as their Right to speak last.

Mr. Dodd. My Lords, we submit to it. Doctor, go on.

Dr. Sacheverell. MY Lords, The Defence made by my Council has been so full and particular, and the Trial itself drawn out into so great a Length, that I should not add to your Lordships Trouble by saying any thing for my Self, did I not think that in such a Cause as this, (wherein the Doctrine of our Church, the Dignity of that Holy Order to which I belong, and even the Common Interest of Christianity itself, are so nearly concerned) it becomes me not to be altogether silent.

For, my Lords, it has been owned by some of the Managers for the Honourable House of Commons, that tho' I am the Person impeached, yet my Condemnation is not the Thing principally aimed at. I am, it seems, an insignificant Tool of a Party, not worth regarding; the avowed Design of my Impeachment is, by the means of it to procure an Eternal and Indelible Brand of Infamy to be fixed, in a Parliamentary Way, on all those who maintain the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, and to have the Clergy directed what Doctrines they are to preach, and what not. And therefore, as Insignificant as I am in my Self, yet the Consequences of my Trial (if rightly represented to your Lordships by some of those Gentlemen) are of the highest Moment and Importance.

Since I am the unfortunate Occasion of bringing these Matters in Judgment before your Lordships, it will behove me, I think, after what has been pleaded in my behalf, by my Council learned in the Law, to say somewhat also for my Self, in order to clear the Innocence of my Intentions, and remove that Load of Guilt and Infamy, which may be laid upon me, should your Lordships determine, (as, I trust in God, you will not) that the Articles of Impeachment Exhibited, have been made good against me.

With your Lordships Permission then, I shall lay before you some few General Remarks, which in my humble Opinion may be added to what my Council have already observ'd, concerning the Methods taken by the Managers for the Honourable House of Commons, to Prove and Support the Articles of their Charge. And shall then, with your Lordships leave, say somewhat severally to the Articles themselves, which may serve to remind your Lordships of what my Council before offered more at large, and with greater Advantage.

My Lords, The Charge brought against me in these Articles is of a very High, and Heinous Nature; and had it been as clearly made out, as it has been strongly affirmed, it would justly have exposed me to a very severe Sentence. But the more heinous the Charge is, the more evident and undeniable, I should think, the Proof ought to be. And how, my Lords, has this Charge been supported in the several Articles of it? By plain, direct, and express Passages produced, and read to your Lordships out of my Sermons; or by Intentments, unnecessary Implications, and strain'd Constructions? By laying entire Sentences before your Lordships, and relying upon what was manifestly contain'd in them; or by piecing broken Sentences, and conjoining distant and independent Passages, in order to make me speak, what I never thought of?

I am unacquainted, my Lords, with the Methods of legal Proof, and little thought I should have had this Occasion of enquiring into them. But, as far as I am able to comprehend any Thing of this Nature, I should think, that there cannot be a clearer Indication that I am not guilty of having asserted what I am charg'd by the several Articles to have said, than that so many Hours Learning and Eloquence have been employ'd in proving me to have said it. Had I really affirm'd those Propositions for which I am accused, my Sermons being before your Lordships, the Places wherein such Propositions were directly contained might have been referred to, and read, with the same Ease as my Council refer'd to the Passages contained in the several Writings, and Sermons of the Reverend Fathers, and other Eminent Divines of our Church, wherein they Taught the Doctrine of Non-Resistance in the same Extent as I maintained it, or in Terms much stronger.

These Passages produced by my Council, were barely Read to your Lordships: No Argument, no Colours were used, because none were necessary, to prove what Propositions were laid down in those Passages. Whereas, to prove me guilty of having asserted what is laid to my Charge, after my Sermons and Prefaces were read to your Lordships, much Art and Industry were used to persuade your Lordships, that such Assertions were really contained in them.

My Lords, When my Words were capable of Two Senses, the worst and most invidious, though at the same Time the most strained and unnatural Construction, has been always made of them. Nay, when my Words were so plain and express, that it was impossible to put any criminal Glosses or Colours upon them, I have been accused of meaning the direct contrary to what I have said: And when I pressed the Duty of Allegiance to the Queen, your Lordships were told, that it was most certain, I meant the Pretender.

To Aggravate my Guilt, I have been accused not only for what I am supposed to have said, but for what I am allowed not to have said: Not only for what I have taken notice of in my Sermons, but for what I have passed by unobserved: I have been charged with Negative Crimes; as if what I omitted to say, had been omitted with Design, and my Silence itself were Criminal.

These, my Lords, are the Methods, that have been made use of to prove me guilty of Crimes, which if proved, might affect my Liberty and Fortune; no favourable Allowances have been made to a Minister of the Gospel, discharging the Duty of his Function, and rebuking Vice and Irreligion with an honest and well-meant Zeal, but sometimes perhaps carrying him into Expressions too open, and unguarded. I could add, my Lords, if such a Complaint might not be thought improper from one in my Circumstances, that, in the course of my Accusation, I have been stiled a Criminal, and treated as such by some of these Honourable Gentlemen, with a Degree of Scorn and Indignity, from which I hoped my Sacred Profession, my present unhappy Condition, and a Regard to this Solemn and Awful Judicature might have screened me.

But, my Lords, I lay aside all Complaints of this Nature, and with your Lordships leave shall proceed to make some few, short Observations upon the several Branches of the Charge Exhibited against me.

I am charged, my Lords, in the first Article, with having Maintained, That the necessary Means, used to bring about the late Happy Revolution, were Odious and Unjustifiable; in Proof of which it has been urged, that I have in General Terms asserted, the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power upon any Pretence whatsoever. My Lords, the Resistance in that Passage by me condemned, is no where by me applied to the Revolution; nor is it applicable to the Case of the Revolution, the Supreme Power not being then resisted.

My Lords, I neither expressly apply'd my Doctrine of Non-Resistance to the Case of the Revolution, nor had I the least Thoughts of including the Revolution under my general Assertion. I expressed this Doctrine in the same general Terms, in which I found it deliver'd by the Apostles of Christ. I taught it as I had learnt it, from the Homilies of our Church, and as I was enjoined to teach it, by the Articles of our Religion. I used no other Language, than what had been used by our first Reformers, by a continued Series of Right Reverend Prelates, and other Celebrated Divines now with God, and by many of those Venerable Fathers, before whom I stand, and what is perfectly agreeable to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. I had little Reason to apprehend that I could ever have been accused by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons to your Lordships as a Criminal, or as an Asperser of the Memory of the late King, for preaching this Doctrine; when others, who preached the same Doctrine, in the same Terms, before their late Majesties, before our present Gracious Sovereign, (whom I pray God long to Preserve!) before each House of Parliament, before this very House of Commons, have met with publick Approbation: But since it is my singular Misfortune to be Accused, for what others have received Thanks, in some Instances convey'd to them by several of the Managers themselves, I do with all humble Confidence rely upon your Lordships Justice; not doubting but that the Learned Judges, if thought necessary to be consulted, will declare, what I have in this Case asserted, to be warranted by Law, and the Right Reverend the Bishops will affirm it to be the Doctrine of the Gospel.

The Doctrine I preached being the Doctrine of the Homilies of our Church, not expressed only in a few particular Passages of those Homilies, but perfectly agreeable to the whole Tenor, the main Scope and Design of them; and those Homilies being established by the Thirty Nine Articles, as containing godly and wholesome Doctrine; and those Articles being confirmed by the 13th of Queen Elizabeth; and that Statute being made Perpetual and Fundamental to our Constitution by the late Act of Union; I leave it to your Lordships to consider, how far the Condemnation of me, on the Account of that Doctrine, may affect, and shake the present Frame of the British Constitution, in Church and State, and tend to dissolve the Union of the two Kingdoms.

My Lords, Upon the second Article, I would humbly pray your Lordships to consider, that I have no where in my Sermon shewn any the least Dislike of the Indulgence granted by Law to the Dissenters; that, on the contrary, I have declared my Approbation of it in the most express Terms imaginable, which I beg leave once more to repeat to your Lordships out of my Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's. I would not (I there say) be misunderstood, as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence which the Government hath condescended to give them; which I am sure, all those, who wish well to our Church, are ready to grant to Consciences truly Scrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law hath prescribed.

My Lords, This then was, and still is my sincere Opinion; nor am I conscious that I have uttered one Word inconsistent with it. I have indeed blam'd, and perhaps with some Warmth and Earnestness blam'd, the Abuses which Men of no Consciences, have made, of the Legal Exemption, granted to Consciences truly scrupulous: Nor could I think that those Reprehensions of mine, would have drawn upon me the Displeasure of any sincere Christian, which were levelled against Hypocrites, Socinians, Deists, and such as, under the Umbrage of that Act, which permits Protestant Dissenters, and those only, to serve God, every Man in his own Way, think themselves at Liberty to be of no Protestant Congregation, of no Religion at all. I will farther ingenuously own to your Lordships, that I had in my Eye some Abuses made of that Act by the Dissenters themselves; who, I am told, do (both Pastors and People) rarely observe the Qualifications prescribed by that Act; and who erect Seminaries for educating Youth in Principles opposite to the Doctrine, Discipline, and Worship of our Church: Whereas that Act was intended for the Ease of those, whose Minds through the unhappy Prejudices of Education, were already estranged from the Church; not, as I humbly conceive, to indulge Men in taking the most effectual Methods to Propagate and Perpetuate their Schism.

My Lords, Of any Favours to Dissenters granted, or intended by the Law, I have no where complained. Of Toleration, a Word unknown to our Laws, and implying, as I am informed, much more than our Lawgivers designed, if I have said any Thing Offensive, I may, I hope, reasonably presume, that it will not be judged by your Lordships in any wise to reflect on that Act of Exemption, which I have spoken of in Terms, no ways, I think, misbecoming a good Subject, or betraying any want of Christian Moderation. Nor is there, my Lords, any want of it, I conceive, in affirming that this Act, which relieves some Dissenters from legal Punishments, to which they were before obnoxious, hath not any ways altered the Nature of Schism, or extinguished the Obligations to Church-Communion; which is an Evangelical Duty, incumbent on all Christians, by the Rules of the Gospel, Antecedent to all Secular Laws, and can by no human Power be Dispensed with. If the Church of England, my Lords, imposes no unlawful Terms of Communion, as She certainly does not, then all Separatists from her Communion, will, notwithstanding the Indulgence, continue to be Guilty of Schism; The Consequence of which Guilt, may still rest upon their Souls, however it may cease to Affect their Bodies or Estates. For as no human Law can render that Lawful which God hath forbidden, so neither can it make that Void, which God hath commanded.

My Lords, I am accused, under this Head, of maintaining, that it is the Duty of Superior Pastors to Thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons entitled to the Benefit of the Toleration; I hope, it hath evidently appeared to your Lordships, that I advance no such Position. Sure I am, that my Words do not in themselves carry such a Meaning, nor does the Connexion of my Discourse require that Sense, or easily admit it. Schismatics, my Lords, are not the only Persons against whom Ecclesiastical Censures may be denounced; the Works of Darknes, which I referred to, as fit to be reproved, in that Part of my Sermon, where I speak of these Censures, are of the same Kind with those mentioned by the Apostle, whose Words I produced, all lewd and immoral Practices; against these, my Lords, and against Heresies, and Blasphemies (a black Catalogue of which has been display'd before your Lordships) I thought the Anathema's of the Church would be well employed; such Anathema's, I doubt not, my Lords, would be ratify'd in Heaven, and would therefore, by any Power on Earth, be irreversible.

As to Archbishop Grindal, though I may seem to have used some undue Asperity of Expression concerning him, yet I charged him with nothing but what I had good Grounds for, from our Historians: It hath been made appear to your Lordships, that, on the Account of his Remissness in Church-Government, he lived and died under the High Displeasure of Queen Elizabeth; and whether therefore he, or that glorious Queen, shall bear the Blame of his Disgrace and Sufferings, is with all Humility submitted to your Lordships.

I hope, my Lords, I stand clear in your Opinions, of the Charge advanced against me, in the two first Articles; and as my own Conscience acquits, so I trust your Lordships will acquit me, of whatever is laid to my Charge in the Third.

My Lords, I neither have suggested, nor do in my Conscience believe, that the Church is in the least Peril or Adversity from Her Majesty's Administration. So far am I from any such Thoughts, that I am entirely satisfied of Her being a most affectionate Nursing-Mother to it. But I hope I may say without Offence, that the Church may be in Peril from other Causes, without any Reflection upon Her Majesty's Government, or any Contradiction to Her Royal Proclamation, and the Resolution of both Houses of Parliament, four Years ago. If the Church be in Danger, when the Christian Religion is evidently so, I hope it will be thought no Crime to say, it has scarce ever been in greater Danger than it is now, since Christ had a Church upon Earth. For besides that Deluge of Prophaneness and Immorality, which overpreads the whole Kingdom; besides the Variety, and growing Strength of those Schisms which weaken and divide us, and of those Heterodox Opinions, and damnable Heresies, which are daily published and propagated among us; I verily believe, that never were the Ministers of Christ so abused and vilify'd, never was the divine Authority of the Holy Scriptures so arraigned and ridiculed, never were Infidelity and Atheism it self so Impudent and Barefaced, never were such horrid Blasphemies printed in any Christian State, from the Foundation of Christianity to this Day.

Out of the many Instances of this Kind, which, being ready at hand, I could have produced to your Lordships, I have Selected a few only; but those such, as I am persuaded your Lordships could not hear without Horror and Astonishment. Pardon me, my Lords, if my Apprehension of the sad Consequences we may expect from such crying Abominations, have forced from me some Expressions, which upon a less Occasion might seem too harsh and vehement. A Man that dreads no Danger from such unparalleled Iniquities, that do as it were call down God's severest Judgments upon that poor Church and Nation, wherein they are openly and daringly committed, must be dead in his Love for his Country, and Religion. If I have disclosed such a frightful and detestable Scene of Impiety, which by reason of your Lordships high Stations and great Employments, might possibly lie undiscovered to your Sight before; I shall think my self happy, whatever shall befall me, if I may by God's Grace become the mean Instrument, of putting a Stop to that overflowing of Ungodliness and Blasphemy, which as yet no Laws, no Proclamations, how well soever design'd, and how often soever repeated, have been able to restrain.

Nor ought I, my Lords, to forget, tho' it was forgotten by the honourable Managers, another Ground of Danger arising to this Church from the Attempts of Popish Emisaries, by me mentioned, I hope without the least Offence, in my Sermon at St. Paul's; where I say, It were highly to be wished that those excellent Laws, made for the Defence and Security of the Church, were at present put strictly in Execution; for the Roman Catholick Agents, and Missionaries, that swarm about this great City, as 'twere in Defiance and Contempt of them, were never more busy in making Proselytes to their Superstition and Idolatry, and perverting and debauching Her Majesty's Subjects in every Corner of our Streets. I have not, my Lords, been called upon to prove the Truth of this Passage, nor has it been reckoned among the false Insinuations I have made that the Church is in Danger. I pray God, the Church may be in no Danger, upon any of these Accounts! Her Majesty, your Lordships, and the Commons, have indeed provided against these Dangers by wholesome Laws, and I hope, I did not exceed the Limits of my my Function, when, being called to Preach before Magistrates, I exhorted them to prevent these Dangers, by putting those Laws strictly in Execution.

Just had been the Indignation of the Honourable House of Commons, Just would be your Lordships most severe Resentments, if by any Parallel by me drawn, I had insinuated that the Members of both Houses, who passed the Vote concerning the safe and flourishing Condition of the Church, had been then conspiring its Ruin. I have already purged my self from this Imputation, by observing, that the Parallel, ascribed to me, implies, that they who Voted King Charles the First to be out of Danger, and those who Conspired his Death, were the very same Persons, whereas it is certain they were not; for, my Lords, the Vote about the King's Safety was passed by Lords and Commons a Year and half before his execrable Murder, which had been contrived by the Army, and was perpetrated by a pretended Ordinance of a small Remnant of the House of Commons (not a tenth Part of the whole) after the rest of the Members had been Imprisoned or Secluded, and without the Concurrence of the House of Peers, who totally rejected it. You have had, my Lords, a very different Representation of this Fact made by one of the Learned Managers: But this, my Lords, is the real Truth, as recited in the Act of Parliament for the Attainder of the King's Murderers; and is an Evidence, that I could not possibly mean by any odious Parallel to insinuate, that the Members of both Houses, who passed the Vote concerning the Safety of the Church, were then conspiring its Ruin.

I humbly crave your Lordships Patience yet a little farther, whilst I speak to what is alledged in the Fourth Article, which charges me with many Crimes of a very high and flagrant Nature; none of which have been endeavour'd to be prov'd upon me, otherwise than from supposed Suggestions, and undetermined Expressions; and I must still, with your Lordships Leave, humbly insist upon it, that where the Expressions are doubtful, there the favourable Sense is always to be preferred.

After all that has been said by the Learned Managers for the Commons, What Minister of State, I beseech your Lordships, have I been proved to reflect upon, directly or indirectly? Where, and how do I, by any Suggestion, charge Her Majesty, or those in Authority under Her, with a general Male-Administration? How do I persuade Her Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Parties and Factions, while I reprove those who divide us by knavish Distinctions, and while I persuade my Fellow-Subjects to lose and forget them? How is it possible, I should stir up the People to Arms and Violence, when I am endeavouring to convince them of the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever? These Things, my Lords, seem to be Inconsistent, unless a Man may be thought a Rebel for Recommending Loyalty, or Seditious for preaching against Sedition.

I remember, indeed, at the Opening of this Charge against me, that one of the Managers for the House of Commons, vouchsafed to offer his charitable Assistance towards Reconciling this seeming Inconsistency; for he was pleased to suppose that, when I spake against resisting the Sovereign, I had not our gracious Queen, but some other Person in view; and that I might therefore agreeably to my Principles of Non-Resistance, stir up the People to Arms and Violence against Her Sacred Majesty. Your Lordships will once more pardon my Earnestness, if I call God to witness, that I utterly detest any such traitorous Intention; and I should in my own Opinion be unworthy of the Name of a Christian, if I could give my self leave to cast such a black, and groundless Imputation upon any one in like Circumstances with mine, who had given all possible Evidences of his Duty and Affection to the present Government. My Lords, I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance to Her Majesty, and that of Abjuration against the Pretender; and when therefore I preach'd the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, it is most apparent, that the Government, which I persuaded my Fellow-Subjects not to Resist, is the present Government; and I humbly conceive, that the present Government can never be Overtaken, if it be never Resisted.

How true a Zeal and Affection I have always born to her Majesty's Person and Government, I leave to be judged by your Lordships, and the whole World, from those publick Demonstrations which I have given of it, at all Times when I had occasion to make mention of either. I hope your Lordships will pardon me, if I refer to some of my own printed Expressions, as an evident Proof of my unfeigned Duty and Allegiance. "If, to call it the most inestimable Blessing this Nation could enjoy, that Her Majesty, the good and pious Relict of the Royal Family, sits now happily upon the Throne of Her Ancestors; If to pray, that God may long preserve Her for the Comfort and Support of the Church, as the only Security, under God, it has to depend upon; If, earnestly to contend for the Safety, Rights, and Establishment of Her Majesty, together with those of the Church; If, to vindicate Her Majesty's Title to the Crown against the Usurpations, Pretences, and Encroachments of Her Adversaries, and to assert Her Right to the Throne to have been so clear, manifest, and undoubted, that even Her worst Enemies (could such a pious Princess be supposed to have any) must acknowledge it: That She was proclaim'd as 'twere by the Voice of God, in the universal Joy, Satisfaction, and Unanimity of Her Subjects; that Her personal Merit exempted from that, made her worthy of a brighter Diadem than She wears: If, to persuade her Subjects with the most hearty Zeal, and Generosity, to enter into a necessary War, for the Defence of Her Majesty, and the common Preservation of our Church, Liberties, and Constitution, against a powerful Adversary; If, to beseech God to prosper so good an Undertaking, to give an happy Event and Issue to such a Rightful Cause, to crown our Arms with Victory, and to make them as successful, as they are just and honourable; And that, in order to this, we are all bound, both in Duty to God and our Sovereign, as well as by our own Interest, unanimously, and heartily to assist and support her under this great Undertaking, as far as our Prayers, and Estates, Lives, and Fortunes can serve Her; If, to persuade Her Subjects, that the great and threatening Dangers of our Enemies, should have that just Effect upon us, to unite us, as much in our Resolutions and Affections, as they do in our common Interests, Apprehensions, and Troubles; If, to set out the Blessings we enjoy in the wise Constitution of our Government and Laws, in the most refin'd Policies of our Parliament and Ministry, in the Strength and Number of our Armies, Fleets, and Confederates, in the Care and watchful Vigilance, the Courage, Resolution and Conduct of our General, and above all in the Piety and Prudence dence of our most gracious QUEEN; If, to affirm that She daily gives fresh Instances of Her Wisdom, in the happy Administration of Her Government, and in nothing more shews Her Policy, and distinguishing Judgment, than in making Choice of such Ministers of State, who are acceptable to their Country, and express such a Zeal and Steadiness in its Service and true Interests, and whom nothing could bribe, or betray into a Party, wherein it might any ways seem to be endanger'd; If, with the most ardent Requests to implore God's Providence, which through so many Dangers and Difficulties has rais'd up, and preserv'd Her Majesty, to carry on these glorious Undertakings with Success, that She may be able to Restore and Settle the Peace of Europe, in its just Rights and Limitations; and that, as God has bestow'd a Crown upon Her in this World, as the Reward of these heroick and pious Designs, so, after a long Reign here, he would advance Her to an higher Throne in Heaven, and dignify Her with a glorious and immortal Crown hereafter;" If this, my Lords, I say, is falsely and maliciously to Suggest, that Her Majesty's Administration both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution; If this be charging Her Majesty, and those in Authority under Her, both in Church and State, with a general Male-Administration; If this be, as an Incendiary, to persuade Her Subjects to keep up Distinctions of Factions and Parties; If this be Instilling groundless Jealousies, fomenting destructive Divisions, and stirring up Her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence, against any but Her Enemies; then, my Lords, I am Guilty of this Article of Impeachment; otherwise I am innocent.

My Lords, I have always thought it my Duty, upon all publick Occasions, to assert these Principles of Loyalty and Subjection to the Supreme Power, whenever I had a proper Call so to do; of this there are numberless Witnesses in those several Places to which I have belong'd. One of these I beg leave of your Lordships particularly to mention, Magdalen College in Oxford, whereof I am at present an unworthy Member; and which by the known Sufferings of the whole Body for the Church and Constitution, contributed as much towards the late happy Revolution as any Society in the Kingdom: To which Honourable Society I humbly appeal for my Character and Behaviour. I could also appeal for the same to a Right Reverend Lord, that now sits on the Bench of Bishops.

Had it been fit to have troubled your Lordships with Evidences of my hearty Affection to the present Government, I could have produced them in great Abundance, from the Persons with whom I have convers'd, from the Gentlemen whom I have bred up, and from the Congregations to which I have preach'd. If my Principles had any Tendency towards Alienating the Affections of Her Majesty's Subjects, surely some one Instance of my Disloyalty to the QUEEN, some favourable Expressions toward the Pretender, some Indications of my Dislike to the present Settlement, and the Protestant Succession, might have been pitch'd upon, and expos'd to your Lordships, in order to justify the Charge of Sedition against me. But I cannot but with Pleasure observe to your Lordships, that from the whole Course of my Actions, no one Instance of that kind is ali'dg'd, or so much as pretended.

My Lords, The Charge of wickedly wresting divers Texts of Scripture lies very heavy upon me, as a Christian, and Minister of Christ. If I am Guilty of it, there is another Tribunal, another Bar at which I am to appear, and where by that Scripture, which I have wrested, I shall be judg'd and Condemn'd. In the mean time, my Lords, I hope that those, whose particular Profession, and Studies qualify them to be the most competent Judges of such Matters, will absolve me in this Particular.

Upon the whole, therefore, my Lords, I hope it appears that I am not guilty of any of the Crimes of which I am accus'd; that I have Transgress'd no Law of the Land, neither Statute, nor Common Law, relating either to Her Majesty, or to my Fellow Subjects, or to the Church, or to the State: And that I may with all Humility apply to my own Case, the Words of that blessed Apostle, whose Doctrine I defend, and whose Example I hope I shall have the Grace to follow, Neither against the Law, nor against the Temple, nor against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all.

What I have hitherto humbly offered to your Lordships relates to my Words and Actions; and as to the Thoughts and Intentions of my Heart, which are known only to God, and my own Conscience, and which are affirm'd in my Impeachment to be wicked, seditious and malicious; I call the Searcher of Hearts to witness in the most solemn, and religious Manner, as I expect to be acquitted before God, and his Holy Angels, at that Dreadful Tribunal, before which not only I, but all the World, even your Lordships, who now sit in Judgment upon me, must appear, to be Acquitted or Condemn'd; that I had no such wicked, seditious, or malicious Intentions; that there is nothing upon Earth, I more detest and abhor: That my Designs were, in every respect, directly contrary. I had no Intention to asperse the Memory of His late Majesty, to traduce, or condemn the late Happy Revolution, or to arraign the Resolutions of both Houses of Parliament. So far was I from designing to undermine and subvert Her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession as by Law Establish'd, that it was my sincere Intention to exert my best Endeavours for their Security. So far was I from intending, to persuade her Majesty's Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Parties and Factions, from instilling groundless Jealousies, fomenting destructive Divisions among them, or exciting and stirring them up to Arms and Violence, that my Aim was to persuade them to lay aside all Distinctions, to unite in one, well-compacted Body, to be Obedient to their Governors, and to support the present Establishment. So far was I from designing to defame Her Majesty's Administration, or to infuse any undutiful Thoughts of Her, that I not only pay Her all Honour and Obedience, but am from the bottom of my Soul zealously, and affectionately Loyal to Her; being entirely persuaded, that the Church is so far from being in Danger from Her, that She is as heartily affected to its Establishment, and Prosperity, as I hope I have always shew'd my self to be to Her Sacred Person, and Government.

As to the Protestant Succession by Law Establish'd, tho' the Doctrine which I preach'd tends to the Security of it, (as I heartily desire every thing by me spoken should tend) yet having no Occasion in either of my Sermons to take Notice of it, I do no where in those Sermons mention it, nor say any thing that can be Interpreted to have any View towards it. Therefore tho' I cannot with my best Application apprehend, how it comes to be said in the Preamble to my Impeachment, that I had designed to undermine and subvert it, yet I shall gladly take this Opportunity, of declaring my self before your Lordships upon that Subject. It is my sincere and hearty Prayer, that God would prolong the Life of Her Most Sacred Majesty, whose Exemplary Goodness and Piety, give us the best Hopes we have of averting that Vengeance, which is due to the Wickedness of the Age we live in; that He would bless Her Councils at Home, and Her Arms Abroad, and make Her Reign exceed that of Her Renowned Predecessor Queen Elizabeth, in Length, as well as Glory. But when the Inheritrix of the Blessed Martyr's Crown, and Piety, when She, the Desire of our Eyes, and the Breath of our Nostrials, shall full of Years, and Honour, be Gathered to Her Fathers, and exchange Her Temporal for an Immortal Crown; (since we are deprived of that Prince, Her Royal Offspring, whose Loss no true Lover of his Country, and of the Royal Family can reflect upon without a Bleeding Heart, and whom God in his Anger took from us, because we were unworthy of so inestimable a Blessing,) I earnestly beseech God, in defect of Future Issue from Her Majesty, to Perpetuate the Succession of the Crown, as it is Established in the most illustrious House of Hanover, which I look upon as, next to his Providence, the best Guard we have against Popery and Arbitrary Power, the best Security of our Church, and of the Constitution of our Government, which is the Glory and Happiness of our own Nation, and the Envy of all others. And I cannot yet apprehend, how the Doctrine, which I have taught, tends to weaken or undermine it; nor on the other side, how the Doctrine of Resistance, which brought Her Majesty's Royal Grand-Father to the Block, (supposing it a true Doctrine) comes to be mentioned, or thought of, much less to be industriously maintained, as a necessary and indispensable Duty, under the most mild and gracious Administration of the best of Queens. Nothing seems more strange than that Resistance should be so carefully taught under such a Government, unless it be that Non-Resistance should overturn it.

So far was I therefore from having any of those wicked, malicious, or seditious Designs, which are laid to my Charge, that my Intentions were, on the contrary, to instil the Principles of Loyalty and Obedience into my Fellow-Subjects, and withal to put a stop to that Torrent of Lewdness, Irreligion and Atheism, of which I have given your Lordships so many flagrant Testimonies.

Those outrageous Insults upon God, and Goodness, are so Provoking, that they may excuse some Heat, and Severity of Expression in a Minister of Christ, who has a just Sense of Religion, a due Concern for the Discharge of his Holy Function, or for the Honour of his Maker and Redeemer. And if any Objection be made against me, for Treating with an Unbecoming Bitterness such Daring Rascals, who defy the Living God; I beg leave to Reply in the Words of a Reverend Father of our Church, Let them consider what Moderation and Temper, a Man had need be of, that in this Nation, and this Age, shall speak against Faction, Rebellion (I add Deism, Tritheism, and all sorts of Heresy, Blasphemy, and Atheism) without extraordinary Severity. Nay, it is our Duty in such Cases, to express our selves with Warmth and Sharpness, according to the Example of our Blessed Saviour; who, tho' Meekness it self, could not but shew the utmost Indignation at the Prophaning the House of God. This is not, my Lords, to rail, but to rebuke; and those, who ridicule, or censure us for it, either have not, I presume, or will not own they have, a right Notion of the Dignity of our Office; will not consider, that we are the Ambassadors of Christ, that we are commanded, in his Name, to exhort, and rebuke with all Authority; and that our Authority is derived from those to whom it was said by our Blessed Saviour, He that despiseth you, despiseth me, and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me: Whatever Expressions therefore in my Sermons may have slipped from me, which seem so far liable to Exception, as to carry a Sense I never intended (as he must be an Happy Speaker indeed, whose Words are altogether unexceptionable) yet I humbly hope, the above-mentioned Provocations will plead my Excuse, or that, at the very worst, some hasty, or even violent Expressions, shall not be deemed High Crimes and Misdemeanors. I desire it may be farther considered by your Lordships, that I could have no Temporal Interests to serve by the Doctrines I advanced; and therefore could have no Design in view, but to discharge my Duty to God, as a Minister of Christ, and to my Sovereign, as a Faithful, and Loyal Subject.

My Lords, These Things being humbly offered to the Consideration of your Lordships, I hope, that what I have already suffered, as a supposed Criminal, will be thought sufficient Punishment for one, who has offended against no Law yet in Being. It must be thought no little Grief and Vexation to any ingenuous Man, to be brought to this Bar, under the least Suspicion of such Crimes as are laid to my Charge; but for a Person of my Function to have an Accusation of this Nature alledged against him, so heinously reflecting upon his Holy Character, is such a foul Blot, as though his Innocence should at last be cleared by your Lordships, upon the most undeniable Evidence, must leave a Scar upon his good Name; which is to all Men dear, but much more so to those, whose whole Capacity of doing good in the World principally depends upon it.

My Lords, As the Matter of my Charge was highly criminal, so the Form and Manner of it ran in such general, and uncertain Terms, that 'twas impossible to know the Grounds of my Accusation; or how to defend my self, when I knew not where I should be attack'd. So that after I had provided as particular an Answer as such a general Accusation would admit of, the Commons were pleased in their Replication to say, that there were several Things in it Foreign to the Charge. To the great Misfortune of falling under the Displeasure of that Honourable House, I might add, That of a long and close Confinement, and of an Expence no ways proportion'd to my Circumstances. These, my Lords, are Afflictions which can be conceiv'd by no Body so well as by him, who has been so unhappy as to feel the Weight of them. And among these I reckon it not the least of my Sufferings, that I have been for so long a time debarr'd, from taking heed to that Flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made me an Overseer. For even since I have had my Liberty, by the Favour of your Lordships admitting me to Bail, I have purposely avoided doing any Part of the Duty of my Function, or even appearing in Publick, lest it should occasion any Tumult or Disturbance; as my necessary Attendance on your Lordships from time to time, has since been thought unhappily to have done, without any Fault of mine, or the least degree of Encouragement given by me, which I profess, in the Presence of God, to abhor.

All these Circumstances, my Lords, being consider'd, together, with the Publick Manner, the Length and Solemnity of my Trial, before so August a Court of Judicature, by which Means I am made a Gazing-stock, both by Reproaches, and Afflictions, and a Spectacle to the whole World; I have stood in this Place Day after Day, to hear my self Accus'd of the blackest Crimes, and openly revil'd; I have been represented as a Papist in Disguise, as a Rebel, as an Enemy to Her Majesty's Person and Government, and a Favourer of the Pretender, tho' I have abjur'd him, (but not forgot him, as a Learned Person was pleas'd to say) that is, as the worst of Perjur'd Villains: I have been call'd an insignificant Tool of a Party on the one Hand, and a most dangerous Incendiary on the other; nay, an Angel, that is a Devil, detach'd from the Infernal Regions: All these things, I say, being consider'd, (and your Lordships I am sure, in tender Compassion to me, will consider them,) it is most certain, that, whatever be your Lordships Determination concerning me, I cannot escape without being a very great Sufferer, and I shall have been abundantly punish'd, tho' I should have the Happiness to be by your Lordships at last Acquitted.

Yet I cannot Reflect without Comfort, (the greatest of Comforts next to that of a good Cause, and a good Conscience) that I Answer for my self this Day before the most Illustrious Assembly in the World, the whole Body of the Nobility of Great Britain; whose Princely Extraction, and High Quality, whose Magnificent Titles, and Splendid Fortunes, whose Hereditary Candor and Generosity, inherent in Noble Blood, inseparable from the Birth and Education of Peers; in a word, whose Solid Judgment, and exact Skill in the Laws of this Realm, so eminently Qualify them for the final Determination of Justice; who are neither to be sway'd by Hopes, over-ruled by Fears, nor misled by any False Prejudice or Passion. If it must be a Man's Misfortune to labour under such hard Circumstances as mine, it is no small Mitigation of them, that he Pleads his Cause before such Judges, who, he knows, will Decide it with the strictest Impartiality, Equity, and Honour.

And, when I consider that I now stand, and am Judg'd for some of the Doctrines of that Gospel, which God deliver'd unto our Fathers, and you, my Lords the Bishops, their Successors, have receiv'd from Christ and his Apostles, as the sacred Depositum of the Church, to be maintain'd inviolably in its Primitive Simplicity; when I consider, what is the Cause for which I am this Day call'd in Question; that it is One of those Eternal Truths, which you are so Solemnly commission'd to Teach, and earnestly Contend for; when I consider, that 'tis what our Blessed Lord and his Apostles seal'd with their precious Blood, and so many Primitive Martyrs maintain'd even in the midst of Flames, so many Learned Bishops, and Confessors recommended to Posterity in their immortal Writings, as the distinguishing Badge, and Glory of our Reformation; nay, when I consider, that 'tis what you your selves have already supported with incontestable Reason, and Authority; it is no small Satisfaction to me to think, that as your Lordships are my Judges, so, I hope in God, you must be my Advocates. What a Guilt, as well as Disgrace, would it justly devolve upon the Clergy, to recede from any Principle of our excellent Church, especially from what has been so long retain'd, and boasted of, as its peculiar Character! By abandoning which we must relapse into some of the worst Doctrines, even of Popery it self, and render our selves the most contemptible, as well as inconsistent Church in the World! I think, I may therefore with Confidence use the Words of the Great Apostle to his Accusers; Having obtain'd Help from God, I continue unto this Day, witnessing both to small and great; saying none other Things than those which the Prophets and Moses (I may add, Christ and his Apostles,) did say.

For, my Lords, if I have committed any Faults or Errors in Expression, yet as I insist upon my Innocence with respect to all the High Crimes laid to my Charge, so I must still insist upon all the Doctrines which I have taught, as being agreeable to the Word of God, and to the Doctrine of our most excellent and truly Apostolical Church, and which we of the Clergy are oblig'd both by Subscription, and Oath to acknowledge, and defend. And how hard are our Circumstances, if we must be punish'd in this World for doing that, which if we do not, we shall be more heavily punish'd in the next! What a Condition are we in, if we are commanded to cry aloud and spare not, to exhort, rebuke, in Season and out of Season, on the one Hand, and prosecuted, imprison'd, ruin'd on the other! If this be our Case, who indeed is sufficient for these Things? And truly how may we of the Ministry above all Men living, apply to our selves those Words of the Apostle, If in this Life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all Men most miserable: But our Comfort is, that our Hope in Christ is not only in this Life. Justly might we be reproach'd, and deserve some of those Reflections, which in these Licentious Times are so plentifully pour'd upon us, were we not ready to Practise the Doctrines we preach, of Self-Denial, taking up our Cross, and patient Submission to Sufferings and Afflictions! For my own Part, it matters not what becomes of me, nor is my Deliverance, or Ruin, of any Moment to the World; or, if it be, I am not only ready to be bound, but to die, could I by that do Service to my Queen, my Church, or my Country; neither count I my Life dear, so that I might finish my Course with Joy, and the Ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus. But may God so direct your Lordships, that through me a Wound may not be given to the Doctrines of the Scriptures, and of the Church, which Christ hath purchas'd with his own Blood.

And so, with all Humility and Resignation, I submit my self to your Lordships Judgment; be it what it will: One Thing I am sure it can never take from me, the Power of Wishing and Praying, and (whether in Prosperity or Adversity, whether I am Acquitted, or Condemn'd) I shall always pray for the Queen my Sovereign, for your Lordships my Judges, and for the Commons my Accusers; most earnestly beseeching Almighty God, to deliver all Orders, and Degrees of Men amongst us, from all false Doctrine, Heresy, and Schism, from Hardness of Heart, from Contempt of his Word, and Commandment; from Envy, Hatred, and Malice, and all Uncharitableness.

Then the LORDS adjourned to their House Above.

Thursday, March 9. The Ninth Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Our

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly Charge and Command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

The Doctor appearing at the Bar accordingly, with his Council, as before:

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, you that are Managers for the House of Commons may proceed to your Reply.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. MY Lords, Doctor Sacheverell and his Council having concluded what they had to offer to your Lordships, I shall enter upon the Province assign'd to me, in further Execution of the Commands of the House of Commons, which is, to Reply to the Defence made for the Doctor to the first Article of the Commons Charge.

My Lords, I shall take Notice, first, of the Concessions made by the Doctor's Council; secondly, of the Exposition they have put upon those Passages of the Sermon, which have been relied on by the Commons to maintain this Article; and, thirdly, of the Acts of Parliament, the Homilies, the Books, the Sermons, the Pamphlets and the Gazettes, which the Doctor's Council have call'd for to be read to your Lordships.

And if I shall satisfy your Lordships, that the Concessions made by the Doctor's Council are a Departure from the Defence made for him in his Answer, that they are extorted by Necessity, and are likely to be retracted when this Turn is serv'd; if I shall shew your Lordships, that their Exposition of the Passages in the Sermon, is contrary to the plain Meaning of those Passages; if I shall shew, that the Acts of Parliament, the Homilies, and the other Prints that have been produc'd, are either immaterial, or condemn the Doctrine laid down in the Sermon; and if I shall shew, that this Criminal, for so I must call him, since the House of Commons have call'd him so; (whether he will be so in the Event, I agree, rests only in your Lordships Judgment); if, I say, I shall shew he is guilty of a most heinous Offence, I shall not doubt of your Lordships Justice.

My Lords, The Concessions are these, That Necessity creates an Exception to the General Rule of Submission to the Prince: That such Exception is understood or implied in the Laws that require such Submission: And that the Case of the Revolution was a Case of Necessity.

These are Concessions so ample, and do so fully answer the Drift of the Commons in this Article, and are to the utmost Extent of their Meaning in it, that I can't forbear congratulating them upon this Success of their Impeachment; That in full Parliament this erroneous Doctrine of unlimited Non-Resistance is given up and disclaim'd. And may it not, in After-Ages, be an Addition to the Glories of this bright Reign, that so many of those who are honour'd with being in Her Majesty's Service, have been, at your Lordships Bar, thus successfully contending for the National Rights of Her People, and proving they are not precarious or remediless.

But to return to these Concessions; I must appeal to your Lordships, whether they are not a total Departure from the Doctor's Answer; whether there is one Word in the Answer which looks that Way.

In his Answer he takes Notice, that the general Assertion in his Sermon, of the utter Illegality of Resistance, is a colourable Pretence for the Article; but does he add the Restriction or Limitation to it, which hath been now thought necessary, and hath been insisted upon as most material for his Defence? No, my Lords, but the quite contrary; for these are the Words of his Answer, The said Henry Sacheverell doth with all Humility aver the Illegality of Resistance, on any Pretence whatsoever, to be the true Doctrine of the Church of England. Now, could any thing have been more material for him in his Answer, than adding these Restrictions to his general Assertion in his Sermon, which his Council now say he intended, tho' he did not express? Or if that was his Intention, could he possibly have forgot it, when the Frame of his Answer was under Consideration?

But now he sees the Resolution of the Commons, and the Endeavours of those who have their Commands to carry on this Prosecution, to bring him to Punishment; now he sees your Lordships daily Attendance upon this Trial, and your Attention to the Charge against him; now he sees, if he had abided by his Answer, he must have been condemn'd, or the Revolution; these are the Motives which have prevail'd upon him to tolerate his Council to make these unwilling Concessions, and have extorted them from him.

And how little these Concessions ought to avail him, your Lordships will see, when you consider how likely it is he will retract them when this Turn is serv'd. May we not then expect he will use this very Argument of Necessity, the Coercion or Restraint he is under by this Prosecution, as an Excuse for these Concessions? And when your Lordships are told, that it is the Duty of Divines (whose Office it is to explain the Scripture to the People) to inculcate this Doctrine of Non-Resistance in the most unconfined and unlimited Terms they are able, and mentally reserve the Exception to themselves; when Authorities have been produced for asserting this Doctrine in such a manner as to exclude any Exception whatsoever, and the Doctor himself did not expressly come into these Concessions, it is certain they ought not to be of any Avail to him.

Your Lordships will therefore give me Leave to consider the Exposition which hath been put on those Passages, which the Commons relied on for Proof of their First Article: And I shall shew that Exposition to be contrary to the plain Meaning of those Passages.

My Lords, I readily agree, that no strain'd Innuendo's, or suppos'd and forc'd Constructions (which are the Words used in the Reason given for reversing the Judgment in Sir Samuel Barnardiston's Case) ought to be admitted, to explain the Meaning of the Doctor, in order to prove him Criminal. I think the Principles laid down upon the Reversal of that Judgment are solid and just; and therefore nothing but express Words, or a necessary Implication collected from a Man's Words, can make him an Offender. But I would not have it gone away with, that there must be express Words of Scandal to make a Man Criminal; indirect or oblique Scandal has in all Times been met with and punish'd in the ordinary Courts of Justice; and if it were otherwise, that which aggravates the Crime (the Subtlety or Contrivance of it) would prevent the Punishment: And therefore it is, that Ironical Scandal, Scandal, nay, even dumb Scandal (Scandal by Pictures, or by Signs) as is mention'd in the Case de Libellis Famosis, in my Lord Chief Justice Coke's Fifth Report, is punishable by Law. The only Caution necessary in these Cases is, that the Construction or Interpretation be not strain'd or forc'd. And, my Lords, in this Case we have not only a seditious Meaning plainly collected from the Doctor's Words, but express Criminal Words, a false Suggestion, that his late Majesty, in his Declaration, disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance, introduc'd for a malicious and seditious Purpose.

My Lords, The First Article has been rightly divided into three Parts. The Doctor is charg'd with suggesting and maintaining, First, That the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable. Secondly, That his late Majesty in his Declaration disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance: And, Thirdly, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the Revolution.

The two last Branches, my Lords, are Particulars. The first is the General; and if the two last are proved, such Proof makes out the first: But I shall consider the Answer given by the Doctor's Council to the Proof of the two last Branches in their Order, and proceed to consider the Answer that has been given to the proper Proofs of the first.

My Lords, The first Proof of this Branch was the general Assertion of the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever. It hath been said in Answer to this, that this is spoken of the Supreme Power, which is the Legislative Power, and then there ought to be no Exception whatsoever.

But, my Lords, that the Doctor did not mean the Supreme Legislative Power, but the Supreme Executive Power, is evident,

First, From the Account he presently gives of those that oppose his Principle of Non-Resistance, which runs all along upon the Person of the Prince only, as cancelling their Allegiance, calling their Sovereign to an Account, Dethroning and Murdering him.

Secondly and Principally, From his bringing in the Case of the Revolution, as urg'd by those who are Adversaries to his Principle of Non-Resistance. Now the Revolution is not, cannot be urg'd as an Instance of the Lawfulness of any thing, but of resisting the Supreme Executive Power acting in Opposition to the Laws; and this the Doctor himself admitted, when he told your Lordships that the Supreme Power was not then resisted. This is therefore the Supreme Power he affirms it is utterly unlawful to resist.

But it was said by one of the Doctor's Council, That the Non-Resistance the Doctor preaches up, is the utter Illegality of Resisting the Supreme Power in all Things Lawful, for those Words, in all Things Lawful, make part of that Sentence. My Lords, I admit they do; but those Words are relative to his Assertion concerning Active Obedience, and not Passive, as will appear by reading the whole Sentence. The grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar upon which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an absolute and unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all things Lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever. The one dividing Member of the Sentence is, the Obligation to Obedience in all Things Lawful; the other, the Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever; the one is restrain'd, the other unlimited. It must be taken therefore (notwithstanding these Objections) That the Doctor asserts the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Executive Power, though acting not in Conformity, but in Contradiction to the Laws.

My Lords, I go on to the second Proof of the first Branch of this Article, which is, the Doctor's Insinuation that the Parliament disown'd the Resistance at the Revolution, by declaring that they set the Crown on the King's Head on no other Title than of the Vacancy of the Throne. One of the Council thought fit to stand to this Fact, because the Vacancy of the Throne is mention'd in the Bill of Rights; and he says, there is no other Fact there stated. I beseech your Lordships, Does not the same Act take Notice of the Male-Administration of K. James, and his Abdicating the Government, as the Means by which the Throne became void? And I may appeal to your Lordships Journal, and the Journal of the House of Commons, whether the Word Abdicated was not used rather than the Word Deserted (after a Conference between the Two Houses) for this Reason, insisted on by the Commons, that that Word Abdicate included in it Male-Administration, which the Word Desert did not.

The same Council said, the Act for preventing Vexatious Suits, urg'd by the Commons as a Parliamentary Declaration, justifying the Resistance at the Revolution, was only for Indemnifying those that acted at that Time, and was no more than was done in the Reign of Edward the Third, after Edward the Second was Dethroned. This surely is no manner of Answer to the Declaratory Part of that Law, which takes Notice of the King's undertaking a glorious Enterprize, for delivering the Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power; and that divers Subjects, in Aid and Pursuance of that Enterprize, did several Acts of Violence and Resistance; and this Law declares such Acts were necessary, and ought to be justify'd. And I can't but observe this by the way, that the Parliament and the Doctor are of different Opinions; the Parliament thought that Resistance ought to be justify'd; the Doctor thinks not; and if so, then Doctor Sacheverell doth suggest and maintain, that the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution were odious and unjustifiable.

I come now, my Lords, to the second Branch of the First Article, the Doctor's Assertion, That his late Majesty in his Declaration disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; and the Doctor's Answer to it.

My Lords, His Council admit this Assertion is in the Sermon, and that this Assertion is not true; but they say it was a Mistake only in the Doctor, that the Doctor has express'd himself somewhat obscurely, and now he has explain'd himself, that Explanation ought to be receiv'd. The Doctor meant, they say, Conquest; and so he had explain'd himself not only in the Marginal Note, but in the Sermon it self. My Lords, if this were so, I admit it would be a good Defence; but that this was not a Mistake, or rather was a wilful one in the Doctor, and that he thereby design'd to Traduce the Memory of his late Majesty and the Revolution, I shall shew from what his own Council insist on.

They

They say the Doctor must mean Conquest, because the Prince of Orange, who was no Subject, but a Sovereign Prince, could not be said to resist according to the common understanding of that Word. Now, my Lords, it is true, the Prince of Orange could not be said to resist, and so could not disclaim Resistance for himself; but could he not be join'd and assisted by the Subjects of the Realm, who might be said to resist, and were invited by him so to do? Doth not this appear by the whole Tenor of his Declaration, and even by the Passages quoted by the Doctor? And since his late Majesty could not be said to resist, but the Subjects, who, upon his Invitation, join'd with him, could; and the Resistance of Subjects is what the Doctor is speaking against; it is plain, that the Doctor speaks of the King's disclaiming the Resistance of those who join'd with him, and not his own Resistance. And therefore I cannot see that the Quotation of the Passage out of the Prince's Declaration, at the bottom of that Page, doth make out that he meant Conquest, by Resistance in his Sermon; or if it did, Would it excuse the Doctor's Preaching this Part of his Sermon, which was done without referring to that Passage?

But it is said, he has explain'd that he meant Conquest by Resistance in the Body of the Sermon, because he says the Parliament burnt a Libel that would have pleaded the Title of Conquest, by which Resistance was supposed. But that this Passage doth not make out that he meant Conquest by Resistance, is evident, from his making Resistance not to be Conquest, but only an Ingredient in it. And by representing Resistance and Conquest to be the same thing with the Doctor, he is made to say, that the Parliament burnt a Libel that would have pleaded the Title of Conquest, by which Conquest is supposed.

It is plain therefore that Doctor Sacheverell hath asserted, that his late Majesty in his Declaration disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; and disclaim'd it at a Time, if you'll believe the Doctor, when he was exhorting the Subjects of King James to resist, and was joining with them, and encouraging them in it; than which it is impossible there can be a greater Reflection on his late Majesty, or the glorious Cause he then had in hand.

My Lords, I come now to consider the Proof of the Third Branch of the first Article, and the Answer that has been given to it. The Third Branch is this, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution: The Proof is, that Part of the Sermon wherein the Doctor asserts, That the Adversaries to the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, who urge the Revolution in their Defence, are the greatest Enemies to that and his late Majesty, and the most ungrateful for the Deliverance, in endeavouring to cast such black and odious Colours upon both: How often must they be told, &c. The Answer to this is, That the Persons the Doctor describes, as casting black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the Revolution, are not those who impute Resistance to the Revolution, of whom he affirms nothing, but those new Preachers and new Politicians, who teach Antimonarchical and wicked Doctrines, and who urge the Revolution in Defence of 'em.

My Lords, if the Doctor had meant these Persons, he would have shewn them, which he certainly might have done, that what was acted at the Revolution, did not in the least justify their Opinions; but he declining this, and placing the Defence of the Revolution on a false Fact, known to be so to himself and to the whole Nation; and this, taken together with his introducing these Men as defending their Principles by the Revolution, leaves the Load of these detestable Opinions on the Revolution, and not only condemns the Resistance at the Revolution, but brands it.

But it is said, my Lords, that the Clause, Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, &c. relates to the Defence of these Antimonarchical Principles, and not to the general Proposition of the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever; and if so, I agree there is no Foundation for this Branch of the Article; and whether he is guilty of this Branch or not, turns entirely on this Question.

My Lords, I little thought such a Construction would have been endeavour'd, by a wrong Recital of this Clause in the Sermon, by the Doctor in his Answer; for there it is said, as from the Words of the Sermon, That they, that is, says the Doctor, these new Preachers and new Politicians, urge the Revolution in defence of such Principles; when your Lordships see the Words of the Sermon are, Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence. This therefore brings the Case of the Revolution urged by these Adversaries, to the Point or Proposition he had before laid down, which was the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever; and not to the Defence of divers Antimonarchical Principles, taught by the new Preachers and new Politicians. And this is still plainer, if your Lordships consider that the Doctor's Reply to these Adversaries, by denying there was any Resistance at the Revolution, can only relate to the Point of Non-Resistance he had before asserted; and which Resistance, if it were not denied, must stand condemn'd by the Doctor's Proposition.

As little, my Lords, did I expect to hear from one of the Doctor's Council, that there are twenty or thirty Lines between the General Proposition and this Clause; since if there be a Connection between this Clause and that Proposition (which I have already shewn there is) it is not the Intervention of so many Lines will hinder it; and if there had been no Connection, their being close together would not have made one. And by this manifest Connection, the Doctor hath brought this general Position, of the Unlawfulness of all Resistance, to bear upon the Revolution. Which I hope may serve for an Answer to the same Gentleman, who says, It is one thing to lay down the General Rule without making the Exception, and another thing not to make the particular Exception out of that Rule; for the Doctor has mentioned the Revolution, but not in order to except it, but to include it.

Indeed, my Lords, the Learned Doctor, who is of his Council, pretends to have found out the Exception in the Sermon, Page the 10th, because he finds the Word Necessity there: The Words are these, Only this Maxim in general I presume may be establish'd for the Safety, Tranquillity and Support of all Governments; that no Innovation whatsoever should be allowed in the Fundamental Constitution of any State, without a very pressing, nay, unavoidable Necessity of it. But if the Doctor had but read to the End of the Sentence, he would have found Doctor Sacheverell condemns all that bore a Part in the Revolution, before a Law was made about it: The Words that follow are these, And whosoever singly, or in a private Capacity should attempt it, is guilty of the highest Misdemeanor, and is an Enemy to that Politick Body of which he is a Member. And if that Sentence respects the Revolution, then Doctor Sacheverell condemns all from the highest to the lowest, who, in their private Capacity, joined with the Prince of Orange, or assisted in bringing about the Revolution. This is the Thing he is now charged with; not condemning the Revolution as a Thing settled by Law, but the Necessary Means used to bring it about. But if the Doctor instructed his Council to insinuate, that there was any Innovation in the Constitution wrought by the Revolution, it is an Addition to his Crime. The Revolution did not introduce any Innovation; it was a Restoration of the ancient Fundamental Constitution of the Kingdom, and giving it its proper Force and Energy.

Indeed, all the other Council differ'd from that Learned Civilian, and maintain'd, that Doctor Sacheverell did not, nay, ought not, to make any Exception; and one of 'em said, if Clergymen, instead of preaching up the general Rule of Obedience, were permitted to state the several excepted Cases, such Exceptions would in time devour all Allegiance. My Lords, If the Doctor had pretended to have stated the particular Bounds and Limits of Non-Resistance, and told the People in what Cases they might, or might not resist, he would have been much to blame; nor was one Word said in the Articles, or by the Managers, as if that was expected from him: but on the contrary, we have insisted, that in no Case can Resistance be lawful, but in Case of extreme Necessity, and where the Constitution can't otherwise be preserv'd, and such Necessity ought to be plain and obvious to the Sense and Judgment of the whole Nation; and this was the Case at the Revolution. And there is no Difference between a Divine's mooted and putting Cases of lawful Resistance, and excepting the Resistance at the Revolution out of the general Rule of the Illegality of Resistance, on a Day, when he was oblig'd not only to commemorate the Revolution, but the Resistance, the necessary Means used to bring it about, as appears by the Service appointed for that Day?

And, my Lords, Is a House of Commons, who are vindicating that Revolution only, to be represented as if we were calling upon Divines to state the Cases wherein Resistance is lawful, and wherein not? A Task unfit for any one, and more especially for them to meddle with: And are we, by such Suggestions as these, to be defam'd and insulted, and represented as promoting Anarchy and Confusion?

My Lords, There can be no Order or Regularity, if the Constitution, the beautiful Frame of a Legal Monarchy, which this Nation hath so long enjoy'd and prosper'd withal, be destroy'd or given up. What Inclination has the present Age shewn to submit to Arbitrary Power; or rather, what hath been wanting in it to shew the contrary?

But I go on, my Lords, to consider an Argument made use of by another of the Doctor's Council, That it was needless for him to except the Case of the Revolution, for that was known to every body, and had often been approv'd by the Legislature. I beseech your Lordships, Could the Doctor know this, and not only not except that Case, on a Day appointed to give solemn Thanks for it, but introduce it for no purpose but to leave it under the Condemnation of the General Rule of Non-Resistance?

And by this Method the Doctor has brought his General Rule to bear upon the particular Case of the Revolution. For he takes but one way of acquitting the Revolution, which is by laying down that for Truth, which every Man knows to be false; and they that assert this Truth, he says, cast black and odious Colours on the late King and the Revolution: Which makes out that Dr. Sacheverell doth suggest and maintain, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours on his late Majesty and the Revolution.

I am sensible how tedious I must have been in this nice tracing the Answers given by the Doctor's Council to our Proofs of this first Article; but because the Judgment of the Case will depend very much upon it, I am sure I shall have your Lordships Pardon.

And now, my Lords, What a Representation is here of that Glorious Transaction, the late happy Revolution! The Part the Subject had in it, is represented as contradicting the express Command of God in Scripture, and destructive of all Governments: his late Majesty is represented as encouraging this pernicious Wickedness, and disowning it at the same time: Give me Leave therefore, on behalf of the Nation, and the Memory of his late Majesty, its Deliverer, to state this Affair shortly, and in another Light to your Lordships.

The Subjects resisted, the late King join'd his Army with the Arms of Resistance; and if the Nation at that time had not had Recourse to that Remedy, how abject and how miserable must they have been! If we look into the Histories of other Countries, Have not the best and happiest Nations been most tenacious of their Liberties? And while they have continu'd so, and withstood Absolute Power, they have been prosperous at home, and considerable abroad: But when they have fallen from this Zeal, and Industry, which is the Foundation of their Prosperity at home, and Magnanimity, which makes them considerable abroad, have deserted them, they have sunk into Sloth and Effeminacy. Can any one therefore, with any Colour, say, That Resistance, in Cases of extreme Necessity, has worse Consequences than unlimited Subjection?

Let us now turn our Eyes a little on the Part our late King had in the Revolution. Did he not undertake a most hazardous Enterprize, to procure us Happiness at home, and to give us that Weight abroad, which this Nation had long enjoy'd, but at that Time was deprived of? And with what Care and Anxiety, even to the last Moment of his Life, did he labour to secure these Blessings to us!

Let us look beyond his Time, and since, for the Sense of the Nation upon this Point. What Satisfaction did the Nation take, in the Assistance his renowned Predecessor (Queen Elizabeth) gave to the oppressed Provinces, our then Good Neighbours, and our now Potent Allies? How zealously did the Nation promote the Assistance King James the First gave to the injured Prince Palatine, against the Emperor his Superior Lord? And what Resolution and tender Concern for the persecuted Rochellers, did King Charles the First shew and express? And has not Her Majesty assisted the Spaniards, against a Prince acknowledged by them, and seated on the Throne? Nor did Her Goodness, which is as extensive as Her Power, overlook the poor Estate of the People in the Cevennes, or neglect to give them all possible Assistance, against their King exercising a cruel Dominion over them.

These,

These, and many more Instances which might be fetched from other Countries, are so many Authorities against this Doctrine of unlimited Non-Resistance.

And now, my Lords, I come to consider the Authority the Doctor pretends to have for it: His Council say, They have Acts of Parliament for this Doctrine; I shall not mention the particular Acts, because they are well known, but consider them under Three Heads. First, Those Acts that were before the Restoration. Secondly, Those after the Restoration, and before the Revolution. And, Thirdly, Those after the Revolution.

My Lords, As to those before the Restoration, I readily admit they condemn Resistance generally; they don't mention any Exception. The Council of the other Side have furnish'd me with an Answer to 'em: They say, These, and all other Laws, have an Exception imply'd in them. The Wisdom of the Law, in not expressing the Exception, is plain: It is neither decent, nor probably would have a good Effect, to put odious Cases, such as a Prince's Overturning the Constitution. The Roman Law did not provide against Parricide, nor doth the English Law neither; since it hath no distinct Punishment for that kind of Murder, tho' it hath some for others, which are called Petty Treasons. Laws are framed upon a View of ordinary and common Cases: Ad ea quæ frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur, is a known Maxim, and of great use in the Exposition of Laws. And if our Legislators had been ask'd the Question, Whether they meant by those Laws to make all other Laws, and even those Laws themselves of no Validity? (Which, if Absolute Power cannot be withstood, would be the certain Consequence;) Would not they have answer'd, Nothing was farther from their Thoughts? And if it be Maledicta Expositio quæ corrumpit Textum, apply'd to any particular Law; what a cursed Exposition must that be, which corrupts, or rather annuls the Text of all the Laws at once?

My Lords, The next Head of Acts, are those after the Restoration, and before the Revolution. I do admit those Laws go farther than the former, and seem to condemn all Resistance, and in such Terms, as to exclude any Exception whatsoever. My Lords, What I have said relating to the former Laws, may be apply'd to these. But further, I desire it may be considered, these Legislators were guarding against the Consequences of those Pernicious and Antimonarchical Principles, which had been broached a little before in this Nation; and those large Declarations in Favour of Non-Resistance, were made to encounter, or obviate the Mischief of those Principles; as appears by the Preamble to the fullest of those Acts, which is the Militia Act, in the 13th and 14th of King Charles the Second. The Words of that Act are these: And during the late Usurped Governments, many Evil and Rebellious Principles have been instilled into the Minds of the People of this Kingdom, which may break forth, unless prevented, to the Disturbance of the Peace and Quiet thereof: Be it therefore Enacted, &c. Here your Lordships may see the Reason that inclined those Legislators to express themselves in such a manner against Resistance: They had seen the Regal Rights swallowed up, under the Pretence of Popular ones; and it is no Imputation on them, that they did not then foresee a quite different Case, as was that of the Revolution; where, under the Pretence of Regal Authority, a total Subversion of the Rights of the Subject was advanced, and in a manner effected. And this may serve to shew, that it was not the Design of those Legislators to condemn Resistance, in a Case of Absolute Necessity, for preserving the Constitution, when they were guarding against Principles which had so lately destroy'd it.

But now, my Lords, let us see how the Laws run after the Revolution. Your Lordships will find, that the Resistance at the Revolution is not only approved of in express Terms, by the Act for preventing vexatious Suits; and indeed, every Act passed since the Revolution, is an implicit Approbation of it; but the Declaration of the Unlawfulness of taking Arms against the King on any Pretence whatsoever, (required to be taken by the Corporation-Act, the Militia-Act, and the Act of Uniformity,) is now repealed. There was another Act mentioned by one of the Doctor's Council, the Act for regulating Select Vestries: That Act expired in King Charles the Second's Time, and was never continued. The first Gentleman that spoke for the Doctor, said, in Answer to the Repeal of this Declaration, by a Clause in the Act of the First of King William and Queen Mary, for abrogating the old Oaths, and appointing new ones; that it is a very tender Repeal, if it be one. I did not, my Lords, well understand his Meaning; but I am sure, that is a very tender Answer, if it be any at all. My Lords, if it be thought that this Declaration, as it is enjoined by the Corporation-Act, is not repealed, because the Corporation-Act is not particularly mentioned in the Clause of the Act of the First of King William and Queen Mary, which repeals the Declaration; I answer, After the Militia-Act, and the Act of Uniformity are mentioned, there follow general Words; Any Law or Statute to the contrary notwithstanding: And this repeals the Declaration as to that Act, as well as to the other Two Acts. And this Opinion has prevailed universally; and if it were otherwise, there is scarce a Corporation in England, but would be dissolved by the Incapacity of their Members.

But the same Council argued, That the Doctrine mentioned in that Declaration must be the true Doctrine, or the Declaration would not have been enjoined and taken so long as it was; and the Repeal don't make the Proposition false: and we might as well argue the Solemn League and Covenant to be a Lawful Oath. My Lords, As to the Declaration against the Covenant, that was considered as a Temporary Thing only, and, by the Act of Uniformity, was to cease upon the 25th of March, 1682. and therefore not at all to be compared with the other Declaration, which was intended to be perpetual. As to the Truth of the Doctrine in this Declaration which was repealed, I'll admit it to be as true as the Doctor's Council assert it; that is, with an Exception of Cases of Necessity; and it was not repealed because it was false, understanding it with that Restriction; but it was repealed, because it might be interpreted in an unconfined Sense, and exclusive of that Restriction; and being so understood, would reflect on the Justice of the Revolution: And this the Legislature had at Heart, and were very jealous of; and by this Repeal of that Declaration, gave a Parliamentary, or Legislative Admonition, against asserting this Doctrine of Non-Resistance in an unlimited Sense.

My Lords, I must confess, I did not expect to hear the Association and the Abjuration-Oath brought in as asserting this Doctrine; if they do, this may serve to account for their taking them who believe that Doctrine, which otherwise perhaps they would be at a loss to find an honest Reason for. But, my Lords, Doth engaging to stand by, and assist one another against all the King's Enemies, or swearing to defend the King or Queen against all Traitorous Conspiracies, signify any more than what is implied in the old Oath of Allegiance? There is, my Lords, indeed something more in the Association and Abjuration-Oath; for the Person taking them in his late Majesty's Time, declared, That he believed in his Conscience King William was Rightful and Lawful King of this Realm. This certainly put the Conscientious Taker of 'em upon a Consideration, of the Foundation on which that Right and Title was built. And since there was no Foundation for it but the Revolution, and that Revolution was founded on Resistance; how those could bring themselves up to take that Association, or that Abjuration-Oath, who believed that Resistance unlawful, I am at a loss to know.

My Lords, Upon this Head of these several Acts of Parliament that have been mentioned, I beg leave to observe, That as it is not to be supposed it was the Original Intention of any Laws to enervate the Force of all the Laws, so your Lordships see, there are since the Revolution Laws that do exclude any such Supposition, and do affirm that indefeasible Inheritance which the People have in the Laws.

My Lords, the next Part of the Evidence offered by the Doctor, was the Homilies; which are said to be confirmed by Act of Parliament, because the Articles of the Church of England are so; and the thirty fifth Article approves the Homilies, as containing Godly and wholesome Doctrine; and the Clergy are oblig'd to read and subscribe those Articles.

My Lords, I believe it will be admitted, that no more is intended by that Subscription, but that the Doctrine contained in the Homilies is right in the main, and not that every Sentence in 'em is so: For in this last Sense, I believe, never any Divine subscribed the Articles; and it will be hard to name any Preacher, or Writer of Note, who has not contradicted some Passage or other in them: Nay, as to one, the general and approved Practice of the Church is against it; I mean that Passage, which condemns the Use of Organs in Churches.

And surely, my Lords, the Sense of the Homilies can't be found out, by reading select Passages out of them, (as was done in the Doctor's Defence) but by observing the Frame and Tendency of the whole: And I may appeal to your Lordships, and especially to my Lords the Bishops, whether those who compiled the Homilies against Rebellion, seem'd to have had at all under their Consideration the Case of a total Subversion of the Constitution. It's plain, the main Design of those Homilies was against the Risings of the Popish Faction, and the plausible and popular Pretences made use of by them for supporting their Rebellions. Did not that great Queen, in whose Time the latter Book of Homilies was compiled, explain Her own Opinion on this Point, by the Assistance she gave to the Hollanders against the Spanish King, their Sovereign? Did not the Parliament explain Themselves, by the Supplies given to the Queen for that Purpose? And did not the Clergy explain Themselves likewise, by the Supplies granted in Convocation, in Favour of that Assistance? Can it therefore be imagined, the Homilies intended to condemn that Resistance, which the Queen and the whole Nation, nay, even the Clergy themselves assembled in Convocation, approved of? And I dare say, if Doctor Sacheverell had read any of the Homilies against Rebellion, which he says he is commanded to do, if there be no Sermon on the fifth of November; I say, if he had read any one of them to his Congregation at St. Paul's, not one of his Auditors would have thought the Revolution condemned by the Homily, whatever they might have thought of the Doctor.

My Lords, That which we accuse him for, is, That he lays down this general Doctrine of Non-Resistance, in Terms exclusive of any Exception; and, not content with that, points out the Revolution, for Men to compare it with, and condemn it by. How much better would it have become the Doctor, to have imitated that Zeal which appears in the Compilers of those Homilies, for a Protestant Queen against a Popish Faction, than to arraign the Revolution, upon the defaming of which, the Hopes of a Popish Faction against a Protestant Queen are built?

My Lords, Let us now consider the other Books, or Writings, the Doctor has produced to justify his Doctrine: These are chiefly, if not all of them, the Labours of Divines; and I will place them in these two Classes, Those before the Revolution, and those since. And, my Lords, I will say, If this Question of Submission were left by the Divines, to those who make the Municipal Laws of their Country, or the Nature of Laws in general, their Study; and they would confine themselves to the pressing a Legal Submission only, founded (as it is by the Law of England) on common Consent, and common Good; it would be much more for the Honour of Religion, and the Peace and Felicity both of the Sovereign and the Subject.

And this will be very manifest, if your Lordships call to mind but two of the Doctor's Quotations before the Revolution, which were read to your Lordships: The one is a Passage out of Bishop Sanderson, the other the Oxford Decree in 1683.

My Lords, Bishop Sanderson (and he only of all that have been quoted) has put the Case of Resistance for the Preservation of Church and State, which are but other Words for the Constitution; and has delivered this Doctrine of Non-Resistance in such unlimited and bold Terms, as I shall not repeat, to create a second Displeasure in this great Assembly. And I willingly admit, he was a very learned, judicious, and pious Prelate: And if so great and good a Man fell into such indiscreet, indecent and shocking Expressions on that Subject, as did visibly affect such an Assembly as this, one would think it should discourage others from delivering that Doctrine in such a Latitude.

The next is the Oxford Decree, which condemns all Resistance whatsoever: But, my Lords, it is observable, that in the same Decree, there is a Condemnation of this Proposition that I am going to read to your Lordships; That it is lawful to preclude the next Heir from his Right and Succession to the Crown: And yet at the same Time, the condemning this Proposition, that is, the holding, affirming, or maintaining the contrary Proposition, was (by the 13th Eliz. Cap. 1) made High Treason in her Time, and a Forfeiture of Goods and Chattels ever after. And how the Law now stands as to that Particular, by the Act for securing her Majesty's Person and Government, and the Succession of the Crown of Great Britain in the Protestant Line, every one knows. And, my Lords, when we find so great and learned a Body criminally erring in a Point so Fundamental, and upon which our Prospect of Happiness to future ture Ages doth, under God, depend; ought it not to discourage particular Divines, from pretending to determine Points of Law and Policy? For my own Part, I should hope, that that University's having fallen in at first so heartily with the Revolution, is as sincere a Condemnation of the Doctrine of unlimited Non-Resistance, as their solemn taking the Abjuration-Oath is a publick Profession that a Parliamentary Exclusion is lawful.

As for all the Passages which have been read to your Lordships out of the Books or Sermons of Divines before the Revolution, in Favour of Non-Resistance, your Lordships may observe their Reasons reach only so far, as when the Mischief is not Universal; or if it be Universal, where it is tolerable, and not so mischievous as a Civil War. I shall not mention any Passages in them, (which have not been read) to limit the Generality of the Expressions concerning Non-Resistance; because I avoid bringing in any Thing, which hath not been given in Evidence. But how candid the Doctor's Collections have been, your Lordships may judge by that Quotation out of my Lord Bishop of Salisbury's Book, where there is an express Exception of the Case of subverting Fundamentals: But your Lordships may see the same Candor shining out in several Passages of the Doctor's Sermon, with respect to that Reverend Prelate, whose Services, my Lords, (before, and at the Time of the Revolution) will never be forgotten by one Part of the Nation, nor forgiven by another.

My Lords, I now come to the Sermons and Writings since the Revolution: And I may appeal to your Lordships, whether they don't most plainly condemn the Doctor; those, I mean, where we had the Fortune to be ready to call for other Passages to be read out of the same Book. Does not my Lord Bishop of Lincoln expressly mention the Case of the Revolution, and justify the Resistance then used? How carefully does his Grace the Archbishop of York limit this Doctrine of Passive Obedience, which the Doctor says ought to be deliver'd in the most unconfined Terms? And it is by his Grace's Notion of this Doctrine, that the Commons desire this Cause may be judged and determined. I beg Leave to read again to your Lordships his remarkable Words: Care must be taken, that this general Doctrine be not misapplied in particular Countries. Though Non-Resistance or Passive Obedience be a Duty to all Subjects, and under all Governments, yet it is not expressed the same Way in all Places; but both the Objects and the Instances of it do vary in different Nations, according to the different Models of their Government. To speak this as plainly as I can: As the Laws of the Land are the Measures of our active Obedience, so are also the same Laws the Measure of our Submission. And as we are not bound to obey, but where the Laws and Constitution require our Obedience; so neither are we bound to submit, but as the Laws and Constitution do require our Submission.

This, my Lords, is the Doctrine the Commons are maintaining, and are calling this Criminal to an Account for contradicting. If our Obedience and Submission is not to be extended to the Prejudice of the Constitution, the Resistance at the Revolution, for preserving the Constitution, stands justified, and the Doctor's unlimited Doctrine of Non-Resistance stands condemned.

How prudently does his Grace, my Lords, caution the Doctor, and the rest of the Clergy, in another Part of his Sermon, by these Words? If, indeed, a Preacher should in the Pulpit presume to give his Judgment about the Management of publick Affairs, or to lay down Doctrines (as from Christ) about the Forms and Models of Kingdoms or Commonwealths, or to adjust the Limits of the Prerogative of the Prince, or of the Liberties of the Subject in our present Government: I say, if a Divine should meddle with such Matters in his Sermon, I do not know how he can be excused from the just Censure of meddling with Things that nothing concern him. This is indeed a practising in State Matters, and is usurping an Office that belongs to another Profession, and to Men of another Character. And I should account it every whit as undecent in a Clergyman, to take upon him to deal in these Points, as it would be for him to determine Titles of Lands in the Pulpit, which are in Dispute in Westminster-Hall. And how well the Doctor has observ'd this necessary Caution laid down by his Grace, I leave your Lordships to consider.

My Lords, I have purposely omitted taking notice of any Writings, except such as were produced by the Doctor, and I am satisfied how superficially I have considered them: But, in general, I may appeal to your Lordships, whether in the lowest Ebb of Liberty, there have been wanting those in this as well as other Countries, who have denied this slavish Doctrine of unlimited Non-Resistance; whether since the Revolution this Nation has been so ungrateful to their Deliverer, or unthankful for their Deliverance, as to want those who have maintain'd the Principles of the Revolution, and have shew'd them to be as agreeable to the Christian Religion, as they are to the Nature of that excellent Government we live under, which is that of limited Monarchy.

And yet notwithstanding the unanswer'd Performances of divers, both of the Clergy and Laity, upon this Subject, the Doctor has the Boldness to affirm his Doctrine to be the Doctrine of our Blessed Saviour and his Apostles.

My Lords, I can't mention this, without the deepest Concern for the Honour of the Christian Religion. I beseech your Lordships, What is Liberty but Justice, and what is Justice, but doing to every one as we would be done by? And nothing, I think, is likelier to promote the Practice of this Christian Precept, than spreading a true Sense and Love of Liberty, that Principle which casts out of us a narrow Regard to ourselves, and introduces a diffusive Benevolence to others.

And against this Principle it is, that the Doctor has offended.

My Lords, I have endeavour'd to shew that the Charge in the First Article stands prov'd against the Doctor, and that this Proof remains unanswer'd; and if so, his being a Minister of the Gospel, his having taken the Oaths to the late King, and to Her present Majesty, his being a Fellow of that College which was in a particular manner delivered by the Revolution, are all of them Aggravations of his Offence, (if it can be aggravated;) and which, if prov'd, his own Council admits, brings a foul Imputation on Her Majesty and Her Government, makes Her Government an Usurpation, and her Subjects Rebels; and that no Punishment can be too great for him.

My Lords, I never saw that Criminal for whom I had not a hearty Compassion, but there is both Compassion and Justice due to the injur'd Innocent. Your Lordships have before you on the one hand, the Care and Concern of Doctor Sacheverell; on the other, the Honour and Prosperity of a wise and brave brave Nation, who as they have thought nothing too much to give or hazard to defend their Liberties against a Foreign Enemy; so they hope your Lordships Justice on this Offender, will secure those Liberties against Domestick ones.

Mr. Solicitor General. MY Lords, I am commanded by the Commons to join with the Learned Gentleman who spoke last, in Replying to the Defence that has been made upon the First Article of this Impeachment, which the Commons insist upon to be well-grounded, and fully prov'd, notwithstanding the several Objections and Excuses that have been offer'd by Doctor Sacheverell and his Council.

One of the Doctor's Council has agreed, That if he has asserted, that the Resistance used to bring about the Revolution was Unlawful, no Punishment can be too great for him: But what they have offer'd to your Lordships in his Defence is, That no such Position can be made out without the help of Innuendo's and forced Constructions, which infer a Meaning contrary to the Natural Sense and Import of his Words; and this way of charging a Man with a Crime, they truly say, is not agreeable to the Rules of Law, and would contradict one of the Reasons given for the Judgment of the House of Lords, in the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston: And if this was the Case, it would not become the Commons of Great Britain, who have such an Affectionate Regard to the Laws and Liberties of their Country, to proceed upon an Impeachment so ill-grounded. But when the Commons had so fully and particularly proved the Assertions charged upon the Doctor by this Article, they little expected to have heard that his Words had been wrested to wrong Meanings, and made to speak what he never thought: And therefore, since the Question depends altogether upon Construction, and your Lordships have been told that the Passage upon which this Charge is grounded, has not been fully stated, the Commons must give you the trouble of Reading the Passage at large, as it stands in the Sermon; that your Lordships may judge, whether they have not taken his Words in the common and ordinary Sense, and given them the only Meaning they can bear.

The Passage is in these Words.

"The grand Security of the Government, and the very Pillar upon which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an Absolute and Unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all Things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever. But this Fundamental Doctrine, notwithstanding its Divine Sanction in the express Command of God in Scripture, and without which, it is impossible any Government, of any Kind or Denomination in the World, should subsist with Safety, and which has been so long the Honourable and Distinguishing Characteristick of our Church, is now, it seems, quite exploded and ridicul'd out of Countenance, as an Unfashionable, Superannuated, nay (which is more wonderful) as a dangerous Tenet, utterly Inconsistent with the Right, Liberty, and Property of the People; who, as our New Preachers, and New Politicians teach us, (I suppose by) a New and Unheard-of Gospel, as well as Laws have, in Contradiction to Both, the Power invested in them, the Fountain and Original of it, to Cancel their Allegiance at pleasure, and call their Sovereign to Account for High Treason against his Supreme Subjects, forsooth!

"Nay, to Dethrone and Murder him for a Criminal, as they did the Royal Martyr, by a Justiciary Sentence: And, what is almost Incredible, presume to make their Court to their Prince, by maintaining such Antimonarchical Schemes. But God be thank'd! neither the Constitution of our Church or State is so far alter'd, but that by the Laws of both, (still in Force, and which I hope for ever will be) these Damnable Positions, let them come from the Pulpit or the Press, either from Rome or Geneva, are condemned for Rebellion and High-Treason. Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence. But certainly they are the greatest Enemies of that, and his late Majesty, and the most Ungrateful for the Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such Black and Odious Colours upon both. How often must they be told, that the King himself Disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance in his Declaration; and that the Parliament declar'd, That they set the Crown upon his Head, upon no other Title, but that of the Vacancy of the Throne? And did they not Unanimously condemn to the Flames (as it justly deserv'd) that infamous Libel that would have pleaded the Title of Conquest, by which Resistance was supposed?"

And the Question now before your Lordships is, Whether by these Words he has asserted, That his late Majesty in his Declaration disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; and that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast Black and Odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution; which are the Assertions charg'd upon him in this Article, as Suggesting and Maintaining, that the necessary Means used to bring about the late happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable: Now that there was Resistance in the Revolution, and that such Resistance, in a case of that absolute and unavoidable Necessity, is consistent with the Doctrine of the Church, and the Fundamental Law of the Kingdom, is agreed by the Council; and they have endeavour'd to convince your Lordships, that the Doctor has asserted nothing to the contrary; for they say, "The Resistance which the Doctor affirms the King to have disclaim'd, was only a Resistance which tended to Conquest; and that the Doctor did well to wipe off this Imputation, for the Parliament had declared it injurious to his rightful Title to the Crown, and had order'd a Treatise to be burnt, which Suggested a Title by Conquest; and that the Doctor having his Eye in that Expression on the matter of Conquest, expressed the same by Resistance, which was applicable to the Subject-Matter before, and therefore ought not to be wrested to any other Purpose."

This, my Lords, is the Turn which the Council would give to the Doctor's Assertion, That the King disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance. And indeed the Words of the Sermon are so plain and particular, that they are forced to have Recourse to this Evasion of a Resistance by Conquest: But I wonder Gentlemen can argue in this manner, and at the same time speak of reading the Words with Candor and Ingenuity; when 'tis most apparent that there is no previous Discourse of a Title by Conquest, or of any Treatise in which it had been asserted, that could give occasion for his vindicating the late King from any such Imputation, or to which these Words can in any Construction be applied; for the Doctor says nothing of Conquest 'till after he had asserted that the King disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; and and then he goes on and lays another Foundation for the Settlement upon the Revolution, by grounding it upon the Vacancy of the Throne, before he says any thing about Conquest, or mentions the Book which had pleaded that Title; and even then he condemns that Title for no other Reason but because it implied Resistance; which plainly shews, that his Argument was carried on upon the Subject of Resistance, and not upon that of Conquest.

And the Answer which they have given to that part of the Article, whereby he is charged with Asserting, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast Black and Odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution, is equally evasive.

What they have offer'd to your Lordships upon this Head is, That the Doctor is not speaking of the utter Illegality of Resistance, when he introduceth his Discourse about casting Black and Odious Colours, by saying, Our Adversaries think they have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence; but of the damnable Positions with which the Doctor charges the new Preachers and new Politicians, in the Words immediately preceding: And in this place it is, that the Manager appointed to maintain this Article is charged with omitting about twenty or thirty Lines between the General Doctrine and the Passage concerning the Revolution, in which several distinct and entire Sentences are contain'd, concerning those Persons and their Principles, to which that Passage entirely relates: And your Lordships are told, that to apply the Instance of the Revolution to justify such wicked Principles, is what the Doctor calls casting Black and Odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution.

But the Commons take it to be very clear, That upon stating of the whole Paragraph, and all the Words in the Order in which they lie, and upon comparing the several Passages, it will manifestly appear, that what the Doctor said about casting Black and Odious Colours upon the Revolution, can be applied only to those who maintain, that the Resistance used to bring about the Revolution was lawful and just, and that the Persons he calls our Adversaries are such as urged the Revolution in opposition to his general Doctrine of the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever: and not to those who urge the Revolution in Defence of those damnable Positions, which, he says, the new Preachers and new Politicians had laid down.

This the Commons apprehend to be the only Meaning that his Words in any Construction can bear; for the Point he is speaking of, and which he says his Adversaries thought they had him sure and unanswerable upon, must be some certain single Position which was mentioned before, some one Position or Principle, and not many; for 'tis this Point, not these Principles; and that single Point could be no other, than the Point of Resistance: And the Persons he calls his Adversaries, who think they have him so sure, can be no other than those who deny his general Doctrine, and not those new Preachers and new Politicians, who say the People have a Power vested in them to cancel their Allegiance at Pleasure; because those who deny this General Position of the utter Illegality of Resistance, as applied to any one particular Case, are certainly his Adversaries, and Enemies to his Fundamental Doctrine: For whoever can find an excepted Case, or shew an Instance in which Resistance is lawful, destroys his general Assertion. And he sufficiently shews, he meant those who oppos'd his general Doctrine of absolute Non-Resistance, by our Adversaries, when he says that they urged the Revolution of that Day in their Defence; because the Resistance at the Revolution, which was founded in unavoidable Necessity, could be no Defence to a Man that was attack'd for asserting that the People might cancel their Allegiance at Pleasure, or Dethrone and Murder their Sovereign by a Judiciary Sentence. For it can never be inferr'd from the Lawfulness of Resistance at a Time when a Total Subversion of the Government both in Church and State was intended, that a People may take up Arms and call their Sovereign to account at Pleasure; and therefore, since the Revolution could be of no Service in giving the least Colour for asserting any such wicked Principle; the Doctor could never intend to put it into the Mouths of those new Preachers and new Politicians for a Defence; unless it be his Opinion, that the Resistance at the Revolution can bear any Parallel with the execrable Murder of the Royal Martyr, so justly detested by the whole Nation; or that there was no other Difference between the two Cases, than what the Learned Gentleman, who first spoke for him, was pleas'd to mention in the Conclusion of his Argument, by quoting an odious Expression which I forbear to repeat: But it was very proper to take notice of the Resistance at the Revolution, as an Objection to his general Doctrine, for it really is so; and 'tis impossible that Doctrine can be true in its full Extent, if the Resistance at the Revolution was lawful; for 'tis most apparent, that the Justice of a Revolution, founded in Resistance, and the Principle of Non-Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, can never stand together.

And therefore he could mean nothing by the Point his Adversaries thought they had him so sure upon, but the general Position of Non-Resistance, which was the only Point contended for in that Place; and he must mean those only who denied his Doctrine of absolute Non-Resistance, by our Adversaries: And having no other way of maintaining the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever, and of answering the Case of the Revolution, which, from the Resistance that was in it, was made an Objection; he goes on and denies the Resistance, by saying, That the King solemnly disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance; and calls those who say that there was any Resistance in the Revolution, the greatest Enemies of that and his late Majesty, and the most ungrateful for the Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such Black and Odious Colours upon both.

This, my Lords, is plainly Asserting, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to represent it as Black and Odious; and this Assertion is fairly collected from the plain Course and Tendency of his Argument, not from strain'd Inferences and Innuendo's, not from supposed or forc'd Constructions, but from his own Words, as they lie together, taken in their natural and genuine Sense, and is the only Construction that can give them any reasonable Meaning or Coherence.

And therefore the Commons apprehend, That the Charge against the Doctor, for asserting, That to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast Black and Odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution, is fully prov'd, and stands unanswer'd.

But tho' the Charge, and the Passages produced for the Proof of it, are so very particular, and directly pointed at the Resistance used to bring about the late happy Revolution, yet the Doctor and his Council are pleas'd to say, "That he has only Asserted the Doctrine of Non-Resistance in general Terms, as it has been taught by the Apostles, the

" Homilies,

"Homilies, and the Fathers of the Church in all Ages: That in this Case, as in all other general Propositions, Cases of unavoidable Necessity, as the Revolution undoubtedly was, are always understood to be excepted; and that there is no other Difference between the Gentlemen of the House of Commons and the Doctor, but Whether when the general Rule of Obedience is taught, the particular Exceptions which may be made out of that Rule are always to be express'd; or, Whether when the general Rule is laid down, the particular Exceptions are not more properly to be understood or implied." And upon this ground they have been very Elaborate, and have produced many Proofs to satisfy your Lordships, that the Doctor's general Assertion of the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power upon any Pretence whatsoever, without mentioning any Exception, is warranted by the Doctrine of the Church, and by the Law of the Land.

But, with great Submission, all this Pains might have been spared: for 'tis plain that the Doctor is not Impeach'd for preaching a general Doctrine, and enforcing the general Duty of Obedience, but for preaching against an excepted Case, after he has stated the Exception. He is not Impeached for preaching the general Doctrine of Obedience, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever; but because, having first laid down the general Doctrine as true, without any Exception, he states the excepted Case, the Revolution, in express Terms, as an Objection; and then assumes the Consideration of that excepted Case, denies there was any Resistance in the Revolution; and asserts, that to impute Resistance to the Revolution would cast Black and Odious Colours upon it. This, my Lords, is not preaching the Doctrine of Non-Resistance in the general Terms used by the Homilies, and the Fathers of the Church, where Cases of Necessity may be understood to be excepted by a Tacit Implication, as the Council have allowed; but is preaching directly against the Resistance at the Revolution, which in the Course of this Debate has been all along admitted to be necessary and just, and can have no other Meaning, than to bring a Dishonour upon the Revolution, and an Odium upon those great and illustrious Persons, those Friends to the Monarchy and the Church, that assisted in bringing it about. For had the Doctor intended any thing else, he would have treated the Case of the Revolution in a different manner, and have given it the true and fair Answer; he would have said, that the Resistance at the Revolution was of Absolute Necessity, and the only Means left to revive the Constitution; and must be therefore taken as an excepted Case, and could never come within the Reach or Intention of the general Doctrine of the Church. But instead of this, he denies that there was any Resistance in the Revolution, and represents it as a Scandal upon the Revolution to say there was any Resistance in it; Those, says he, are the greatest Enemies to it, who cast such Black and Odious Colours upon it.

My Lords, if extraordinary Cases, if Cases of Necessity, which are implicitly Excepted, are not to be stated at the Time when the general Prohibition is inculcated, and it would be of dangerous Consequence in this particular Instance of the Doctrine of Non-Resistance, "by picking Holes for the Subject to creep out of his Allegiance;" I submit it to your Lordships Consideration, whether stating an Excepted Case, and then bringing it within the general Prohibition, particularly in this Instance of the Revolution, must not have the same pernicious Consequence: "Does not this plainly shew what Spirit the Doctor is of, and what he aims at?"

But your Lordships have been told, that "What the Doctor asserts concerning the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, can never be applied to the Revolution; for the Legislative, the King, Lords and Commons, is the Supreme Power; and there was no Resistance to the Lords and Commons, for they join'd with his late Majesty in bringing about the Revolution; the Resistance was made only to that unfortunate Prince who was then upon the Throne." But 'tis plain from his applying the Illegality of Resisting the Supreme Power to the Case of the Revolution, that he meant the Executive Power, which was then Resisted; and he uses Sovereign, and Prince, as Synonymous Terms with the Supreme Power in other parts of the same Paragraph of the Sermon; for he speaks of calling the Sovereign to Account, and of cancelling Allegiance at Pleasure, which can be due only to the Prince; which shews, that the Prince only, and not the Legislature, can be understood by His Supreme Power.

I shall not trouble your Lordships, to shew that the Resistance used at the Revolution was consistent with the Doctrine of the Church, and with the Law and Constitution of England: This is no Part of the Controversy, and is not disputed by the Council; for they agree such Cases to be excepted out of the General Rule, and profess to use the several Passages that have been read to your Lordships, only to excuse or extenuate the Doctor's Offence, and not to arraign the Justice of the Revolution; and therefore I shall not enter into a particular Examination of them, but only observe, That if the Books, out of which these Passages were taken, were narrowly examined, 'tis possible some Expressions might be found, to shew that the Authors never intended that their General Rule should extend to Cases where the total Subversion of a Government was aim'd at. For your Lordships must needs have observed, from the Use that has been made of the Book of a Learned Prelate, called A Vindication of the Authority, Constitution and Laws of the Church and State of Scotland; Printed in 1673. that a perfect State of Truth is not altogether to be depended upon, from the Proofs that have been collected out of several Authors, and read to your Lordships; and that the Sincerity of the Collector is very much to be questioned: For that Book was produced to prove the Duty of Absolute Submission, and a Passage was read for that Purpose; but when the Managers looked into the Book, they found another Passage, where the Author stating the Case of Abuses tending to a total Subversion, allows, That in such a Case, the Supreme Power may be administered by another: Which shews, That this Reverend Prelate, who was so instrumental in the Revolution, did not act in Contradiction to his former Sentiments, (as was insinuated, by citing this Treatise;) but was firm and constant to himself, when he embark'd in that Glorious Enterprize.

Several Sermons that have been preached since the Revolution, have been likewise offered to your Lordships, to shew that the Doctrine of Non-Resistance has been delivered in general Terms; but these can be of no Service in his Defence, for the Reasons that have been given. Besides, the Commons don't think themselves concerned to enter into the Examination of private Opinions. And for those that have been preached by the Right Reverend Fathers of the Church now living, they are the best Expositors of their own Meaning; and I should mis-spell your Lordships Time, to enter into any Explication of them. The Doctor has appealed to the Right Reverend Fathers of the Church; to these Right Reverend Fathers we leave him; not doubting but the Nation will be satisfied how much they are concerned for the Honour of the Revolution, and the Security of the present Happy Establishment under her Majesty, by the just Judgment they will give upon this Occasion.

And as to the Laws of the Kingdom, there needs little to be said, after what the Learned Gentleman who spoke last, has offered to your Lordships; especially since the Council for the Doctor have all of them own'd, That the General Expressions in the Laws don't extend to any such Case as that of the Revolution, which no Municipal Law can be supposed to include. And if Doctor Sacheverell had been satisfied with laying down the General Doctrines of Obedience and Non-Resistance, in the manner the Laws have done, the Commons had never given your Lordships this Trouble. 'Tis his entering into the Debate of what is agreed by his own Council to be an Excepted Case, and his arraigning the Justice of the Revolution, (which has been already stated at large to your Lordships) that has given Occasion for the Prosecution upon this Article.

Besides this, there have been other Things said in the Doctor's Behalf.

The Commons had alledged, That to shake the Justice of the Revolution, and the Validity of those Acts of Parliament, by which Her Majesty's Title to the Crown was declared, and the Succession settled in the Protestant Line, was a Matter of the greatest Consequence, at a Time when the Hereditary Right to the Crown was contested; and that the Friends of the Pretender could Advance his Interest upon no other Ground. But it has been urged for the Doctor, That he could never mean any Service to the Pretender; for he asserts the Hereditary Right to be in the Queen; and that those who deny Her Hereditary Right, are most like to bring in the Pretender. And by this Answer, they insinuate, That the Doctor has asserted an Hereditary Right in Her Majesty; and that those who defend her Parliamentary Title, deny Her Hereditary Right. The Passage they cite for his asserting an Hereditary Right in Her Majesty, is Pag. 2. where he calls Her Majesty, The Good and Pious Relict of the Royal Family: And they argue, That if Her Majesty be the Relict, and the only Prince of that Family left, she must have the Hereditary Right of Course.

This Passage your Lordships cannot but observe, requires some Straining, to give it any Appearance of answering the Purpose to which they would apply it; and after all, it can carry no such Meaning: Her Majesty is not the only Descendant of the Royal Family now in being; there are several Branches of it yet remaining; and I cannot believe, that the Gentlemen who use this Argument, intend to exclude the Illustrious House of Hanover from being Part of it. In the next Place, they turn it upon the Commons, as if they denied the Hereditary Right (which they shall ever avow) when they asserted the Title by Act of Parliament. I submit it to your Lordships, Whether any thing more was said, than that the Hereditary Right was contested? And this is notorious to all the World——is taken Notice of in our Oath of Abjuration, and was claimed Two Years ago, by the Pretender's Attempting an Invasion. And in such a Case, 'tis certainly the Duty of every Subject, to make good all the Fences which guard Her Majesty's Title to the Crown. And my Lords, We have Reason to lay some Weight upon a Parliamentary Title, since the Protestant Succession entirely depends upon it; and to defend the Power of Parliament, to limit the Succession of the Crown, since the Doctor has offered to your Lordships in Evidence a Decree of the University of Oxford, in the Year 1683, where is this Proposition, viz. "That it is lawful to preclude the next Heir from his Right and Succession to the Crown, was solemnly condemned, as False, Seditious and Impious:" Which I the rather take Notice of, because the Doctor relies so much upon the Authority of that University. But I must take Leave to say, That if the same Principle should still continue to be taught, or to be believed in that University, where so many of our Gentlemen receive their first Impressions, it must one Time or other involve us in Blood, and leave Posterity in endless Disputes about the Title to the Crown; and therefore 'tis of the greatest Consequence to Her Majesty, and the Security of Her Person and Government, the Continuance of the Succession in the Protestant Line, and the Peace and Happiness of this Kingdom, to maintain the Power of Parliament to settle the Succession of the Crown; which has been exercised in all Times, and frequently resorted to by Her Majesty's greatest and wisest Predecessors. This is not to make way for the Pretender, but to shew that he is effectually and legally excluded; and that Her Majesty has not only the Hereditary Right, but the Sanction of an Act of Parliament, which has been always thought sufficient to bind the Succession to the Crown, and is the plain way to establish her Majesty's Throne against all Attempts whatsoever.

But your Lordships are told, That these Sermons were not preached with a seditious Intention; and that the Doctor can never be supposed to have a Design to undermine the Government, by preaching up the utter Illegality of Resistance.

This, My Lords, has indeed some shew of an Excuse; but if your Lordships consider in what Manner he has applied his Doctrine of Non-Resistance, and the Use he has made of it, together with the General Design of the Sermon, which is a virulent Invective throughout; it will appear, that he could not take a more proper Course to incite the People to Sedition, and to create Jealousies and Discontents in the Kingdom. For, First, he endeavours to shew, That if there was any Resistance in the Revolution, the Foundations of our present happy Settlement were laid in an unlawful Force; because such Resistance was, as he says, utterly illegal, odious, and unjustifiable. And having laid this Ground, he charges her Majesty, and those in Authority under her, with a General Male-Administration: And what Inference can the People make from such Positions as these; but that the Government they are under is ill founded, and therefore no Obedience is due to it; and since there is a general Mismanagement in the whole Administration of the Executive Power, 'tis their Interest to get rid of it as soon as they can?

This, My Lords, is the plain Tendency of his whole Discourse; and whose Interest is best served

by

by such Discourses as these, whether that of her Majesty, our most gracious Queen, or that of the Pretender, I submit to your Lordships impartial Consideration.

My Lords, The Doctor will have no Reason to complain of being hardly used, in having his Intentions censured as seditious, if he considers what that great Prelate, my Lord Archbishop of York, has said in the Sermon that has been produced in Evidence before your Lordships; in which there is this Paragraph, viz.

“ They are the Factious, they are the Setters up
“ or Abettors of Parties, who endeavour to destroy,
“ or unsettle, or disparage, or at least to hurt and “ weaken the Government and the Laws, as they “ are established; let the Principles upon which “ they go, or the Pretences they make, be what “ they will.

And if his seditious Intentions be apparent from the Sermon, his having taken the Oaths of Allegiance, his Signing the Association, and his taking the Abjuration, are so many Aggravations of his Guilt.

I have troubled your Lordships a great while; but I can't forbear taking notice of one Thing, which the Doctor has complain'd of as a Hardship; I mean, that he has been prosecuted in this publick Manner by an Impeachment, by which, he says, he shall have been abundantly punished, tho' he should have the Happiness to be at last acquitted. But this Complaint is answered by his own Council, who acknowledge his Case to be a Cause of very great Moment; and that the Points now under your Lordships Consideration, are proper only to be settled in Parliament. And certainly, no other Course could have been so proper: For when the Foundations of the Government in Church and State are apparently struck at, and undermined, under Pretence of Zeal for the Constitution; when her Majesty's Title to the Crown is endeavoured to be weaken'd, under the Colours of Obedience and Loyalty; when the Quiet and Repose of her Majesty's Protestant Subjects is disturb'd, under a pretended Zeal for the good of the Church; when the Safety of the Church is in the greatest Danger, from those who declare the most affectionate Concern for her Welfare and Prosperity; when the Fathers of the Church are defamed, by those who pretend the greatest Reverence for the Episcopal Order; and when her Majesty's happy Administration is publicly vilified and exposed, in the most audacious and insolent manner; where should the Commons apply for Justice, but to this supreme Judicature? Or where could they expect an adequate Remedy to these great and growing Evils, but in full Parliament?

They have therefore brought this great Offender before your Lordships; and have the highest Satisfaction, in a full Assurance of your Lordships impartial Judgment.

Mr. Lechmere. MY Lords, the Gentlemen who have now spoke before me, have gone through the Substance of the Reply to this first Article: They have shewn to your Lordships the Weakness and Vanity of the Defence, which has been made to it; and have fully re-asserted this Part of our Charge, by which Doctor Sacheverell stands accused, in the Name of the Commons of Great Britain, of condemning the Necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution.

Your Lordships Consideration of this Branch of our Impeachment, and of what has been offered to you in Maintenance of it, has, doubtless, created in your Minds an Impression equal to its Weight, and to the many great Consequences which depend upon it: But we persuade ourselves, that when you reflect on the Nature and Method of the Defence, 'twill more clearly discover to your Lordships and the World, how necessary a Task the Commons have taken on themselves in this Prosecution; of what high Concern it is to her Majesty and her Government, and to our common Security, that this Fundamental Question should receive this publick and solemn Discussion; That the false Zeal, which the disguised Enemies of her Majesty's Title have the Confidence to put on, by endeavouring to cover the worst Designs, under the sacred Names of God and Religion, and the strongest Professions of Loyalty and Allegiance, may be brought to the Test, and the true Foundations of the Safety of the Kingdom be understood and asserted.

The Part assigned me in opening the Charge, leads me to take Notice of some Passages which have fallen from the Council; and tho' what I shall first mention, has been already observed and fully refuted, yet I must beg your Patience to resume it a little. The Gentleman who began the Defence, said, That 'twas insisted on the first Day of the Trial, That the Doctor had not only asserted the utter

Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever; but that he had likewise declared himself, That the Revolution was not such a Case as ought to be excepted out of his General Rule, and this he said, be denied; and if such an Exception could be found in the Doctor's Sermon, he should think no Punishment too great for him. Your Lordships could not but observe the Argument which immediately followed: 'Tis one thing, says he, expressly to affirm the Revolution is such a Case as ought not to be excepted, and another thing not to make that Exception. You were told, indeed, in the Beginning of the same Discourse, and afterwards by the Doctor himself, That his general Assertion of the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever, did not relate to the Resistance used to bring about the Revolution, it being applied to the Supreme Legislative Power, to which no Resistance was then made, the Lords and Commons joining in it. This, my Lords, is a Meaning which the Doctor had not in view when he preached the Sermon; for, by observing the Passages, you will find that the Words Supreme Power are no Part of the Assertion of the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever. He doth, indeed, affirm unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all Things lawful, but the Illegality of Resistance is indefinitely and universally affirm'd, and not restrain'd to the Supreme Power. 'Tis likewise evident, not only from his mentioning the Case of the Revolution, which was the Case of Resistance to the King, as an Objection to his general Rule of the utter Illegality of Resistance, but likewise from the subsequent Parts of the same Paragraph, that the Non-Resistance which he preached up, was Non-Resistance to the Supreme executive Power; and, indeed, this is still more evident from the Fallacy of that, which is offered to induce your Lordships to think otherwise, it being undeniable, that the Lords and Commons did not join in that Resistance, as part of the Legislative and Supreme Power, but as part of the collective Body of the Nation. This Subterfuge, frivolous as it is, being soon departed from, the Argument proceeded upon the Supposition, that the general Assertion in the Sermon was to be understood of

of the Supreme executive Power. I return therefore to the Objection as stated before, which being delivered with uncommon Ostentation, your Lordships will allow me to enter into the Examination of it. The Subjects Obligation to an unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power in all things Lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever, is the Doctor's general Rule, which he affirms to be the Security of our Government, and the Belief of this the very Pillar on which it stands. Your Lordships may here observe, that the Doctor, in delivering his general Rule, has gone pretty much beyond that Apostle he would be thought to imitate: The Apostle in general Terms enjoins the Duties of Obedience and Subjection to the higher Powers, not mentioning any Exception, when he lays down those Precepts. The Doctor goes on, and his next Sentences contain a general Observation, 'That tho' his fundamental Doctrine was now become unfashionable and exploded, as a dangerous Tenet, inconsistent with the Rights, Liberties, and Property of the People; yet, God be thanked, it still continued to be the Doctrine both of Church and State: And then follow these Words, Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence. No Body can doubt what Revolution the Doctor means, nor, that under the Term Revolution, by which he expresses the Objection made to the general Rule of Non-Resistance, he meant the Resistance supposed to be made at that Revolution. This he states, as the unanswerable Objection made by his Adversaries to his Point, to his Rule of Non-Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever.

If your Lordships collect the Sense of the Paragraph thus far, it will stand thus: Those Persons who explode absolute Non-Resistance to the Prince as a Tenet dangerous to Liberty; in Defence of that their Opinion, object to us, who avow this Tenet as the honourable and distinguishing Characteristick of our Church, the Resistance used to bring about the late happy Revolution, as an Exception out of our general Rule of Non-Resistance. The Doctor having thus laid down his Rule in universal Terms, and expressly taken Notice of the Case of the Revolution as an Objection raised against it by other People; your Lordships are next to consider what becomes of this Objection; in what Manner is it treated by him, and what Judgment does he pass upon it? My Lords, The Doctor does not drop the Objection without considering it further; he is not silent in the Matter; he doth not leave this as an Exception implied, and to be supposed by the general Rule; he proceeds and argues expressly upon it for two or three Sentences together: The Doctor's Expressions in this Respect also are not entirely agreeable to those of the Apostle. In the next Place, Doth the Doctor yield the Objection to his Adversaries? Doth he allow the Resistance used to bring about the late happy Revolution to have been a lawful Resistance, and to be an Exception out of his general Rule? No, my Lords, just the contrary: He is so far from agreeing with his Adversaries in this Point, or giving way to the Exception, that in Vindication of the Revolution, as he would be thought to speak, he pronounces those who make the Exception, and contend for the Lawfulness of that Resistance, to be Enemies to the Revolution; and that Resistance, which the Commons assert to be the necessary Means by which it was brought about, he describes to be odious Colours cast upon the Revolution. In his next Sentence he insinuates, That there was no Resistance in the Revolution, and to that End, misrepresents his late Majesty as having disclaimed it; and with the same Intent likewise, that the Parliament set the Crown on his Head on no other Title than of the Vacancy of the Throne; and still the more effectually to delude his Hearers into the Belief of his general Assertion, grossly and ridiculously perverts the Censure past by a future Parliament upon the Notion of Conquest, as a Condemnation of that Resistance. Having thus considered this Objection of the Revolution, and the following Parts of his Paragraph being Expressions of Triumph over his Adversaries, whose Objection he would be supposed to have confuted, towards the Close of it he uses these Words, as his Conclusion and Judgment upon it: In short, as the English Government can never be secure on any other Principles but strictly those of the Church of England, so he will be bold to say, &c. His general Rule of Non-Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever he had before laid down as the Doctrine and Principle of the Church; which, after having considered the Case of the Revolution as an imaginary Exception to it, he re-affirms in those Words. And what clearer Indication can your Lordships receive of the Doctor's Intention in his general Assertion? Can your Lordships, or any Body that shall consider the Tenor of that Part of his Discourse, retain any Doubt whether he has plainly and fully declared himself, That the Resistance used to bring about the late happy Revolution was odious and unjustifiable, and not to be excepted out of his Fundamental Rule of the Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever? And, my Lords, Can it be said that this Interpretation of his Discourse is strained and unnatural? Is this Part of our Charge maintained by conjoining distant and independent Passages? Or is not the Connexion clear and necessary, and the Sense we contend for, the only Sense the Words can properly bear, in the most candid and genuine Interpretation of them? The Gentleman, whose Objection from the Bar I have been considering, said, That it is one thing expressly to affirm that the Revolution is not to be excepted, and another thing not to make that Exception. But tho' the Words of the Sermon are not an express and literal Affirmation, yet if this Construction appears to your Lordships to be necessary and certain, they will be taken by you to be an ample and undeniable Declaration of his Mind; and this poor Shift, thus emphatically insisted on at the Bar, will amount to no more than what the Doctor had before said in his Answer in plainer Words, That he had not maintained the Necessary Means to be Odious and Unjustifiable, because he had not made use of those very Words.

The next Passage which I shall observe to your Lordships, fell from the Gentleman who spoke third in Defence of this Article; his Words were these: I have been careful and exact in collecting them, "One learned Gentleman, says he, did observe, that there was an Original Contract; and that by that Contract, if the Executive Power invaded the rest, that Contract was broke, and the People discharged from their Allegiance; but he did not think fit to take Notice when that Contract was made. I would fain know, whether it was before Magna Charta, or since; if it was before, it is much no mention was made of it there, for that has been always looked upon as the Great Charter of the Rights of the People. Was it before 25 Ed. 3? Then I would know, Whether that Contract, made before the 25 Ed. 3. "could

“ could ever discharge that Act which was made after it ? If it doth discharge the Subject of their Allegiance, I have never yet known it pleaded to any Indictment for High Treason upon that Act ; and therefore, ‘Till the Legislature shall determine what that Contract is, and what Breach of it shall discharge the Subjects of their Allegiance, I must take Leave to say, that Resistance stands still upon the Foot of the Statute of 25 Ed. 3.”

My Lords, the Nature and Consequence of this Passage would bear a much more ample Consideration, than my Time has allowed me to give it, or than may be fit to trouble your Lordships with on this Reply ; but I conceive a short Notice of it, and of the near Relation it bears to the Matter now before you in Judgment, may yield a pretty clear Discovery and Explanation of the whole. But the Distance of Time since the opening of the Charge, and the many palpable Misconstructions which some of the Council have allow’d to themselves, of what has been offered by some of us in behalf of the Commons, makes it necessary for me, even in this Particular, to remind your Lordships of the Connexion of the Discourse, out of which this Observation was raised. Your Lordships were acquainted, in opening the Charge, with how great Caution, and with what unfeigned Regard to her Majesty and her Government, and to the Duty and Allegiance of Her Subjects the Commons made choice of the Words Necessary Means, to express the Resistance that was made use of to bring about the Revolution, and with the condemning of which the Doctor is charged by this Article ; not doubting, but that the Honour and Justice of that Resistance, from the Necessity of that Case, and to which alone we have strictly confined ourselves, when duly considered, would confirm and strengthen, and be understood to be, an effectual Security of the Allegiance of the Subject to the Crown of this Realm in every other Case, where there is not the same Necessity ; and that the Right of the People to Self-defence, and Preservation of their Liberties by Resistance, as their last Remedy, is the Result of a Case of such Necessity only, and by which the Original Contract between King and People is broke. This was the Principle laid down and carried thro’ all that was said with respect to Allegiance, and on which Foundation, in the Name, and on the Behalf of all the Commons of Great Britain, We assert and justify that Resistance by which the late happy Revolution was brought about. When the Gentleman from the Bar endeavoured thus, in a ludicrous manner, to explode the Original Contract between the King and People, he must not be supposed to be ignorant, that those very Words are part of the Vote of the Abdication, the Vote of both Houses of Parliament, at the Time of the Revolution, antecedent to that Settlement of the Crown, on which Her Majesty’s Parliamentary Title and our present Establishment is founded. I have thought it necessary to transcribe that Proceeding from your Lordships Journals, now lying on your Table, and will state it to you as I have taken it from thence.

Upon the Twenty Ninth of January, 1688, A Message was brought from the Commons by Mr. Hampden and others, who said, The Commons taking into their Consideration the State of this Kingdom, had pass’d a Vote, to which they desired your Lordships Concurrence ; which Vote was as follows, Resolved, That King James the Second having endeavoured to subvert the Constitution of the Kingdom, by breaking the Original Contract between King and People ; and by Advice of Jesuits and other wicked Persons, having violated the Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom ; and having withdrawn himself out of this Kingdom, has abdicated the Government, and the Throne is become thereby Vacant. Your Lordships House Resolved it self into a Committee of the whole House, and the Vote containing in it divers Particulars, upon the 30th Day of January, was considered by Paragraphs ; the first of which was, That King James the Second having endeavoured to subvert the Constitution of the Kingdom, by breaking the Original Contract between King and People : To which the Committee, and the House afterwards, agreed without any Amendment. Now when it appears to your Lordships and the World, that breaking the Original Contract between King and People, were the Words made Choice of by that House of Commons, with the greatest Deliberation and Judgment, and approved of by your Lordships, in that first and fundamental Step made towards the Re-establishment of the Government, which had received so great a Shock from the evil Counsels which had been given to that unfortunate Prince, and that they are stated in that Vote as a Consequence of his endeavouring to subvert the Constitution of the Kingdom ; I need not say how much the Lawfulness of that Resistance, which had been before made by the People, and which is now the immediate Question, nay, how much the Justice of the Revolution it self would be affected by a Condemnation of that Position : And what Light doth it give to the Question now before your Lordships, when at your Bar, in Defence of a Person accus’d by the Commons, for condemning the Necessary Means which brought about the Revolution, you have heard that Original Contract, at that Time so solemnly declared to be a Fundamental Principle, publicly denied, ridicul’d, and endeavoured (in what Manner ’tis easy to judge) to have been exploded ?

My Lords, the Truth of that Position has its Foundation in the Nature and Essence of the Constitution of our Government, and it will stand so long as this remains ; and the Sanction it has received from your Lordships, and from that House of Commons, who had with so much Wisdom and Bravery asserted the Rights of the Kingdom in that extraordinary Juncture, and who, pursuant to that Resolution, settled the Crown upon Her Sacred Majesty, ought to render it indisputable, so long at least as that Establishment is preserved to us. But yet, could I think it seasonable to enter into it, to consider more particularly the Nature of our Government, to draw together some of the many incontestable Evidences of its Original Freedom, to consider the Nature, Antiquity and History of the Coronation-Oath, and the Oath of Allegiance, and the mutual Obligations and Consequences arising from them to the Prince and People : Was I to go over the several Branches that make up the ancient Frame of our Government, and which speak and express a Consent and Compact between the Prince and People in their Institution ; and was I to observe that inseparable Relation and equal Security which they import between the Crown and the Subject, and which are so many infallible Tokens of Original Consent stamp’d upon them ; the Truth and Certainty of that Position of an Original Contract between the King and People, might be laid down to your Lordships in demonstrative Terms. The Gentleman that rais’d this Observation, soon afterwards, in the same Discourse, suppos’d, That by the Original Contract, the Original Constitution was meant ; how strictly proper that Manner of speaking might be found to be, I will not now determine; yet thus much may with Certainty be concluded, That the denying the Original Contract, is not only to disavow the whole Proceeding at the Time of the Revolution, but to renounce the Constitution it self, to disclaim those many and undeniable Proofs and Testimonies of it, which almost every Part of our History, our Records, and Memorials of Antiquity, will furnish: To deny the Original Contract of Government, is to contradict and condemn the Voice and Tenor of all our Laws, of every Act of the Supreme Legislative Power, the Force and Efficacy of which exists upon the Consent of the Crown, Lords, and Commons, and are therefore so many lasting and unerring Proofs of that, as the Original Foundation of that Supreme Power; 'tis not only to oppose the constant Judgment of all learned Men, who have understood and wrote impartially of our Government, but even the Sense of many of those Writings which have been produced and read to you in the Doctor's Defence, and more particularly that of the judicious Mr. Hooker: To deny and condemn the Original Contract between King and People, what other Consequences could it produce, than to unhinge the Government, and to destroy that excellent Ballance of Power, which is secured by it, and by which it has been so long preserved? It must weaken the ancient and just Prerogatives of the Crown, subvert the Foundations of your Lordships Legislative and Judicial Powers, render the Parliamentary Rights of the Commons precarious and uncertain, and terminate at length, in that absurd, yet dangerous Opinion, of the Patriarchal Right, which, when joined together with the Doctrines of absolute and unlimited Non-Resistance, and unconditional Obedience of the Subject to their Prince, compleats that fatal System, which has been, of late, so much contended for, towards the enslaving Mankind.

But your Lordships will consider further, what Use and Application was made of this Passage by the Council; his Conclusion was, That till the Legislature had determined what the Contract was, and what Breach of it shall discharge the Subjects of their Allegiance, he took leave to say, that Resistance still stood upon the Foot of 25 E. 3.

My Lords, we stand here entrusted to maintain the Charge contained in our Article, to assert the Justice of that Resistance only, which brought about the late happy Revolution; and that being the Resistance in question, and to which alone we have apply'd our selves, and in Support of which the Original Contract was mentioned; what is the plain English of this Inference drawn from the denial of it? Does it not amount to an open and positive Declaration from the Mouth of Dr. Sacheverell's Council, That that Resistance which was the necessary Means us'd to bring about the late happy Revolution, instead of being an Honourable and Lawful Resistance, was an Act of Rebellion and High Treason?

Having considered these Particulars, I beg your Indulgence to make a few Observations on the Nature and Method of the Defence to this Article: Your Lordships will remember, tho' it seems to have been totally forgot on the Prisoner's Part, that the Maintenance of this Article has not rested on the Doctor's general Assertion alone, but upon the following Passages, now stated to you; from whence we have undertaken to convince your Lordships, that Dr. Sacheverell has apply'd that general Rule of Non-Resistance to the particular Case of the Revolution; and this having rendered the Independent Consideration of the general Assertion wholly im-material, when you afterwards heard the Admissions that were made by the Council, of the Legality of the Resistance used to bring about the Revolution, your Lordships might reasonably have expected, that the only Question remaining on this Article would have been, How far those subsequent Passages of the Sermon did evince the Intent of the general Assertion? But tho' the Question has been thus plainly stated and maintained, and the Method of the Doctor's Vindication thus clearly pointed out to him, yet how little has been said? How little Notice has been taken of this, which was his proper Defence? The Gentleman who began the Defence has, indeed, denied the Charge of this Article; the Force of that, and of his Argument which followed, have been considered: but if your Lordships shall not think fit to accept the single Attempt as sufficient to acquit the Prisoner, (together with a nervous Observation of the Interposition of some Lines between the general Assertion, and that Sentence wherein the Revolution is named) how much will your Lordships find, throughout that long and labour'd Harangue, that can be judged by you at all material to the true Question before you? For tho' the general Doctrine of Non-Resistance, the Doctrine of the Church of England, as stated in her Homilies, or elsewhere delivered, by which the general Duty of Subjects to the Higher Powers is taught, be owned to be, as unquestionably it is, a godly and wholesome Doctrine; tho' this general Doctrine has been constantly inculcated by the Reverend Fathers of the Church, dead and living, and preached by them as a Preservative against the Popish Doctrine of deposing Princes, and as the ordinary Rule of Obedience; and, tho' the same Doctrine has been preached, maintained and avowed by our most Orthodox and Able Divines from the Time of the Reformation; and, how Innocent a Man soever Doctor Sacheverell had been, if, with an honest and well-meant Zeal, he had preached the same Doctrine, in the same general Terms, in which he found it delivered by the Apostles of Christ, as taught by the Homilies, and the Reverend Fathers of our Church, and, in Imitation of those great Examples, had only press'd the General Duty of Obedience, and the Illegality of Resistance, without taking Notice of any Exception; yet, what Excuse can be derived, to the Matter now in question, from such Considerations as these, in favour of the Doctor, who has not only asserted the general Rule in Terms of the greatest Latitude, but has expressly mention'd and disallow'd the Exception of the Resistance, which brought about the Revolution? and whatever is the Language of our Laws, Repealed or in Force, wherein the same general Duty of Subjects is stated, and the Rule laid down to them, as Necessary and Fundamental for the Safety of the Crown and Government, and the Peace of the Kingdom, and which are meant to enforce and secure their Civil Obedience in ordinary Cases, (but which nobody will say can be construed to extend to the Case of a People threatened by their Prince with total Destruction, the utter Subversion of their Laws, and the Loss of their Religion and Liberties, to a Case of the last Necessity, such a Case as the Revolution was;) yet no Use can possibly be made of such Declarations in our Acts of Parliament to justify the Doctor, who by his general Assertion, has not only out-gone even those general Declarations, but has undeniably applied it in Condemnation of the Case of the Revolution, which is the Charge of this Article.

Your Lordships will allow me to observe yet a little farther: The Nature of this Article appearing to every Body to be of that near Concern to Her Majesty and her Government, you have, indeed, heard very warm and pathetick Expressions of Loyalty, of very tender and dutiful Regard to Her Majesty's Title, and much Labour and Vehemence was used to persuade your Lordships into a Belief of this: But yet, your Lordships could not but observe, where the real Strefs and Force of the Argument was placed, and where it center'd at last; your Lordships will find, the great Effort was made to establish the general Doctrine of Non-Resistance, to inculcate this, in Terms of the largest Extent, in the same universal Terms, wherein the Doctor has delivered it, and than which I am at a Loss to find Words that can extend it further: If your Lordships should think fit to look back, with particular Exactness, upon the several Discourses which have been made from the Bar on this Article, and, for your more accurate Judgment, shall think proper to lay them together, and observe their Consistency; and if from such an Examination, you should see Cause to compare that which was first delivered, with that which was afterwards spoke by the Doctor himself, (for, my Lords, between them the Resemblance seems to be the nearest, and the Difference between them in the Notions of Allegiance but very small,) your Lordships may perhaps, in a great Measure, collect from thence the true Genius of this Defence. Your Lordships will observe, in how different a Manner, with what different Zeal, the main Points in Agitation have been handled by them; I mean, the Justice of the Resistance, which brought about the Revolution, and the general Doctrine of Non-Resistance. It has already been observed to you, that the Doctor himself made no Admissions concerning the Lawfulness of that Resistance, but has used Expressions of due Regard to the Protestant Succession; The Gentleman, who open'd the Defence, it being, it seems, of no Consequence to the present Occasion, came to no Declaration in this Point of the Protestant Succession; But, as to the Honour and Justice of the Revolution, his Approaches are nearer: He has acquainted your Lordships, That there is nothing further from our Hearts, nor any Thing less Necessary for our Defence, than for us to call in Question the Justice of the Revolution. At another Time, he delivered himself in general Terms: Such a Case, (that is a Case of Necessity, a Case never to be mentioned, but to be supposed and implied) the Revolution was: But, in other Parts of the same Discourse, the Expressions even concerning the Revolution will be found to be more reserv'd and wary, and always soften'd with some saving Particle: Thus shy and tender at the best, have the Admissions been from Two Discourses, of the Lawfulness of that Resistance which brought about the late Happy Revolution: But as for the Doctrine of Absolute, Unlimited Non-Resistance, by which, if it be not an Erroneous Doctrine, the Justice of the Resistance, which was the necessary Means that brought about the Revolution, (and in pursuance of which, the Crown was settled on Her Majesty and the Protestant Line) must for ever remain condemn'd. What Fervency and Copiousness of Expression was used to establish that? What Cautions have appear'd to guard and secure this Doctrine as inviolable? How often, and with what Zeal was it inculcated, that the general Doctrine, was that Doctrine which alone was to be preached and press'd? The Exception, The Case of Necessity, the Case of the Revolution, the only Case contended for, was not fit to be mentioned: The Doctor's general Rule was that alone, which was proper to be inculcated and believed; the excepted Case never to be stated, but to be suppos'd or imply'd, and to be left to justify it self.

My Lords, How comes it to pass, that so little Concern has been shewn, in the Course of this Debate from the Bar, to that which was the proper Defence of the Criminal, to clear the Passages of his Sermon from the noxious Meaning they had been shewn to bear? How comes it to pass, that the Honour and Justice of the Revolution is thus tenderly acknowledged; but yet all that has been said to support it, has by this Gentleman been endeavour'd to be enervated, and at the same Time the extremest Zeal shewn to establish the general Position, tho' altogether immaterial? I'll once more venture at a charitable Reconciliation of those seeming Inconsistencies: Upon a very strict and minute Recollection, your Lordships will find that the Resistance, the Necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution, is never once acknowledged in that first Discourse, in plain and express Terms: The Case of Necessity in general, the Case of the Revolution, was so ambiguously spoke of, and so skilfully given up, that, by the kind Help of some happy Distinction, when the Season is proper, 'twill be easy to retrieve it. Tho' your Lordships may remember some plausible Expressions concerning the Justice of the Revolution, yet you will find the real Conclusions of the Discourse tend to condemn it; and such remarkable Instances chosen, such as the Case of the Two Spencers, which, being applied to the Case of the Revolution, represent its Principles damnable, its Consequences detestable, and the Assertors of it deserving Banishment; Your Lordships will find the Argument so well adjusted to the main Point in view, to establish the slavish Doctrine of Absolute, Unlimited, Non-Resistance, that, if the worst should happen, even that against which we are now contending, the judicious Reserves that Gentleman has used on the Point in Question, and the real Service he may be thought to have done to that slavish Doctrine, may, in due Time, raise a Merit in Favour of all its Consequences.

But, as an undeniable Evidence of a sincere Affection to the Case of Necessity, the Case of the Revolution, let me put your Lordships in mind of the Passage quoted from Mr. Pym in his Declaration against Doctor Manwaring: The Doctrine preached in those Days, and for which he was impeached by the Commons, was, the attributing an Absolute Power to the King over the Property of the Subject, tho' with some deceitful Limitations, as that of extreme and urgent Necessity. Mr. Pym had shewn the Vanity and Fruitlessness of that Limitation, it being left to the Prince to determine what is an urgent and pressing Necessity: And to represent the Danger of such a Case, of allowing any Exception upon any Pretence, even that of extreme Necessity, he cites the Charter of Lewis X. of France to the Dutchy of Normandy, wherein that Prince having acknowledged the Franchises of the Dutchy, and granted to them, that for ever afterwards they should be free from all Exactions from him and his Successors, these Words followed, unless great Necessity required: which small Exception, Mr. Pym observed, had in Time devoured all their Immunities. Mr. Pym, in that Speech, arguing against the Position advanc'd by Doctor Manwaring, condemns the least Pretence of any Exception: The Gentleman, who quoted this Passage from him, having endeavour'd to establish his general Doctrine of of Absolute Non-Resistance, the Doctrine preached by Dr. Sacheverell, and having shewn the Danger of mentioning any Exception to it, even that of the Case of Necessity, and such a Case, he had before told your Lordships, the Revolution was, concludes from that Instance, that such Exceptions would in Time devour all Allegiance. This, my Lords, hath been the Method, these have been the Arguments used to acquit the Doctor, to shew the Innocence of his Intention, and that there was no Design either in his Sermon, or his Defence, to condemn the Resistance, the necessary Means which brought about the late Happy Revolution; and from these Observations you may possibly discern the Consistency of the whole Defence. I beg leave only to turn the Case, to suppose a Case of a real Design to condemn the late glorious Revolution, and all the happy Consequences of it: At a Time, when express Declarations of such a wicked and traitorous Intention may not be judged proper; at a Time when some plausible Expressions of the Justice of it, may be thought Useful and Necessary; and, at such a Time, let the Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever, be laid down and enforced in its utmost Extent; let the Danger of stating or mentioning any Exception to it, be strongly inculcated; let the Justice of the Exception, even of the Case of Necessity, such a Case as the Revolution was, be illustrated by an Instance, wherein 'tis expressly condemned; and, May it not be said, 'Tis easy to discern what Spirit such a Person is of, of what Party he is, what he aims at, and what he intends; that he has not been speaking in Defence of the late Revolution, can't be look'd upon to have been arguing for it, and to shew the Justice of it, but was covering the Treason of his Heart and under Pretence of justifying one Revolution, was labouring to bring about another: But, what vain Imaginations must possess those Minds, which can flatter themselves into a Belief, that, even whilst they are maintaining Principles that tend most certainly to undermine the Foundation of Her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession, the most solemn Protestations out of the same Mouth, and in the same Breath, should pass for an Atonement with your Lordships, or give Satisfaction to any that hear them?

My Lords, Your Lordships will consider the evident and necessary Tendency of the Doctrines, which have been preached by the Prisoner, and have been again asserted, though not openly avowed, in their full Extent and Consequence, in Defence of this Article. The Doctrine of Absolute Non-Resistance, the condemning the Original Contract, renouncing the ancient Legal Constitution of the Government, which is our Title to our Liberties, are Positions, which can have no better Tendency, than to shake the present Settlement of the Crown, and our present Establishment, and to make way for the Pretence of a Natural and Divine Right of Succession: Are not those the Principles taught, and avowed by Papists and Nonjurors, and whereon their Hopes are founded? And are they more Wholesome, or less Dangerous, when they fall from the Mouth, or drop from the Pen of the Prisoner, or are asserted in his Defence, tho' gilded over with specious Pretences, and under the Umbrage of a true Son of the Church? If these Doctrines of Unlimited Non-Resistance, of a sole Hereditary and Divine Right of Succession to the Crown, are the very Doctrines, on the Belief of which, the professed Enemies of Her Majesty and Her Government, inviolably engage themselves against Her Title, and against the Protestant Succession; If these are the Tenets, by which they openly condemn the late Glorious Revolution, and all its Consequences: From which Part of this Defence can your Lordships collect the Innocence of the Prisoner? By what way of Reasoning can it be concluded, that the same Opinions, embraced by this Gentleman, do not inevitably engage him in the same Interest?

Sir Peter King. MY Lords, It is my Part to Reply to the Answer that has been given by the Doctor, to the Charge of the Commons of Great Britain, with Relation to the Second Article. When I was entrusted by the Commons to manage this Part of the Charge, I both quoted and read the Passages of the Sermon, to make good that Charge; I did not desire that any Thing should be taken upon Trust, nor any Thing received against him, but what appeared from his plain express Words, or by clear, necessary and unavoidable Consequence. Indeed, after the whole Sermon had been read by the Clerk, I thought it too great a Trouble to your Lordships, to have the Clerk read over the particular Passages again at the Table, and therefore I read them my self, truly and fairly, as they were in his Sermon; and if I had done otherwise, the Doctor and his Council would have set me right. I agree with the Doctor and his Council, that in a Case of this Nature, and I will say further, in all Cases whatsoever relating to Crimes, the Charge must be maintained by positive plain Words, or necessary and unavoidable Inference, such as no reasonable Man can withstand the Light of. And therefore, if there was nothing in this Case but dark Hints, strain'd Innuendo's, and forc'd Constructions, I am sure, neither the Commons of Great Britain, nor my self, would appear before your Lordships with an Attempt to make out a Charge of this Nature; if it is not proved by plain, positive and express Words, or necessary and unavoidable Inference, I am sure your Lordships will never convict him; because it would not be just and right so to do. It is a perverting of Common Justice to condemn a Person without plain and direct Proof; therefore what we represent to your Lordships is, that by plain and clear Passages in his Sermon, he is guilty of the Charge in the Second Article, of maintaining, That the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; and that he is a false Brother with Relation to God, Religion, or the Church, who defends Toleration, and Liberty of Conscience.

When the Doctor put in his Answer to this Article, he had not found out that there was a Toleration granted by Law to the Dissenters; but his Council have now found it out, and they do agree, that there is a Toleration granted by Law, and that it is that Indulgence which is contained in the Act made in the Time of the late King and Queen; but they insist at the same time, that the Doctor in his Sermon has not condemned or censured that Toleration; they say he has condemned a Toleration, but they insinuate there are two Tolerations mentioned in his Sermon, the one a Toleration granted by Law, which he allows and approves of; and the other a general unlimited Toleration, which they admit he does condemn; so that we are now agreed upon the Word Toleration, and they do admit that he doth in his Sermon Censure and Condemn a Toleration: but, say they, it is not the Toleration granted by Law, because he took Care in his Sermon that his general Expressions should not be misconstru'd, and put in this express Caution in the 20th Page: I would not be here misunderstood, as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government has condescended to give 'em, which I am sure all those that wish well to our Church, are ready to grant to Consciences truly scrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has prescribed. This, they say, is an express and full Declaration of his Meaning, that he is not against the particular Toleration granted by Law; and therefore all those other Passages in his Sermon condemning Toleration, are to be applied to a general Toleration, and not the particular Legal one.

When I made out this Charge, I mentioned this Caution of the Doctor's, but at the same Time submitted it, whether such a general Expression as that is, could screen him from other plain Passages in which he has condemned the Toleration; if in other Places he has condemned it, this Caution is but Protestatio contra factum; an oblique Defamation may be as criminal as a direct one: In the common Cases of Scandal, if I obliquely defame another, and describe him so, that it is impossible but every one must know him, it is no Excuse that I do not positively accuse him; so that the Question will be, whether the Doctor has not in the other Passages cited against him, plainly censured and condemned the Toleration granted by Law.

The first Passage cited out of his Sermon, to prove this Charge upon him, was in the 10th Page; I trouble your Lordships with reading it again, that I may be sure to do him no Injury; the Words are, So that in all those Cases before-mentioned, whosoever presumes to innovate, alter, or misrepresent any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be arraigned as a Traytor to our State; Heterodoxy in the Doctrines of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring Rebellion and High Treason in the other, and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate as much to punish and restrain, as the Ecclesiastical.

The former Part is relative to what went before; the latter Part is a general Assertion, that Heterodoxy in the Doctrines of the Church infers Rebellion and High Treason in the State.

The relative Part of this Clause has Relation to the several Doctrines mentioned before; among which, one of the Cases and Instances of false Brotherhood is, the affirming that the Divine Apostolical Institution of Episcopacy is a Novel Doctrine, not sufficiently warranted by Scripture; whoever affirms this, is guilty of an Innovation or Alteration of the Articles of our Church. Now the Dissenters of all Sorts universally hold this Proposition, and they are exempted from subscribing the 36th Article, which asserts Episcopacy: But, saith the Doctor, tho' they are exempted, yet whosoever asserts this Proposition, is to be punished as a Traytor to the State, as well as an Enemy to the Church.

The Learned Civilian of Council for the Doctor says, that the reading the whole Passage will show, that it was not intended for the Dissenters, but for one in Holy Orders; that if such an one should maintain this Doctrine, he would be an Apostate from his own Order; now this Allegation is true, as it stands in Page 8; absolutely considered in itself, it is there applied to one in Holy Orders; but as it stands in Relation to this Clause in Page 10, it is a general Assertion, that whosoever innovates, or alters that Article of the Church, which the Dissenters do, ought to be arraigned as a Traytor to the State.

Another Answer that hath been given hereto, is, That the Doctor there means those who are for Innovations and Alterations in Matters of Faith; which can't respect the Dissenters or their Toleration, because the Dissenters agree with the Church in Matters of Faith, and differ only in Matters of Discipline. But if you give this Turn to it, it alters the Sense and Meaning of the Doctor; for he is not speaking here of Matters of Faith, in Contradistinction to Matters of Discipline, but he is speaking in general of the Articles of Faith of our Church; whoever presumes in any of the Cases before-mentioned to innovate, alter, or misrepresent any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be arraigned as a Traytor to the State. Now what are the Articles of the Faith of our Church? Are they not the Thirty Nine Articles? Are not they the Articles of the Faith and Religion of the Church? Doth not the Thirty Sixth Canon expressly require the Clergy to subscribe willingly, and ex animo, that all and every the Articles of Religion, being in Number Thirty Nine, are agreeable to the Word of God? Now if the Thirty Nine Articles be the Articles of Faith of our Church, and the Dissenters disbelieve the Thirty Sixth Article; and if for that Innovation or Alteration they are to be arraign'd as Traytors to the State, what then is become of the Toleration, that exempts them from the Penalties, and from subscribing the said Thirty Sixth Article?

As to the general Proposition immediately following in the same Clause, viz. Heterodoxy in the Doctrine of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring Rebellion and High Treason in the other, and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate as much to punish and restrain, as the Ecclesiastical: I don't remember that any Answer whatsoever was given to it by the Doctor or his Council. And I pray your Lordships cast your Eyes on this, and see here is an Affirmation, that any different Opinion in any of the Articles of the Church, is a Crime against the State. Now all the Dissenters are exempted by the Act of Toleration from subscribing Three Articles and an half, others from Four and an half, and others from all. And when this Act grants them all these Exemptions, shall it be affirmed that this Heterodoxy allowed by that Act is High Treason and Rebellion, and that they ought to be arraigned as Traytors? I submit to every one's Judgment, whether any Thing can be more plain against the Toleration than this.

The next Passage cited out of his Sermon, to prove the Charge of the Second Article, is in the 16th and 17th Pages: What could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church can't be pull'd down, it may be blown up; and no Matter with these Men how 'tis destroyed, so that it is destroyed.

My Lords, Here is an Affirmation, that Toleration was doing open Violence to the Church, that the False Brethren had a Design by Toleration to pull down the Church. Now the Answer given to this by one of the Council, is what one can scarce imagine he was serious in, viz. That this doth not suggest the Toleration to be unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable, but that it is rather a Commendation of the Toleration, because it shews that it could not do the Church any Hurt, it could not pull down the Church, and therefore they have found out a more pestilent Way, of Occasional Conformity and Moderation. But all that can be collected from hence, is, that Toleration is a less successful Evil than Moderation: Toleration was a storming the Church by Violence, and an endeavouring ing to pull it down; but though, by the good Providence of God, it hath not been so successful an Evil as Moderation, which is a secret Treachery to undermine the Church, and blow it up, yet it is an Evil: And to suppose the Church to be either pulled down, or blown up, which way soever it be done, it is so great an Evil, that every Member of the Church must be for preventing it, and using all his Endeavours to prevent both those Evils; and therefore to represent Toleration to be such an Evil to the Church, as to be doing open Violence to the Church, and pulling it down, is an undue Reflection on the Fathers of the Church, and on that Parliament that granted that Toleration, as if they concurred in Endeavours to pull down the Church, and destroy it.

Another Passage, in Page 14. of the Sermon, was cited by the Council of the other Side, as a Passage cited by me to make out the Charge against the Doctor; but herein they mistook me, it was not cited by me for that Purpose, but to shew that the Doctor understood the Act of Indulgence to be a Toleration; and the Passage was this, Certainly the Toleration was never intended to indulge and cherish such Monsters and Vipers in our Bosom, that scatter their Pestilence at Noon-day, and will rend, distract, and confound the firmest and best settled Constitution in the World.

I cited this Passage to shew, that the Doctor himself, at the Time he preached this Sermon, knew what was meant by the Toleration; and it plainly proves it, and the Doctor himself doth not now disown it. But as to the Proposition itself contained in that Part of his Sermon, I agree with him that the Toleration was not intended, and I hope will never be made use of, to support Atheism, Deism, Tritheism, or any such Monsters and Vipers, but only dissenting Protestants.

The next Passage I cited was in the 8th Page. If upon all Occasions to comply with the Dissenters, both in publick and private Affairs, as Persons of tender Conscience and Piety, to promote their Interests in Elections, to sneak to them for Places and Preferments, to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; and under the Pretence of Moderation, to excuse their Separation, and lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high; if to court the Fanaticks in private, and to bear them with Patience, if not Approbation, rail at and blaspheme the Church, and upon Occasion to justify the King's Murder; if to flatter both Dead and Living in their Vices, and to tell the World, that if they had Wit, and Money enough, they need no Repentance, and that only Fools and Beggars can be damn'd; and if these, I say, are the modish and fashionable Criteria of a true Churchman, God deliver us from such false Brethren. So that here the Doctor makes it one of the Characters of a false Brother to defend Toleration, and Liberty of Conscience.

The Answer given to it is this, That where the Doctor blames those that defend Toleration, it is not those that defend that only and singly, and do no other thing, but they must at the same time not only defend Toleration, but excuse the Separation, not by reason of the Toleration, but by laying the Fault on the Sons of the Church for carrying things too high: He don't blame them that barely justify Toleration, unless they fall too on the Sons of the Church for carrying things too high. But whether or no that Place is capable of such an Interpretation, your Lordships will be the best Judges, by looking on the Place, and considering whether any two of those Characters are to be united in any one Person to make him a false Brother. Whether these several Characters are not so many different Criteria of false Brotherhood; if he does defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; if he does excuse their Separation, and lay the Fault upon the True Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high, &c. They are all different Marks of false Brotherhood; so that whosoever defends Liberty of Conscience, and the Toleration, is a false Brother.

It was also answered, That in the Act of Indulgence there are a great many Restrictions; and therefore this Passage must be understood of a Toleration of such as are not qualified by the Act to receive it: And for that end the Act was read, in which are several Restrictions; and the Toleration is not unlimited, but to Persons under such and such Qualifications, conforming themselves to the Rules there laid down. But what Foundation is there for this Answer in the Passage itself? Doth not he there condemn Toleration generally? Doth not an universal indefinite Proposition include all manner of Toleration, whether general or special? If he had meant it in this restrained Sense, he should then have express'd himself, That he that defends Toleration, except such Toleration as is allowed by Law, is a false Brother; but not doing so, but expressing it generally, it is plain, that he has condemned that Toleration that is granted by Law: And it is submitted to your Lordships, that this is a plain Proof against him of this Article.

The next Passage, is that relating to the Perfidiousness of Archbishop Grindall, in deluding Queen Elizabeth to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline: The Doctor, in his Answer, did conceive he had good Authority from History to make out that Assertion; but whether he had or no, he did apprehend that such Assertion was no Proof of his maintaining or suggesting, that the present legal Toleration was unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable.

I did, in making out the Charge, agree with the Doctor, That whether he was, or was not mistaken in that Fact, was not the material Point in Question; but that he had put it on the right Question, Whether that Assertion (true or false) relating to Archbishop Grindall, was a Condemnation of the Toleration now granted by Law? To that I principally applied myself, to shew that that Fact, as stated by the Doctor, was a Censure of the Toleration; not forgetting, at the same time, to say something in Vindication of the Memory of that great Prelate.

But now, the Doctor's Council (in their Defence) have in a great measure quitted the true Point that the Doctor rightly put it upon in his Answer, and instead of endeavouring to shew that this is no Reflection on the Toleration, have rather endeavoured to shew, that this Fact of the Archbishop is true; That the Reason of his Disgrace was, for deluding the Queen to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline, and for giving up the Discipline of the Church: That at that time, there was no Law to indulge any Separation from the Church; and therefore for the Head of the Church, under the Queen, to give up the Discipline of the Church, was an high Crime in him; and tho' it be a harsh Term, yet it was true to call him a Perfidious Prelate, and False Son of the Church.

For this End, they did produce and read two Letters; the one from Queen Elizabeth, to the Bishops throughout England, for suppressing the Exercise called Propheying, and the other of the Archbishop to the Council; and out of these two, they say, there is Proof out of the Archbishop's own Mouth, That the Reason why he was under a Suspension, was for deluding her Majesty to permit a Toleration of the Genevian Discipline; and that he acknowledged the Justice of his Punishment for that Crime. And they farther aggravate it, That it would be an invidious Reflection on the Character of that glorious Queen, that she should cause an Archbishop to be suspended, for prosecuting Julio the Italian for having two Wives, or for not giving up the Palace at Lambeth to the Earl of Leicester: As if I had insinuated, or could have imagined, that the apparent visible Reason of the Disgrace of the Archbishop, were these Things! No; it can't be thought I meant so. The apparent visible Cause of Grindall's Disgrace was, no doubt, the encouraging of the Exercise called Prophefying; and Queen Elizabeth knew no other: But yet the real Spring, the secret History, and true Reason, was the Artifice of the Earl of Leicester, who had the greatest Power and Credit at that time with the Queen. The good Archbishop had, by his Prosecution of Julio the Italian Physician, and by his Refusal to alienate Lambeth, offended this great Earl, who thereupon meditates Revenge against him: And knowing the Archbishop to be a great Favourer and Promoter of the Exercises called Prophefying, which were far from being Conventicles, or Parts of the Genevian Discipline; he misrepresents these to the Queen, and by those Means incensed the Queen; and the Queen was angry with the Archbishop, only upon the account of these *Prophefying*s. But these Misrepresentations, that incensed the Queen, had not been, if the Archbishop had not first incensed Leicester in the forementioned two Particulars. To make this out to be the Fact, I desire your Lordships Patience, whilst I refer to one or two Histories of good Credit. Fuller, in the ninth Book of his Ecclesiastical History, p. 130. after he hath recited a long Letter of Grindall's to the Queen about this Matter, thus concludes: Alas! all in vain: Leicester had so filled her Majesty's Ears with Complaints against him, there was no room to receive his Petition. Indeed Leicester cast a covetous Eye on Lambeth-House, alledging as good Arguments for his obtaining thereof, as ever were urged by Ahab for Naboth's Vineyard. Now Grindall, tho' generally condemned for Remissness in this kind, (parting with more from his See, than ever his Successors thank'd him for) stoutly opposed the alienating of this his principal Palace, and made the Leicesterian Party to malice him.

This is as express an Account as can be, that this was one of the secret Springs of that Prosecution: And as for the other, That he carried on the Prosecution against Julio, that is taken notice of by the same Author, in Page 163. and by Camden, in his History of Queen Elizabeth, and other Authors: So that the true secret Reason of Grindall's Disgrace, was not for tolerating the Genevian Discipline. And indeed it would be a Paradox, that the Earl of Leicester, who was the great Patron and Support of the Puritans, should run down this Archbishop for encouraging of Puritanism. Can that be thought? No: It shews plainly, there was some other Reason. And it is no Reflection on Queen Elizabeth, that she was deceived by the Misrepresentation of a Person on whom she entirely relied. Princes are not exempt from the common Frailties of human Nature, and may be imposed on by those whom they most trust.

But, my Lords, without considering the latent Causes of his Disgrace, let us consider the visible Cause, which was known only to Queen Elizabeth. Do the Letters (which they have produced) prove, that the Archbishop suffer'd for deluding the Queen to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline? It appears thereby, that Queen Elizabeth was displeased at those Exercises called Prophefying, which the Archbishop encouraged and favoured; but it is a great Mistake to think, that those *Prophefying*s were Conventicles, or Assemblies of Puritans: They were really Meetings of the Parochial Clergy of the Church of England, (which since have been called Conferences,) to improve one another in the Expounding of the Scriptures. The Manner of these *Prophefying*s was this: The Minister within each Arch-deaconry, or some other Precinct, met on some Week-day, in the most noted Place in that Precinct; some ancient grave Minister, appointed by the Bishop, did preside: Then every Minister successively (the youngest still beginning) did handle some Text of Scripture, shewing the Sense of the Place, the Propriety of the Words, the Diversity of Interpretation, the Virtues enjoined, and the Vices prohibited. No Layman was ever suffered to speak, nor any Clergyman, unless first licensed by the Bishop. This was that which they called Prophefying, and continued about two Hours; and then the Conclusion was with a Prayer for the Queen and all Estates, as is appointed by the Book of Common-Prayer, and a Psalm. Now can any one think, this was an Encouragement of the Genevian Discipline?

The Parochial Clergy met by consent of the Bishop, and discoursed about the Meaning of some Text of Scripture, and closed with a Prayer, as is appointed in the Common-Prayer-Book, and with a Psalm: And can this be said to be encouraging the Genevian Discipline? Can this be called the Holding of Conventicles; or receding from the Discipline of the Church? Nothing like it: Tho', if it were, it appears by the Letters, that he did not delude the Queen to encourage the Genevian Discipline. No; if this was the Genevian Discipline, the Queen would not be deluded by him; and because he would not obey the Queen in suppressing these *Prophefying*s, this was the apparent cause of his Disgrace.

As to the Letter, because it is said the Archbishop owns his Crime; how does he do it? I can't deny, says he, *but that I have been commanded, both by the Queen's Majesty Herself, and also by divers of your Honourable Lordships in her Name, to suppress all those Exercises within my Province, that are commonly called Prophefying*s. He did not deny the Queen had given him that Command, or that he did not comply with it: But, saith he, I do protest before God, the Judge of all Hearts, that I did not of any Stubbornness or Willfulness refuse to accomplish the same, but only upon Conscience: And goes on and shews the Reasons on which that Conscience was founded. He denied it not out of Stubbornness or Disobedience, but out of a Persuasion of Conscience, because he found it profitable and useful to the Church. Well, how did he behave himself under this? And whereas, says he, I have sustained the Restraint of my Liberty, and Sequestration of my Jurisdiction, now by the space of six Months; I am so far from repining thereat, or thinking myself injuriously or hardly dealt withal therein at her Majesty's hands, that I do thankfully embrace, and frankly, with all Humility, acknowledge her princely, gracious, and rare Clemency toward me; who having
Authority

Authority and Power to have used greater and sharper Severity against me, and for good Policy and Example thinking it so expedient, hath notwithstanding dealt so mercifully, mildly and gently with me.

What Language more becoming a grave Prelate could be used? He patiently submits to her Majesty's Authority, neither murmuring, nor obstinate: But there being a superior Obligation of Conscience, which it was not in the power of any Man to dispense with, he thinks himself obliged, as a true Example to all Clergymen and others, to submit to the Dictates of his Conscience; but still with Patience, Calmness and Obedience.

Is there any thing in this, that looks like giving up the Interests of the Church? Not only this good Archbishop, but several others of the best Bishops of those Times, had those Exercises in their Dioceses, and concurred with him in the Encouragement of them. And can it be thought, that those Bishops, who were Exiles in Queen Mary's Time, and were afterwards the happy and glorious Instruments, under God, in settling the Liturgy and the Articles of the Church, were for giving up the Establishment of the Church, by introducing that which is now insinuated to be the Genevian Discipline? But those Bishops then thought, it was a likely way to make an honest, learned, and laborious Clergy. Is there any thing in this, to occasion the calling him a perfidious Prelate? A perfidious Man, is he that violates his Conscience, to obtain a temporal End; but he chose to lose the Queen's Favour, rather than part with a good Conscience.

I never found, that Archbishop Grindall was ever spoke hardly of by any English Divine of Credit, till the time of Archbishop Laud; and then, to extol Archbishop Laud for an active, zealous Prelate, it became the Fashion to run down his Predecessor, Abbot, as a remiss Man; to court the present Archbishop, by detracting from the Memory of the last. And, to carry on the Compliment, a Parallel was made between Archbishop Grindall, and his Successor Whitgift. I only mention this, to shew that for a long time the Memory of that good Archbishop was had in Esteem; and he was always looked upon as a principal Father of the Reformation of the Church, before this Time.

But, my Lords, it is now time to come to the main Point; and that is, Whether or no the Doctor's Representation of Archbishop Grindall, as a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for doing what he lays to his Charge; and, Whether his Commendation of Queen Elizabeth, for the Resolution she took to suppress the Dissenters, and for her Prudence in exercising wholesome Severities on them, whereby the Crown sat easy on her Head, be a Censure or Condemnation of the present Toleration?

As to this, the Council for the Doctor first say, That in Queen Elizabeth's Time, Schism was in its Infancy; the Number of Dissenters were but few, and therefore the Exercising of Severities at that time was wholesome, because it might have crushed them in their Beginning, and prevented the growing Encroachments of those Persons: But at the time when the Act of Toleration was made, the Dissenters were increased, and were Possessors of great Property, and it was reasonable to grant them a Toleration; for it might be a Disturbance to the State, to exercise those Severities upon them, which might have been safely done in the time of Queen Eliza- beth, when Schism was in its Infancy, and their Numbers few: And thence they infer, that what was spoken of the Toleration then, can't be applied to the Toleration now.

My Lords, supposing the Fact to be true, then it follows, that the Justice and Reasonableness of the present Toleration depends only on the Strength and Number of the Dissenters: When they are strong and numerous, then they are to be tolerated and permitted; but when their Numbers decrease, and it shall be alledged that they are but few, then they are to be crushed, and the wholesome Severities are to be renewed upon them again; notwithstanding the Preamble of the Bill to prevent Occasional Conformity, which says, "That Persecution for Conscience only, is directly contrary to the Profession of the Christian Religion, and particularly to the Doctrine of the Church of England, and that the Act of Toleration ought to be inviolably preserved." If it ought to be inviolably preserved, then, whether the Dissenters in England be more or less, they ought to be tolerated.

This brings to my Mind the memorable Edict that was published by the French King for reversing the Edict of Nants, in October 1685. the Preamble of which Edict recites, "That by reason of the great Troubles and Wars occasioned by those of the Reformed Religion, his Grandfather Henry the Fourth had given them Liberty by the Edict of Nants, retaining notwithstanding a Design of bringing all back again to the Romish Church; and his Father and himself had had all along the same Design; and that in his Time the best and greatest part of the Protestants were converted to the Catholick Faith, and that by reason thereof the Execution of that Edict was become of no use; and therefore, entirely to wipe out the Memory of those Troubles and Confusions which the Protestants had occasioned, he thereby revoked that Edict."

May it not be said in this case, That in Queen Elizabeth's Time, because the Number of Dissenters were few, therefore those Severities were good; and that when the Toleration-Act was made, there were greater Numbers, and therefore those Severities were then fit to be taken away; but now the Dissenters are but few again, therefore it may be fit to return to those Severities again.

Another Answer that hath been given is, That in Queen Elizabeth's Time there was no Toleration established by Law, and all the Doctor aimed at was to excite the Magistrates to put the Laws in Execution against such Offenders as are not exempted by the Toleration-Act. But I submit to your Lordships, whether the Words are capable of that Interpretation. Here is a Commendation of the Piety and Zeal of Queen Elizabeth, who resolved entirely to suppress the Dissenters, and she in her Prudence put those wholesome Severities in Execution. What those wholesome Severities were, your Lordships have been told; they were Hanging, Burning, Abjuration, Confiscation, Imprisonment, Loss of Estate, Liberty and Life: I say no more of them; but I believe there is not one Person here, but if these Severities were to be inflicted on him, would be far from thinking them wholesome, and desire to be excused from them. I would not be thought in any thing to reflect on the Memory of that glorious Queen, who was so eminent an Instrument of God, to deliver this Kingdom from Popery, from the Power of Spain, and to settle the Protestant Religion among us ; but it must be confess'd, there were these Spots and Blemishes in her Reign, permitted by God's Providence for wise Ends and Purposes ; and this should raise our Gratitude to Almighty God, and our Thanks to her present Majesty, whose Reign hath exceeded her Predecessor's Queen Elizabeth, without being chequer'd with any of those Spots or Stains. And as Queen Elizabeth preserved this Kingdom from the Monarchy of Spain, so her Majesty has preserved us from the united Power of France and Spain, been the Terror of her Enemies abroad, whilst at the same time she has, with universal Clemency and Justice, cherished and protected all her Subjects at home ; and as by these Means she has engaged in the strongest Affection the Hearts of all her People, so no doubt they will always continue to retain the strictest Duty to a Queen, who hath been so universally good to all her Subjects.

The last Part of the Charge is, That the Doctor asserts it is the Duty of superior Pastors to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons entitled to the Benefit of the Toleration ; and insolently dares or defies any Power on Earth to reverse such Sentences. One of the Council said, that the thundering out those Anathema's, is no more than declaring the Judgments of God denounced in Scripture against the Wickedness of Men ; and that he desires the superior Pastors to denounce them, because the greater the Authority of the Person denouncing them is, the greater Influence they will have on the Minds of the People. But the Anathema's he excites them to, are Ecclesiastical Anathema's, which are plainly Ecclesiastical Censures and Excommunications ; it is a plain exciting the Superior Pastors to denounce Excommunications and other Ecclesiastical Censures. It is said, that this Expression is ty'd up only to those Anathema's and Sentences that are ratify'd in Heaven, and those, they say, no Power on Earth can reverse. I shall not enter into that Question, whether this is a Proposition strictly just in Divinity : All I shall say as to that, is this, That all who have wrote the highest of the Power of the Keys, allow and maintain that there is a double Power, a Power of remitting as well as retaining, of loosing as well as of binding, of opening as well as of shutting, both exercised by the Church on Earth. If the superior Pastor has for good Cause bound or shut any Person out of the Church, that Sentence is ratify'd in Heaven ; but yet notwithstanding, if that Person, so censured, reforms and amends, and the Church on Earth restore him again, the first Sentence, tho' ratified in Heaven, is vacated and done away by the Church's Power on Earth.

But this is not the Matter now before your Lordships ; the Question is, Whether he excites the Superior Pastors of the Church to thunder out their Anathema's against Persons that are entitled to the Toleration ; and I think, that he does so, is owned by his Council ; for they say, that Schism doth expose a Man to the Censures of the Church ; that the Dissenters were Schismatics before the Act of Toleration, and that that Act don't excuse the Schism ; and therefore remaining Schismatics still, they are still liable to the Censures of the Church : Now I do agree with the Doctor, that the Act of Toleration hath made no Alteration as to the Sin of Schism ; if the Dissenters were Schismatics before the Toleration, they are Schismatics still ; and taking that for granted, then here is the Force of the Doctor's Argument : The Dissenters were Schismatics before the Act of Toleration ; as they were Schismaticks before, so they are Schismatics still ; it is the Duty of all superior Pastors to thunder out their Anathema's against Schismatics ; when they thunder out those Anathema's, they are ratify'd in Heaven ; whatever is ratify'd in Heaven, no Power on Earth can reverse ; therefore, tho' the Dissenters be exempted from human Penalties by the Toleration Act, and are thereby preserved in the free Exercise of their Religion and Consciences ; yet notwithstanding that, Let the Superior Pastors do their Duty, and thunder out their Anathema's against them, and let any Power on Earth reverse those Anathema's if they can. Now can there be a more plain, positive and direct Proof of this part of the Article, than this is ? Can any thing be a clearer Evidence to prove this last part of the Charge against him, That he Suggests and Maintains, that it is the Duty of Superior Pastors to Thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons entitled to the Benefit of the Toleration Act, and that he insolently Dares or Defies any Power on Earth to Reverse such Sentences ?

My Lords, This is what I have to offer by way of Reply : There is a Gentleman to come after me, who will amply supply what I have omitted, and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordships any further.

Then the Lords adjourned to their House above.

Friday, March 10. The Tenth Day.

THE Lords coming down into Westminster-Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows :

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made : Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

The Doctor appearing at the Bar accordingly, with his Council, as before :

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen, you that are Managers for the House of Commons may proceed in your Reply.

Mr. Cooper. MY Lords, when by Command of the Commons, I spoke to your Lordships a few days since, in Maintenance of the Second Article, towards the Conclusion of what I then said, I presented to your Lordships a short View of what I apprehended we might reasonably expect would be the Consequence of the Doctor's bitter Investives against the Act of Toleration, and the Persons intended to be protected by it. I likewise took notice of those Heats and Disputes, of the Feuds and Animosities, which were then apparently stirred up throughout the Kingdom.

I am sorry to have so early an occasion to say, that my Apprehensions in this Particular were so well grounded : Your Lordships have seen, that this seditious Libel, under the specious Title of a Sermon, calculated to seduce and delude the Rabble, has, even during the Continuance of the Trial, produced an actual Rebellion ; in which several Places of Religious Worship (appointed for those Persons, who are by Law tolerated and allowed, but but have the Misfortune nevertheless to be represented by Doctor Sacheverell as necessary to be destroyed) have been accordingly pulled down, and burnt, in Defiance of the Supreme Power of the Kingdom; and this, my Lords, at the Instigation of one who would be thought an Advocate for Passive Obedience.

I could wish the Prisoner's indiscreet Behaviour (which seems to have abused the Liberty with which your Lordships have indulged him) may not unhappily have given some occasion to the Outrage and Violence of late committed, notwithstanding the Apology he has made in this Particular.

Sure I am, that Discord, which flames in the Kingdom, was unheard-of among us, until the Toleration was thus publicly and seditiously branded, until Doctor Sacheverell had presumed to represent it to the People, it's impossible to say how! without referring to his whole Libel.

His Council have observed, that the Second Article contains several Charges, and have insisted that the Passages given in Evidence by the Commons, are not sufficient to maintain the first and second; and as to the third and fourth, they seem rather to justify than deny those Branches of the Charge.

My Lords, the Commons apprehend, notwithstanding what has been said, First,

That Doctor Sacheverell has plainly suggested and maintained, That the Toleration granted to Dissenters is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable.

This, my Lords, we insist he has done, not in ambiguous or doubtful Words, not in uncertain Expressions, but in direct and positive Assertions.

The Council admit, That to speak against a Law in Being cannot be justified. The Act of Toleration is not only a Law in Being, but is a Law which has visibly attained the End for which it was made; that is to say, by giving Ease to scrupulous Consciences in the Exercise of Religion, it has proved an effectual Means to unite her Majesty's Protestant Subjects in Interest and Affection.

Yet, my Lords, this Law, which, by the Experience of more than twenty Years, has been found so useful and necessary, hath been traduced and arraigned by the Prisoner, both from the Pulpit, and the Press, with a malicious and seditious Purpose, to destroy the publick Peace, and Security of the Kingdom.

This Offence, it seems, is of too high a Nature to be justified by the Prisoner and his Council, and therefore it is thought more expedient to deny it. The Turn that's given is this; say they, Doctor Sacheverell affirms nothing touching Legal Indulgence or Toleration, but all that he has said respects only Universal Toleration.

My Lords, I thought I had obviated this Excuse, by observing that this Notion of universal Toleration has been conceived and brought forth since the Impeachment.

However I am willing to enter into the Question: Whether the Toleration mentioned in the Libel, is intended or can be understood of Universal Toleration.

Fol. 34. Your Lordships will find these Words: Nay, now they have advanced themselves, from the Religious Liberty our Gracious Sovereign has indulged them, to claim a Civil Right, as they term it, and to juggle the Church out of her Establishment, by hoisting their Toleration into its Place.

My Lords, Will any Man deviate so far from Sense, as to say, that the Doctor here meant universal Toleration, in the Sense the Doctor and his Council have defined it? Is Universal Toleration a Religious Liberty, with which our Gracious Sovereign hath indulged her Subjects? Nay, my Lords, Have not every one of them argued, and that rightly, that the Doctor's Universal Toleration is not tolerated by Law? That Atheists, Deists, Tritheists, Socinians, and those who go to no religious Place of Worship, are not exempted from the former Penalties? How then is it possible the Doctor should be understood, as speaking of Universal Toleration in this Passage? Is not this directly and positively affirmed of the Toleration, with which the Dissenters are indulged by our Gracious Sovereign? Can your Lordships conceive the Dissenters are not the Persons intended, when he says, They claim a Civil Right, as they term it, to juggle the Church out of her Establishment, by hoisting their Toleration into its Place?

Again, Folio 25. They thrive upon Concessions, take Permission for Power, and advance Toleration into an Establishment.—Pray, my Lords, What Concessions have been made to Persons not within the Benefit of the Act of Toleration? What Permission is it they can be said to take for Power? What Toleration have they to advance into an Establishment?

My Lords, Folio 14, and in many other Places, your Lordships cannot but see that all the Doctor's Spleen is levelled at the legal Indulgence or Toleration. But it is mispending your Time, to prove what it is impossible not to know and be convinced of, upon reading every Passage in the Libel where Toleration is but so much as mentioned.

The next Thing they urge in the Doctor's Defence is, That if his Expressions do relate to the Legal Indulgence or Toleration, they are dubious and uncertain, that nothing can be inferred from them without Innuendo's and forced Constructions.

My Lords, Now the Question is, Whether Doctor Sacheverell's Expressions relating to the Toleration, and the Persons indulged, are dubious and uncertain? Whether any Innuendo or forced Construction is necessary to demonstrate their Malignity.

Your Lordships will be pleased to remember, that the Council, from the first to the last, maintained very strenuously (as did the Doctor likewise in his Speech) that altho' the Act of Toleration exempts the Dissenters from Penalties, yet they remain Schismatics notwithstanding; for, say they, Diffension was Schism before the Statute, and a bare Exemption from a Penalty has not alter'd the Case, but the same remains Schism still; and this Position, I find, is agreeable to the Doctor's Opinion as delivered in his Sermon, with this Addition only, that all Schism and Separation is damnable Sin, without making any Allowance for Ignorance, or Prejudice of Education.

His Words are these, Folio 8. Is this the Spirit and Doctrine of our holy Mother? To assert Separation from her Communion to be no Schism; or if it is, that Schism is no damnable Sin.

My Lords, when I observe in this and other Passages what Spirit this Man is of, I wonder not to find, that the most Christian Virtues of Charity and Moderation are mentioned by him with Slight and Contempt. Folio 25, you will find him citing a Passage from St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, Chap. 2. after which he adds these Words, If our Dissenters, says he, had lived in those Times, they would have branded him (i. e. St. Paul) for an intemperate, hot, furious Zealot, that wanted to be sweetened by the gentle Spirit of Charity and Moderation, forsooth! My Lords, if our Dissenters had lived lived in those Days, they would have been highly to blame, if they had branded the Apostle with those opprobrious Names; whoever peruses that Chapter, will find there is not the least occasion for it. But Doctor Sacheverell would willingly have St. Paul thought like himself.

My Lords, I cannot take upon me to say what the Dissenters would have said, had they lived in St. Paul's Days: But for my own part, I cannot forbear saying now, That since it appears to be the Doctor's Opinion that all Separatists are Schismatics, and that all Schismatics are damned, I cannot but think that Doctor Sacheverell wants to be sweetened by that ridicul'd Spirit of Charity and Moderation. I own, my Lords, I was amazed to hear this Gentleman in his Speech affirm, that he had not betrayed any want of Christian Moderation in his Sermon: I wish he has not been unmindful even of Christianity itself; when it is so apparent that in this short Sentence, and in the Passage (Folio 24.) which I formerly cited at large, he has sentenced to Eternal Damnation, not only the Dissenters of whatsoever Denomination, but those also who defend the Toleration.

It is to be hoped, some things which he has vowed and said for himself in his Defence, may have more of Truth in them than this has.

But, my Lords, to return: The Doctor and his Council are agreed that all Dissenters are Schismatics; consequently when he speaks of Schism and Schismatics, he must mean the Dissenters; and then be pleased, my Lords, to judge if the Doctor's Expressions touching the Toleration, and the Dissenters, can be said to be dubious; on the contrary, whether they are not plain, positive and certain.

Before I enter into this Matter, I cannot but take notice again of that remarkable Passage, (Fol. 16 and 17.) What could not be gained by Toleration, must be brought about by Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church can't be pull'd down, it may be blown up; and no matter with these Men how it is destroyed, so it is destroyed. My Lords, Is not here a direct Assertion that the Toleration is downright open Violence, and Occasional Conformity secret Treachery? Is not here an Assertion, that altho' the Toleration has not been able to answer the End for which it was designed, i. e. to pull down the Church, yet Occasional Conformity may blow it up? Pray, my Lords, what Construction can these Words admit of, No matter with these Men how it is destroyed, so it is destroyed? What Men are here intended? Even Dissenters and Occasional Conformists.

Is this Passage doubtful and ambiguous? Is here any occasion for a forced Construction, or an Innuendo? My Lords, 'tis most scandalously plain, and as plainly seditious.

Your Lordships have observed, that neither the Doctor, or any of his Council, (one only excepted) have taken the least notice, in his Answer, of this Passage: It was produced and given in Evidence against him, and twice at least mentioned by the Managers. I wonder the Author would not vouchsafe to explain it. Is not this Silence a Confession of his Guilt?

The Council that did mention it, was pleased to say, that it rather commended the Toleration than found fault with it; as if it was some Credit to the Toleration, which was intended to pull down and destroy the Church, that it had not done it. In what Humour, my Lords, that Answer was made, to so high and criminal a Charge, I know not; the Commons might reasonably have expected a more serious Answer. But, my Lords, from hence we conclude that no Answer can be given to it.

Again (Folio 10.) the Doctor affirms, That whoever presumes to alter or innovate any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be arraigned as a Traitor to the State; Heterodoxy in the Doctrines of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring Rebellion and High Treason in the other, and consequently a Crime that concerns as much the Civil Magistrate to punish and restrain, as the Ecclesiastical. Then he goes on, and adds, This Assertion at first View, may look like an high-flown Paradox.—I own, at first View it looked to me something like it, and I am not yet convinced but it is so.

Are not the Dissenters heterodox in Opinion? consequently they are Rebels and Traitors, according to Doctor Sacheverell, and ought to be punished by the civil Magistrate as such: That is to say, they are to be hanged as Rebels, and damned as Dissenters.

Still, my Lords, we have the Doctor's Word for it, he has not betrayed the least Want of Christian Charity or Moderation.

Many are the Paragraphs in this Libel equally obnoxious, and which, like these, are too plain to admit of any Answer.

My Lords, I shall not lose Time as to the Second Head, or Charge, in this Article. Folio 8. you will find it asserted, as plain as Words can speak, that to defend Toleration is the Mark or Characteristick of a False Brother; and (Folio 24.) you will find his Portion assigned him, with all the rest of the False Brethren, with Hypocrites and Unbelievers, with all Lyars, in the Lake which burns with Fire and Brimstone, with the grand Father of Falshood, the Devil and his Angels.

My Lords, the Charge which relates to Archbishop Grindall is, That Doctor Sacheverell asserts, Queen Elizabeth was deluded by him to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline; and that, to shew his Resentment against the Archbishop for favouring Toleration, he calls him a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate.

The Doctor, throughout his Sermon, is arguing with a furious and intemperate Zeal against the present Toleration; he is representing it as a Law that gives Encouragement and Protection to Schismatical Impostors, Enthusiasts, Hypocrites, to a mungrel Union of Sects, to Fanaticks, Rebels, Traitors, Atheists, Deists, Tritheists, Socinianists, to the Principles of Fanaticism, Regicide, and Anarchy, to Monsters and Vipers, that scatter their Pestilence at Noon-day, to Jews, Quakers, and Mahometans; in a word, to all false Brethren; and after a great deal more of this unprecedented Language, he breaks out, (Folio 19.) These Charges are so flagrant and undeniable, that a Man must be very weak, or something worse, that thinks or pretends the Dissenters are to be gained, or won over, by any other Grants or Indulgence, than giving up our whole Constitution.

Have they not, says he, ever since their unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, by the Intercession of that false Son of the Church, Bishop Grindall, always improved, and rise upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government.

My Lords, I would fain know whether Doctor Sacheverell, by these Words, A Man must be weak, or worse, that thinks the Dissenters are to be won by any other Indulgence than giving up our whole Constitution, tion, could mean any other than the present Dissenters, and that Indulgence which is at present afforded them.

In the very Line following he calls them Clamorous, Insatiable, and Church-devouring Malignants; and then proceeds in the Words I have mentioned: Have they not (i. e. the Dissenters) ever since their unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, by the Intercession of that false Son of the Church, Archbishop Grindall, improved and risen upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government?

The Prisoner's Defence has explained this Passage; they were barely permitted or suffered, he says, for a time by Queen Elizabeth, but they have improved and risen upon their Demands, till in this Age they have obtained an Indulgence by Act of Parliament, and this Act of Parliament is manifestly what the Doctor has taken Offence at.

Then he goes on — Insomuch, says he, that Queen Elizabeth, who was deluded by that perfidious Prelate, to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline, found it such an headstrong, encroaching Monster, that in eight Years she found it would endanger the Monarchy, as well as the Hierarchy: And, like a Queen of true Resolution, and pious Zeal for both, pronounced them Fæctious, and suppress'd them by wholesome Severities.

My Lords, I think we should have been wanting in that Duty we owe to the Memory of that great Prelate and Father of the Church, who was so considerable in establishing the Reformed Religion, had we not taken notice of these harsh and unjustifiable Expressions.

Doctor Sacheverell speaks of them as carrying an undue Asperity, but such as he hopes may be forgiven, since it was necessary, he pretends, that either Queen Elizabeth, or that Archbishop, must bear the Blame; and he rather thought it reasonable to charge it on the Archbishop, than to suffer it to lie at the Queen's door.

My Lords, your Lordships will observe, that all the Answer he has given to this part of the Charge, is, as if the Commons had impeached him for being too free with Archbishop Grindall, for using, as he calls it, an undue Asperity of Expression towards him.

But your Lordships will discern that this Passage is made use of in our Charge, to shew that the Dissenters are represented as headstrong and encroaching Monsters, dangerous to the Monarchy, as well as the Hierarchy; and the Example of Queen Elizabeth is produced, to shew how necessary it is by wholesome Severities to suppress them.

Are any strained Constructions or Innuendo's necessary to apply this Evidence to the first and main Head of the Charge, which is, That Doctor Sacheverell asserts and maintains, That the Toleration is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable?

My Lords, before I take my leave of this Head, I cannot forbear saying upon this Occasion, that sure I am the Toleration is not so dangerous to the Monarchy, as is this late Notion of an Hierarchy to the Supremacy of the Queen's Majesty; which however I hope shall be continued and preserved in the Crown of England, for the Peace and Safety of the Church as by Law established, to all Posterity.

My Lords, to the next and last Part, which relates to the thundring out Ecclesiastical Anathema's, the Defence is, That those Anathema's are not intended against the Persons intitled to the Toleration.

To this I answer: He is particularly speaking, in this Part of the Libel, of the Schismatics and Dissenters, and expressly names them in these Words, (Fol. 25.)

And yet if our Dissenters had lived in those Times, they would have branded him as an intemperate, hot and furious Zealot. — Schism and Fæction are Things of impudent and encroaching Natures, they thrive upon Concessions, take Permission for Power, and advance a Toleration immediately into an Establishment. — Are not the Dissenters here expressly named? Are we not to understand the Words Schism and Fæction, as coupled with Toleration, to be meant of the Dissenters, and of them only? Sure this is too plain to admit of any Doubt.

Then, my Lords, he proceeds: And are therefore to be treated like growing Mischiefs, or infectious Plagues, kept at a Distance, lest their deadly Contagion spread. Let us therefore have no Fellowship with these Works of Darkness, but rather reprove them: Let our Superior Pastors do their Duty, in thundring out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's, and let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratified in Heaven.

My Lords, Is here one Word of Heresies, Blasphemies, and the rest of those enormous Offences, to which the Doctor would have these Anathema's relate? No, there is nothing to be found here but Dissenters, Schism, and Toleration.

If these Anathema's are to be understood (as certainly they are) to extend to Persons entitled to Toleration; then, my Lords, that Air of Insolence that concludes the Period is explained.

Let our Superior Pastors do their Duty; that is to say, let them exert themselves, and thunder out their Anathema's, and let any Power on Earth dare reverse them.

These Words, my Lords, seem too big and mighty, to mean any little or subordinate Power.

Thus have we supported, and made good the several Charges contained in the Second Article.

My Lords, As the Commons are fully sensible how necessary it is to support the Honour and Justice of the Revolution, to which we owe no less than the inestimable Blessing of her present Majesty, the Guardian Angel of this Church and State, the future Expectation of a Protestant Succession, the Religion, Laws, Rights, and Liberties of the British Nation; so are they thoroughly convinced that the Peace and Welfare, the Security and Strength of the Kingdom in great measure depend upon the inviolable Preservation of the Act of Toleration, which has been most maliciously and seditiously traduced and misrepresented by Doctor Sacheverell.

Mr. Thompson. MY Lords, It is my Part to trouble your Lordships with a Reply to such Answers as have been offered to the Third Article of this Impeachment; and notwithstanding what has been said by the Council, what has been produced in Evidence; and what has been alledged by the Doctor himself to move your Lordships Compassion, I am concerned, even for his Sake, that I can observe it to your Lordships, That the Charge in this Article remains entirely unanswered.

Before I enter into the Particulars, I must observe to your Lordships, that if there were any doubtful, or any the least favourable Construction to be made of some Passages in this Sermon, the Commons would not have given your Lordships this Trouble, nor the Doctor an Opportunity of censuring their Impeachment as a hard-hearted and uncharitable Prosecution.

My

My Lords, I cannot but think it very ungenerous to insult any Man in Misfortunes, or to treat one in his Condition with Scorn and Indignity; neither have I, or shall I be guilty of it; but I must take leave to say, that no other Interpretation can be made of some Passages applicable to this Head, but what is criminal, since so many learned Council, since so many able Heads who have assisted the Doctor in his Defence; nay, since he himself, who should know best his own Meaning, has not been capable of giving the least Colour or Pretence of any Construction of them in his Favour.

Whatever Pity your Lordships may be inclined to in your private Capacities, for any one who has (I cannot say through Inadvertency) brought himself into Affliction, whatever Dispositions you may have to Mercy, yet I need not say, that there is a Compassion, a tender Regard due to the Welfare of your Country, a Care incumbent on you to suppress what has the least Tendency to Sedition, and the Disturbance of the publick Peace of the Kingdom, and that these important Trusts have a Claim to your Lordships Justice, preferable to any private Concern whatsoever.

Not to detain your Lordships any longer in Generals, I shall proceed to state the Charge and Defence, that your Lordships may have a View of the Insufficiency of the latter. My Lords, the Charge is, "That the Doctor suggests and maintains, that the Church of England is in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under Her Majesty's Administration:" He denies that he suggests any Danger to the Church, only from Vice, Infidelity, Blasphemy and Heresy, but not at all from or under any Part of her Majesty's Administration.

The first Passage I produced to your Lordships, to prove the Charge, was in Page the 5th; I must beg leave to trouble your Lordships with reading it again, because it may be necessary: "Tho' it were very obvious to draw a Parallel here betwixt the sad Circumstances of the Church of Corinth formerly, and the Church of England at present, wherein our holy Communion has been rent and divided by factious and schismatical Impostors; her pure Doctrine has been corrupted and defiled, her primitive Worship and Discipline prophaned and abused, her sacred Orders denied and vilified, her Priests and Professors (like St. Paul) calumniated, misrepresented and ridiculed, her Altars and Sacraments prostituted to Hypocrites, Deists, Socinians and Atheists; and this done, I wish I could not say without Discouragement, I am sure with Impunity, not only by our professed Enemies, but, which is worse, by our pretended Friends and false Brethren."

The learned Council pretended to shew, that most of these Calamities attending the Church, proceeded from the blasphemous and heretical Books and Pamphlets produced to your Lordships, and that the Doctor meant them to be the Cause of the Danger he suggests: Now, pray my Lords, how can that Construction be made? How can this be consistent with the Doctor's Assertion, that all this is done, not only by professed Enemies (which every body will agree takes in the Infidels, Blasphemers and Hereticks) but by pretended Friends and false Brethren? When I took the liberty to observe on this Passage, I stated it thus: "Who could prostitute Altars and Sacraments to Hypocrites, Deists, Socinians, and Atheists, but some of the Doctor's own Order? And who were to punish those Crimes? Who could they be that did not discourage them, but suffered them to be committed with Impunity, but his Ecclesiastical Superiors? And that they were Part of her Majesty's Administration, no body could deny.

Now what Answer, my Lords, was given to this? To the first part of this Paragraph, about rendering the Communion by schismatical Impostors, and so to the other Particulars, till the last, it was shifted off to the professed Enemies, the Infidels, Blasphemers and Hereticks, Dissenting Teachers, and Popish Priests, but nothing laid to the False Brethren, who, the Doctor says, neither Punish nor Discourage. But when the learned Council came to the last Calamity of the Church, that of prostituting the Altars and Sacraments, &c. they are pleased to make Occasional Conformists their Atheists, &c. that receive the Sacraments; but as to the Charge of arraigning the Persons that do not discourage or punish those who prostitute Altars to Atheists, &c. they thought fit to slide it over, and not say one Syllable to it; they did not so much as mumble this Thistle, and the others but very tenderly. Pray, my Lords, in the Interpretation I make, where is there any foreign Intendment, any forced Construction, or strained Inference against the Doctor's express Words, and positive Assertions? Let every candid Reader, without Prejudice, impartially consider the Meaning of this Passage; Is this a Danger suggested from Books or Pamphlets? Or is it not a plain and direct Invektive against those Persons in the Church, who are charged with being the Occasion of these Dangers to the Church by their Remissness in their Duty, not only in not punishing, but not so much as discouraging those Crimes: And to whom can his lazy Defenders within relate, but to the same Persons, those that are within the Church, and to protect it?

But if it were true, that Altars and Sacraments were thus prostituted, why must the World be told in this Manner of it? Tho' it is the Duty of a Clergyman at all Seasons, and in all Places, as one of the Doctor's Council was pleased to say, to preach against Vice and Infidelity, Immorality and Prophaneness; yet sure none will say, that he is to revile his Superiors, and charge them in this Method with their want of Duty, and Care for the Church: What other End must such licentious Reproaches produce, but a Contempt of their Persons, a lessening the Dignity of their Order, and a Diminution of that Character which gives them the Capacity of doing Good in the World whilst they preserve a Veneration and Esteem, but which must cease when they meet with the contrary? The Doctor was so sensible of this, when he mentioned it as his own Case, that he thought the very Imputation of a Crime to any of his Function, tho' acquitted of it, must leave a Scar so as to blemish his Character; sure then he ought to have used the utmost Caution, before he preached or published this Sermon, and to have considered the pernicious Consequences of reviling those in Authority. If, as he was pleased to say, ill treating of him, who was an Ambassador of Christ, was despising Christ himself; sure it cannot be thought an unnatural Inference, if her Majesty is said to be reviled, by reflecting on those who act under her Commission, and are Part of her Administration.

The second Passage I troubled your Lordships with, is in Page 16; he had been talking of the Comprehension and Union of the Church and Dissenters, and giving a great many hard Names to it; which Design your Lordships know had its Rise from a Commission under the Great Seal from his late Majesty to several Lords, Bishops, and other learned Divines, who were to consider of proper Methods to accomplish it: "But he thanks God, that Providence had blasted the long projected Scheme of these Ecclesiastical Achitophels;" with other scurrilous Reflections on the Design, and those concerned in it; and then he says, "That since this Model of Universal Liberty and Coalition failed, and these false Brethren could not carry the Conventicle into the Church, they are now resolved to bring the Church into the Conventicle, which will more plausibly and sily effect her Ruin; what could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish. If the Church can't be pulled down, it may be blown up; and no matter with these Men how 'tis destroyed, so that it is destroyed."

Now pray, my Lords, where is the forced Construction to make the Doctor in this Passage speak of Persons in Church and State who endanger the Church, and not of Books and Pamphlets, Vice, Infidelity, &c?

He is on his second general Head of the Perils of False Brethren in the Church and State, and of those Persons who could not accomplish the Destruction of the Church by the Comprehension, but were doing it another Way, by Occasional Conformity and Moderation; I do not know that either of these are condemned by the Law for Vice, Infidelity, Blasphemy, Heresy or Prophaneness; be that as it will, 'tis from the Persons in Church and State the Danger is suggested to arise, and who, as he is pleased to say, make use of these only as means to blow up and destroy the Church: But then I suppose these Persons in the Church must be interpreted to be only the most inferior, and so no Reflection on the Administration: As Men of Characters and Stations in the State were construed to be Constables, Excise-Men and Custom-House Officers, so these Persons who were to bring about the Comprehension, and are now blowing up and undermining the Church in another Manner, must be Church-Wardens, Parish-Clerks and Sextons. These Sort of Constructions by the Doctor's Learned Council, are so easy and natural, that I must agree with his Observation, that they have not much Argument, Learning or Eloquence to support them.

And I cannot but observe a very extraordinary Method of answering this Passage and the next, by one of the Learned Council; he is pleased to cite Two other Passages in the Sermon, which were never mentioned by me, or any of the Managers of this Article; and with very strenuous Zeal he explains those Passages by chiming in with the Doctor, in charging Occasional Conformists, with Atheism, Deism, and the worst of Crimes; and then he concludes, that the Doctor, in those Passages he cited, has not asserted the Church to be in Danger under her Majesty's Administration; but not one Syllable to this Passage, which I cited in Page the 16th.

The third Place I troubled your Lordships with, was in the 18th Page; his Words are "Falshood always implies Treachery; and whether that is a Qualification for any one to be trusted, especially with the Guardianship of our Church or Crown, let our Governors consider." These Words speak so plainly, they need no Comment, nor have they offered at any Explanation of them; they must relate to Persons, and can have no Reference to Books or Pamphlets, Blasphemies or Heresies, &c. by any Construction whatever.

The Fourth Passage, my Lords, was in Page the 20th; he is talking of Dangers from National Sins, which are occasioned by Dissenters and False Brethren; and then he says, "And now are we under no Danger in these deplorable Circumstances? Must we lull our selves under this sad Repose, and in such a stupid lethargick Security embrace our Ruin? I pray God we may be out of Danger; but we may remember the King's Person was voted to be so, at the same Time that his Murtherers were conspiring his Death."

The Substance of the Charge in this Passage, is an Intention to reflect on the Members who voted the Church to be out of Danger, by the Comparison and Allusion to the Vote relating to the King. The Meaning seems evidently, that though the King was voted to be out of Danger, yet he was not out of Danger; and so, though the Church was voted out of Danger, yet the Church was then, and is still in Danger: But whether he meant it of the Members that passed that Vote, is the Question; he says he only meant it according to his Notion of that Vote of the King, that those not privy to the Design against him voted him safe, whilst others conspired his Murther; so when the Members voted the Church of England to be in no Danger under her Majesty's Administration, it was none of them, but others that were conspiring her Ruin.

The Doctor was pleased to say too, That that Vote was a Year and half before the King's Death, and that there were not a Tenth Part of those Members who voted the King safe, the rest being turned out, and no House of Lords: Be that as it will, they were the same Parliament that voted the King out of Danger; and they that conspired his Death, were Part of those who voted him safe, and who turned out the rest to accomplish their Designs: And though the Parallel should not run so as to reflect on both Houses of Parliament, and all the Members, yet if it glances at some of them, and was so intended, it is a Circumstance of Aggravation, and that is the only Intent of its being Part of the Article; and I can't but think the Doctor was apprehensive of some Reflection of that Kind, for he says immediately in the very next Words, "That he hopes what he has so freely spoken will not give Offence": If he had not a View to that Vote of the Danger of the Church, there was no Occasion for that Apology.

The fifth and last Place I troubled your Lordships with, was in the last Page, where there were some Pathetical Expressions which the Doctor chose out of the Scripture, and managed them with others of his own, so as to represent the Church to be in the utmost Peril; he mentions nothing of Vice, Blasphemy or Infidelity: "But that she lies Bleeding of the Wounds she has received in the House of her Friends": He cited the Lamentations for it, but there being no such Text there, I took the Liberty of saying it was a Lamentation of his own making.

I should not trouble your Lordships any more as to this Particular, but that I am in some measure obliged to vindicate my self from what one of the Learned Council hinted upon this Occasion; he was pleased to say in the Defence to the first Article, he was as much at a loss to find out a Passage in the Sermon, as one of the Managers was to find the Text in the Lamentations. Though, my Lords, this is but a Trifle to the Thing in Question before your Lordships, yet since that Learned Gentleman was pleased to triumph, as if he had me sure and unanswerable on this Point, I beg your Lordships Indulgence that it may appear which of us is in the right.

The Doctor cited that Text to be in the 2d of Lam. 4th. I looked through the Lamentations, therefore knew I might venture to say what I did; I have looked over it again, and am sure there is no such Text there. It gave me Occasion to read and reflect on the other Texts cited by the Doctor in the Prophecy of Zachariah, the 13th Chapter, where there are some Words that I suppose are meant, though I could not but observe the Doctor to be very unhappy in the Choice of his Scripture, this as well as others being directly contrary to his Purpose. The Words cited are in the 6th Verse, the two preceding Verses explain them; the Subject Matter was false Prophecy. In the 4th Verse 'tis said, It shall come to pass in that Day, that the Prophet shall be ashamed, every one of his Vision, when he has prophesied. In the 5th Verse the Prophet is to deny that he is a Prophet, and say he is a Husbandman, and no Prophet. And in the 6th Verse he is asked where he received his Wounds? He answers, in the House of his Friends: So that he retains the Character of a false Prophet all along; and what he says in each Verse is equally true, and consequently that the Wounds he received were not in the House of his Friends. Whatever may be thought of the Doctor in this Matter, I think I may conclude, that his Learned Council had his Scripture by Hearsay, or else he would not have triumphed when he had so little Reason. There was a Dispute, my Lords, not many Years since, between Two Learned Divines of our Church, about the Rights of our Convocation; one insulted the other for his Ignorance in the Common-Prayer Book; but upon Examination it appeared, that he who triumphed most, was most ignorant of what he charged on the other: Whether this Case is not somewhat applicable, I submit to your Lordships.

Having done, my Lords, with the several Passages made use of to maintain this Article, I think I may say the Charge contained in it, (That the Doctor asserts the Church to be in Danger, not only generally, or so as to be meant from Vice, Infidelity, Schism or Heresies, Blasphemy or Prophaneness, but from under her Majesty's Administration) is not only affirmed, but strongly proved. He is not charged here with speaking contrary to his Words, or with Negative Crimes, nor is his Silence, as he was pleased to say, made Criminal.

I must now beg leave to observe a little on the Evidence produced on the Doctor's Behalf, and in his Defence to this Article. Your Lordships had a Collection of many scandalous Books and Pamphlets, drawn from Obscurity, to be republished to the World, for the more effectual suppressing Blasphemy and Prophaneness: And since the Doctor's Council forbore to mention the Particulars, I shall not enter into them; only in general I think I may say, that they have been proved to be no way material to what is in issue before your Lordships: But it may not be improper to take Notice, that most of these Books appeared to have stolen into the World, and the Authors still concealed; some of them Printed in Holland seventeen Years ago, and others Published since the Doctor's Sermon: And for the Observers, and Rights of the Christian Church, 'tis well known the Author of one, and Publisher of the other have been prosecuted; so that these cannot be said to be tolerated with Impunity, nor meant as the Provocation for the Doctor's Censure.

I am sorry there are any of these prophane and impious Pamphlets: There are some others too that have been published within this seventeen Years, which might have been taken notice of, but I don't find them in the Doctor's Catalogue. There was a blasphemous Sermon preached and published by Doctor Binks; Mr. Dodwell's Charge of Schism, and unbishoping most of the present Bishops; the same Gentleman's Baptismal Union of the Spirit, or his No Immortality of the Soul; and one Mr. Lesley's Project of uniting ours and the Gallic Church. Whether these Books were thought by the Doctor to tend to the right Establishing our Church and true Religion, I need not say, but I do think they were worthy his Notice, and may vie with most in his Collection; and if he had been so incensed against erroneous Doctrines, it had been a worthy Task sure, and well becoming his honest well-meaning Zeal, to have endeavoured a Confutation of them; then his Asperity in rebuking, his harsh and vehement Expressions, would not have been ill employed: But, instead of this, to turn his Violence against his Superiors, for not Punishing what, it may be, they never heard of; and to lay the Danger from these Doctrines at their Doors, is not to be justified by any pretended Provocation of this Kind whatsoever.

There was another Piece of Evidence produced to your Lordships, some Proclamations against Immorality and Prophaneness: If there is any Thing to be inferred from them in the Doctor's Favour, I must own I can't conceive it. Because the Queen commands the Magistrates to put the Laws in Execution, therefore every private Divine may arraign his Superiors for a supposed Neglect of their Duty, as often as he thinks fit; I say, I don't understand this Inference, but I can easily apprehend the Consequence to all Governments that will suffer such Presumptions.

The Doctor himself was pleased to say, That one of the Dangers of the Church mentioned by him was forgot by the Managers, that was from Papists and their emissaries: I will do him the Justice to remember, that he has bestowed six Lines on this Danger, but twenty-six large Pages on the Danger from those in Church and State. Then it was said, that the Doctor prays for the Queen, has taken the Oaths to the Queen, and therefore he could have no Intention to reflect on her Majesty, or any Part of her Administration either in Church or State. And the Doctor in his own Speech was pleased to acknowledge her Majesty to be a Nursing-Mother to the Church: But I could not observe one Syllable to the Reverend Fathers of the Church, of his Opinion of their Care of it: I could hear him admonish that Venerable Bench of the Guilt of departing from the Church, and abandoning the Principles of the Church, if they should punish him, a true Son of the Church, for Preaching the same Doctrine with theirs; as if there was no manner of Difference whatever.

It seems, my Lords, very strange, that after a Charge of this Nature of Reflection upon his Ecclesiastical ecclesiastical Superiors, that, after having studied so much Submission, he should not prevail with himself for so much as a Compliment on this Occasion. Such Behaviour seems to need no Explanation. I should be very unwilling to recollect any of the Doctor's charitable Opinions of his own Brethren, who, as he is pleased to say, can sacrifice their solemn Declarations and Oaths to Complaisance and Preferments. I would be so charitable as to believe well, and think favourably of all Men; but when the contrary does so manifestly appear, it would be Injustice to the rest of Mankind not to judge accordingly. It would be a Remissness and Negligence of Duty, justly blameable, if we were to shut our Eyes, and resolve not to see what so evidently threatens the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom. If Men must be allowed to vent their Displeasure at such Proceedings of their Governors which do not suit their particular Humours, what must become of the Credit and Reputation of any Government, which is so necessary to preserve it?

Your Lordships have heard a great many Objections against Innuendo's, that they are dangerous Things, and never encouraged; and that your Lordships have been pleased to shew your Dislike of them. I shall not scruple to own, that to lay a Meaning to a Man when his Words will not bear it, to make any invidious Construction when it will admit of a favourable one, I can neither approve or desire. But because the extreme or ill Use of any Thing is not to be allowed, that therefore you must never apply it at all, is such Logick and Law as I have not been used to.

My Lords, In the Case of Libellis famosis, cited by the Doctor's Council, your Lordships will find, that if only plain positive Assertions are Libels, there will be no Fence against the Envy and Malice of wicked Spirits: And if the Law has guarded every private Man's Reputation, so as not to be blasted by oblique Turns and scandalous Insinuations, it would be very hard if those in Authority should be exposed to the Virulence of every discontented Humourist. Malice will never want a Pretence, or Means to convey Scandal and Reproach by sly Parallels and Allusions, which may do equal Mischief with positive Assertions: But I must observe to your Lordships, That there are not only oblique Insinuations, but positive Assertions.

Not only those Passages which I have produced, which are express, but the whole Scope and Tenor of his Sermon, relates to the Peril of the Church from Persons in Church or State, and not those evasive Shifts of Vice and Infidelity, Books and Pamphlets. If the Doctor had only rebuked Immorality, Blasphemy, Prophaneness and Irreligion, he might still have attended his Flock *, and they not have been brought to attend him; nor would he have been thought to arraign the Resolution of the Parliament. But for him to take upon him to censure and expose his Superiors, and to insinuate into the Minds of the People the Danger of the Church from those Persons who have the Protection of it, is no likely Method to suppress Immorality and Prophaneness, and is directly contrary to the Words and Intent of the Resolution of your Lordships and the Commons.

To what End the Doctor has thought fit thus to disperse his Sermons, may be easily imagined; and your Lordships cannot be unacquainted with the History of a Neighbour Nation, what temporal Ends were to be accomplished by a loud Outcry of Danger to the Church, the Church, Religion and the Church. Whether that will not bear a Parallel with the groundless Clamours which have occasioned many of our present unhappy Divisions, I submit to your Lordships.

It remains, my Lords, that I answer one of the Learned Council, what the Nature of this Offence is: I shall only tell him in the Words of your Lordships and the Commons Resolution, made publick by her Majesty's Proclamation, "That whoever creates unreasonable Distrusts, and groundless Jealousies in the Minds of the People; whoever distracts the Kingdom by false and seditious Rumours of the Danger of the Church, to cover Designs they dare not own; whoever goes about to insinuate that the Church is not in a safe and flourishing Condition under her Majesty's happy Administration, is an Enemy to the Queen, the Church, and the Kingdom." Which, in other Words, is, Against the Law, against the Temple, and against Cæsar has he offended.

Nay, my Lords, Has not this bold Offender gone yet farther? Has he not told your Lordships at your own Bar, That notwithstanding the Toleration, the Dissenters are Schismatics, and liable to Spiritual Censure; that by continuing the Indulgence to them, you countenance Schism; and that while Schism is continued, the Church must be in Danger? So that resolve what you please, and make what Laws you will in their Favour, he must still thunder out his vehement Anathemas against them, as dangerous to the Church.

This, my Lords, is a Specimen of that Independency of the Church that of late has been so much struggled for; and which, if not confuted in time by Authority, may soon devour the Supremacy and the State. And since the Doctor has and does still thus presume to defy and arraign the Resolution of your Lordships and the Commons, he is properly before this Tribunal; and I may apply to him the Saying to a Goat browsing on a Vine, and which was applied to one of another Function upon such an Occasion, who had defied the Power of Parliaments:

*Rode Caper vitem, tamen hinc cum stabis ad Aras,
In tua quod fundi Cornua possit, erit.*

My Lords, The Commons are so fully assured of your Lordships Wisdom and Justice, that they cannot question but your Determination in this Proceeding will be to their Satisfaction; therefore I shall trouble you no farther, but submit to your Lordships Judgment.

Serj. Parker. MY Lords, Having already, by Command of the Commons, endeavoured to make good the Fourth Article of this Charge; it is now my Duty to support, what I offered before, both against the particular Objections, and the general Rules, proposed or insinuated by the Council, or the Prisoner.

The first Thing I attempted to prove by particular Passages, was the second Clause of this Article:

"That Doctor Sacheverell suggests, That there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, who are False Brethren, and do in themselves weaken, undermine and betray, and do encourage and put it in the Power of others, who are

* His Parishioners part of the Mob that attended him to and from his Trial.

"professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment."

This I thought would be plainly made out, if I could shew these Two Things:

1. That the Doctor has asserted, in express Terms, of all False Brethren in general, that they do in themselves weaken, undermine and betray, and do encourage and put it in the Power of others, who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment. And,

2. That he charges Persons of Characters and Stations with False Brotherhood.

Apprehending the Consequence clear, that if these Two Things were asserted by the Doctor, the Charge was just.

I used likewise some farther Proofs, which I shall not need repeat.

Besides some little Cavils as to the Two Propositions, which I shall take Notice of by the way; great Complaint is made, often repeated, and much exaggerated, that I have brought together these Two Propositions, that are twelve, or nine, or at least seven Pages asunder:

My Lords, I took Notice of this Trifling Objection before; and what I said to it, neither the Doctor nor his Council have attempted to Answer.

But they all seeming to lay the greatest Strefs upon this Part, and the Council every one repeating it, I beg leave to state once more how that Matter stands.

The Doctor in this Sermon proposes, (1.) To describe False Brotherhood; (2.) To shew the Mischief; and (3.) the Malignity of it.

And this single Consideration would make one expect, that these Heads should relate to one another, at whatever Distance he takes them up.

Under the Second Head, * Page 15, he asserts, of all False Brethren in general, that "they do in themselves weaken, undermine and betray, and do encourage, and put it in the Power of others, who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment."

This is my first Proposition in Terms, and nothing is objected to it.

Only a little Attempt is made to divert the Question, by mentioning some particular sorts of False Brethren, and saying he there speaks of False Brethren in some of those Senses of the Word.

I agree it: He that speaks of all, speaks of such as are included in those Senses of the Word which he mentions; but likewise speaks of all others too; speaks of such as he has mentioned any where else, as well as there, such as are Men of Characters and Stations, as well as such as are not.

Under the Third Head,

In shewing the Malignity of this Sin (not in it self, that he had shewn before, but) with regard to the World: He instances first, in the Mischiefs arising from Men of Characters and Stations, in the Words I formerly cited. This, I thought, made out my Second Proposition to be the Doctor's, "That Men of Characters and Stations are False Brethren."

This is faintly deny'd; and 'tis said, he does not here suggest Men of Characters and Stations to be False Brethren; but what is here spoke relates to their private Behaviour, and not to the Administration.

Besides, that this is directly against the plain Import of the Words; to let your Lordships see the Candor of this Defence, let us suppose it true; and that it is the Doctor's Opinion that the Persons he here speaks of, be they great or mean, are not False Brethren.

Then the Doctor, to be consistent with this Defence, must affirm, that he here lets forth the Malignity of False Brotherhood, by shewing the Malignity of another Sin which is not FALSE BROTHERHOOD, in Persons of Characters and Stations, who are not FALSE BRETHREN.

This is the wretched Shift he is driven to, taking it the best for him.

That these Characters and Stations relate both to Church and State, all his Discourse in the Places cited, and every where else, shews; nor has he or his Council made it an Objection that they do not; so that it would be very much mispending your Lordships Time, to go to prove, what is not deny'd, that by Men of Characters and Stations, he intends Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State.

The Two Propositions being thus cleared, let us see if that which is laid hold of to declaim so earnestly upon, have any more Weight in it, that is, the joining together these Two distant Propositions.

The Objection, rightly stated, is this:

He has in one Place affirmed of all False Brethren in general, "That they do in themselves weaken, undermine and betray, and put it in the Power of others, who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment."

And seven Pages off, has represented Men of Characters and Stations as False Brethren.

And we (very unreasonably!) have charged him with suggesting, "That there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, who are False Brethren, and do in themselves weaken, undermine and betray, and do encourage and put it in the Power of others who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment."

This is the true Strength of the Objection, and the very stating it exposes it.

The general Mischief he mentions, as common to all False Brethren, Page 15, I presume will be admitted to belong to those described, Page 7; Why then not as well to those Page 22?

Must not what is said of all False Brethren, extend both to those whose Crime he describes, and to those whose Malignity for that Crime he exposes?

And which is most to be regarded, the Distance of the Place, or the Connexion of the Scheme, and the Nature of the Propositions?

The Doctor himself seems rather to press the Objection thus, That this is Inference, and joining independent Propositions; which, though spoke by him in general, the Unanimity of his Council in falling upon this Part of what I said, shew, it was spoke principally with a View to these two Passages. Are then Passages that speak of all False Brethren, and that speak of some particular False Brethren, independent?

My Lords, These are so far from being independent, and so ill have they chosen out what to find fault with, (that if your Lordships will pardon the Pedantry, considering I have a Man of Logick and Disputation

* Note, The Pages of the Sermon are referred to as in the Second Edition, which was that which was proved and read in Evidence.

Disputation to deal with) the two Propositions are the two Propositions of a Syllogism, concluding in the first Figure.

And the Inference he complains of is the Conclusion necessarily arising from them, according to the Rules of Logick.

The whole Syllogism runs thus:

All False Brethren do in themselves weaken, undermine, and betray, and do encourage and put it in the Power of others who are profess'd Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment.

Persons of Characters and Stations are False Brethren.

Therefore Persons of Characters and Stations, do, &c.

The two first Propositions are what I have shewn the Doctor plainly to lay down; the other only a necessary Consequence.

Would any one expect that the Doctor should be so forgetful of the Rules of Logick, as when he had laid down the Premises, to deny the Conclusion? Or to deny the Conclusion to be HIS DOCTRINE, who laid down those Premises?

Can it be thought, that he laid them down without an Intention that his Hearers should make the Conclusion? Or could he think it possible they should not make it?

Or shall the suppressing a Conclusion so plainly arising, which is taken Notice of in some that write of Logick as an Elegance in Discourse, pass for an Excuse?

Let the Doctor describe False Brethren in general as Betrayers and Destroyers of the Church, and the proper Objects of the Rage and Fury of the People, and then expose as False Brethren those in the Administration, Persons of Characters and Stations, from the chief to the least, the People will quickly make the Application.

If any one should inflame the Mob to such a Degree of Rage and mistaken Zeal, as to forget the Spirit of the Gospel, and to believe it their Duty to serve God by breaking the publick Peace, and to support his Church, by pulling down all Meeting-Houses, and rifling the Houses of all Dissenters; he needs afterwards only tell them, THIS IS A MEETING-HOUSE; HERE LIVETH A DISSENTER, they are not so dull as to fail of making the Conclusion; THEREFORE THIS HOUSE IS TO BE PULL'D DOWN; THEREFORE THIS MAN IS TO BE PLUNDERED; and of putting it immediately in Execution where they dare.

Suppose such a Man should, in Defence of himself, say, "I did not bid them pull down this House, nor rifle that; my telling them All Meeting-Houses were to be pulled down, All Dissenters to be marked and plundered, was Four Months before I told them THIS WAS A MEETING-HOUSE, OR THAT MAN A DISSENTER; and to carry back a Man's Words, spoke only by way of Information, to what was said Four Months before by way of Doctrine, is the greatest Hardship in the World:"

Would this pass for an Excuse? Or would it not add to the Indignation against so impertinent a Trifler on so sad an Occasion.

My Lords, The burning a Meeting-House, the burning all the Meeting-Houses, the laying this Metropolis once more in Ashes by the Enemies of our Constitution, is nothing to the inflaming the Nation, and rendring the QUEEN and Her ADMINISTRATION odious to the People.

Shall it then be an Excuse for the Doctor here, when he has laid down the Premises, to say, that he has not in Words expressed the Conclusion?

Shall the meanest of the People, clearly and rightly collect, This is Doctor Sacheverell's Doctrine; and shall not we in accusing, and your Lordships in judging, be allowed to collect it, when we are endeavouring to preserve the Queen and Constitution, and all that is dear to us?

Surely, my Lords, we shall. Nor is the strict Consequence that your Lordships find in this Clause, always necessary in Cases of this Nature: But I was willing to shew it here, that your Lordships may see with what Justice this was made the great Topick whereupon to declaim against Hardships; and to couple such Inferences with Innuendo's, as if both were the same.

As for taking one Part of one Sentence, and another Part of another, whoever makes a Conclusion in Logick ever does it; and only then does amiss in it, when in doing it he departs from the proper Rule, and where the Consequence is not just; which I have shewn is not the Case here, and no Body has attempted to make out that it is.

'Tis as little to the Purpose what is said, that he has not restrained this to Persons of the HIGHEST CHARACTERS AND STATIONS; which I shewed so fully before, that it has been thought more adviseable to pretend I admitted what I believe I plainly disproved, than to offer any Answer to my Reasons.

I'll only add, that 'tis not pretended, that there is one Word in the Sermon that looks like the least Hint, that only Inferior Officers were meant; and 'tis plainly shewn, that others were intended: And then the Doctor's Excuse amounts, at best, but to this: He has indeed spoke in reproachful Terms of Magistrates in general, he has pointed to those that have, and those that bestow the Honours of the Church, and Places and Preferments in the State; he has pointed to the Chief; his Reasoning, when he shews the Malignity of the Sin from Examples of Persons of Characters and Stations is the stronger, the Greater these Persons are, as the Examples of the Greatest are the most Contagious; but yet he relies upon it, that since the general Mention of Persons of Characters and Stations takes in the Meanest as well as the greatest, 'tis not to be doubted but the all-discerning People, especially when sufficiently fired and enraged, will restrain the Words to the most innocent Meaning, and apply them only to inferior Officers, Constables, and those in the nearest Degrees to them.

This is the Sum of this notable Excuse.

Let this therefore, where, by bending their united Force against it, they seemed to have the greatest Hopes of making some Impression, serve for the Specimen chosen by themselves, of the Hardships of Inferences and Innuendo's in this Charge.

"The Third Clause, "That he chargeth her Majesty, and those in Authority under her, with a general Male-Administration; The first, That he suggests that her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution"; are so manifest, that after what has been said, and is unanswered, it would would be but losing Time to attempt to make them more plain.

And their Defence, and the Books and Pamphlets read on this Head, are not to the purpose.

For sure, the shewing that there have been some Paltry Scriblers, few in Number, many long since dead, some mad, some that have undergone the infamous Punishment of the Pillory, most of them prosecuted or unknown, does not prove that there are Seminaries for the open Profession of those Blasphemies and Impieties; much less, that they are suffered by the Government, or that their Follies can be called an open Violence upon the Church, or their Faults made the general Character of the Nation, and charged upon the Queen and her Administration.

When a scandalous Book is published, or contagious Sin committed, any Subject who has a real Zeal to prevent the Mischief spreading, may apply to the proper Magistrate to suppress it; and if inferior Magistrates neglect their Duty, may carry the Complaint, against them and it, to their Superiors.

But is it to be endured, in any established Government, that a Man pass over all the Magistrates, and make an Appeal to the People, not only against the Offenders, but against the Magistrates too?

This is properly Faction, this is invading the Royal Authority; 'tis, in the Doctor's own Words, "A rebellious Appeal to the People as the Dernier Resort of Justice and Dominion"; 'tis erecting a Popular Tribunal, where not only SCRIBLERS, but the QUEEN and her AUTHORITY are to be try'd.

The Doctor indeed pretends that his Zeal was only against those Offenders, and such as keep not within the Bounds of the Toleration Act; that his Warmth of Speech, was only to stir up the Magistrates to put the Laws strictly in execution; and he solemnly protests he intended no Reflection on the Queen, or her Ministry; that by the Dangers of the Church, he meant only those Judgments, which the just Anger of a provoked God might be reasonably expected to inflict on so wicked a People.

I can't pretend to repeat his very Words, but I apprehend this to be his Sense, and beg Pardon if I mistake his Meaning.

My Lords, I am amazed at the Doctor's Solemn Protestations. I will avoid hard Words as much as I can; but if when he calls God to Witness in so solemn a Manner, he should then speak without Foundation of Truth, plainly against his Sermon, and be even then using the little Arts of Evasion, and diverting the Question, instead of that Sincerity which ought to accompany so solemn an Oath, I leave it to your Lordships to give a Name to such Behaviour.

Is it possible to say he intended not to reflect on the Administration?

Give me Leave to read to your Lordships Two Pages in his Sermon, to which I before referred; and be pleased to observe, as I go along, how much they are applicable to unknown Authors, or the Dead, to Askill, the Observer, the Review, or other Writers, that he has made so filthily a Collection out of; or to Atheists, or Dissenters exceeding the Limits prescribed by the Toleration; or to Occasional Conformists, Dissenters too in the main, but when the Occasion of a Place calls them to Church; and your Lordships will have one Instance of his Sincerity in his Solemn Protestations.

"2. Secondly, In regard to the World, What a vast Scandal, and Offence must it give to all Persons of Piety and Integrity, to see Men of Character, and Stations, thus shift and prevaricate with their Principles, and starting from their Religion upon any Occasion of Difficulty, or Trial, and like the Disciples, flying from, and forsaking our Saviour, when his Life lay at Stake? To see Mens Opinions sit as loose about 'em as their Garments, to be put on, or off, for Convenience? What can unwary Persons conclude from such Tergiversation, and Hypocrisy, but that all Religion is State-Craft, and Imposture? That All Godliness is Gain; and that the Doctrines of the Church lie not so much in her Articles, as her Honours, and Revenues? Without doubt, this Modern Latitude, and infamous Double Dealing, as it can proceed from nothing but the rankest Atheism, so it must propagate it wheresoever it goes; and 'tis not to be questioned, but that the Wonderful Increase, and Impudent Appearance of all Sects and Heresies in this Kingdom at present, beyond what was ever known in former Ages, is chiefly to be attributed to it. But this Crime is as pernicious to Human Society, as Religion; for it destroys all common Honesty, Faith, and Credit in the World, and in the Place of it, sets up an Universal Trade of Couzenage, Sharping, Dissimulation, and downright Knavery. For, what Dependence can there be upon a Man of no Principles? What Trust in Equivocations, Evasions, and Lyes? Nor indeed could any one be supposed so sottish, as to place the least Confidence in these Men, did they not bait their Hook, and cover their Treachery with the sacred and plausible Pretences of Friendship, whereby they are capable of doing much more Mischief, than a bare-faced and profess'd Enemy. In what moving and lively Colours does the Holy Psalmist paint out the crafty Insidiousness of such wily Volpones? Wickedness, says he, is therein, Deceit and Guile go not out of their Streets. For it is not an open Enemy that has done me this Dishonour, for then I could have born it: Neither was it mine Adversary, that did magnify himself against me, for then peradventure I would have bid my self from him. But, it was even Thou! my Companion, my Guide, and mine own Familiar Friend. We took sweet Counsel together, and walked in the House of God as Friends. There is no Faithfulness in their Mouths, their inward Parts are very Wickedness; their Throats are open Sepulchres, and their Words are smoother than Oil, yet be they very Swords. Like Joab, they pretend to speak Peaceably, and smite Us mortally under the Fifth Rib.

"3. Thirdly, With regard to a Man's self, it is hard to distinguish whether our False Brethren prove themselves Guilty of more excessive Knavery, or Folly. For whatever these cunning, temporizing Politicians may think, they will find, after all their Shuffling, and Compliance, that the plain Road of Truth, Honesty, and Integrity, is both the most Prudent, as well as the Safest Way they can follow, and that the Wisdom of this World is as much Foolishness with Men, as 'tis with God. For certainly there is no Sin that so much Disappoints its own Ends as This does. Perhaps the Man may obtain the present Advantage he has in Prospekt, by relinquishing his Old Friends, and Principles; but is ever such a Mercenary Convert received heartily into the Bosom of his former Enemies? Or are They ever found so Credulous, and Good-natured, as to Forgive, and believe such an Apostate Cordial and Sincere, and

“ and fit to be trusted in any Matter of Weight, or Importance, who has betrayed his own Party for the little sordid Lucre of a Place, or Preferment: And is again ready to be Retrograde, whenever the Wind shall Change, and Veer about? Such a False Brother may serve the present Turn of his Adversaries, who may seem, whilst they want the Tool, to flatter and caress him; but let such a Turn-Coat rest assured, he shall meet with Hypocrisy, for Hypocrisy; and since He is got upon the Stage, shall Act his Part, and be biffed off when he has done. Such a wise Game do our Projectors Play, they Barter, and betray their Friends, only to sell themselves Slaves into the Hands of their Enemies, who shall treat them with more Insolence, Disdain and Tyranny, than honest Men do with Scorn, and Contempt, if they don't go the whole Lengths of their Party, stick at nothing, though never so impious, and absurd, and run from one Extream to a quite Contrary. Thus little, thus base, thus odious, thus contemptible, thus servile, nay thus execrable is the Traytor, and Double-Dealer in the Sight, not only of all honest Men, but the most professed Knaves, and Hypocrites! Who cannot but have a Tacit Regard, and Veneration, for a Man of Steadiness, and Probity, that upon all Occasions is true to himself, and his Cause; is above the Threats, as well as Flatteries of this World, still trusting in his God, and his own Integrity, and Justice, despising his Interest, or Success, and is under all Circumstances like that God, and Religion he believes and serves, without Variableness, or Shadow of Change, but is the same, To-day, To-morrow, and for ever. Farther, these False Brethren cannot be more odious to God and Man, than they are to themselves, who are always a Self-Contradiction, full of Confusion and Perplexity, perpetually haunting themselves, the worst of Demons, maintaining an irreconcilable War betwixt the outward and inward Man, Conformists in Profession, Half-Conformists in Practice, and Non-Conformists in Judgment. Such a Mixture of Inconsistency and Nonsense, that any one that has the least Spark of Conscience, or Reason, must renounce, and detest. But this dismal Effect has such a State of Habitual Hypocrisy, that it quite damps and extinguishes both, quenches the Holy Spirit of God, and crucifies his Son afresh; and as it finds a Man void of Shame, generally (without a miraculous Conversion) leaves him incapable of Repentance, and both damns him here, and hereafter; and as he chose it in this World, appoints him in the next, his Portion with Hypocrites, and Unbelievers, with all Lyars, that have their Part in the Lake which burns with Fire and Brimstone, with the Grand Father of Falshood, the Devil and his Angels. And so here we leave our False Brethren, in the Company they always keep Correspondence with.”

To go on. Is that true, that he only calls upon the Magistrates for Justice upon these Offenders?

If his Intent really were to exhort the Magistrates (before whom he preached) to put the Laws in Execution, one would expect to find it vehemently pressed under the Fourth Head, where he undertakes to shew what should be the Result of all; but I have searched carefully, and can find nothing there, nor any where else, of any such Exhortation.

There is indeed a Calling upon the Pastors of the Church, who were not present, to thunder out Anathemas against Schism; which could not be to persuade those Pastors that did not hear him, but to condemn their Remissness to the People that did. But all the rest is to the People, to adhere to the Fundamental Principles; to watch against, MARK AND AVOID, those that desert them; to give Place, BY SUBJECTION, no not an Hour; to despise sneaking Shuffling COMPLIANCES, and put on their BRAVEST Resolutions, which the PRESENT Case required: There is a denouncing Woe to the fearful Heart and faint Hands; a shewing the Perils and low Estate of the Church, that her Sons deserted her, that she lay bleeding of her Wounds; that her Adversaries were CHIEF, and her Enemies AT THAT TIME prospered.

Is this the Language of one, that is only laying before Magistrates the Abuses of a few inferior Persons, within their Power, subject to their Authority, and whom they could easily crush, and desiring those Magistrates to correct them?

In short, Is it calling upon the Magistrates, or upon the People, for Justice?

Again:

He solemnly declares his Meaning in the Sermon to have been, That the Dangers of the Church are only such as arise from the Sins of the Nation, but not in the least from her Majesty and her Administration.

Let any one cast his Eye upon the Sermon, or upon the Dedication of that preached at Derby, and try how the several Expressions suit this Scheme; and he will see, the Doctor had nothing of it in View then, but that 'tis contrived since, for him to pretend now.

What Dangers of the Church and Constitution he means in the Sermon, is too plain to be shifted off by a Protestation: He tells you expressly what they are, and from whom; from Men, whom he describes as being in the Administration, who undermine and betray the Church, and enable others to destroy it; they are such as he apprehends, not from the Hands of God, but from the Treachery and Violence of Men.

Accordingly, the whole tends to stir up Anger, Indignation and Fury against those Men; not to move Humiliation and Prayers to God, to avert those impending Judgments.

But possibly he may expect to be understood, not of an immediate Vengeance of God, or his delivering us into the Hands of a Foreign Enemy, but his permitting wicked Men at home to overthrow the Church.

If we take it to be so, this solemn Protestation is a mere Evasion, and a shifting the Question.

'Tis true, the Overthrow of the Church and Constitution is the heaviest Judgment can befall us, and if it does happen, must be accounted the Act of Divine Justice punishing us for our Sins. All National Punishments are certainly the more immediate Acts of the Justice of Providence; and the Instruments made use of to bring them about, are very often wicked Men.

The Prophane Writers, the Atheists, the Abusers of the Toleration, the Vilifiers of Holy Orders, of the Church, and of Christianity, and other wicked Men, may have given great Provocations to Almighty God; and if I should say so great, as may give just Cause to fear a Judgment upon us, that may endanger the Church and Constitution; yet still the Question is, What Hands are about to execute this Judgment upon us? We charge him as representing the Church in Danger under her Majesty's Administration; as suggesting that her Majesty's Administration, in Church and State, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution; and and consequently, that the Hands of those in the Administration are about to execute such Judgment: And he solemnly protests, he apprehends no Danger but from God.

My Lords, This is trifling; for every such Danger is from God, and is his Judgment, whoever they be, whether her Majesty, and her Ministry, or any others, that immediately bring it upon us.

This therefore, instead of answering, is evading, and diverting your Lordships View from the Persons he charges to be working the Ruin of the Church, to God the Supreme Director and Over-ruler of all the Actions and Designs of Men. As if the Reflection on the Queen and her Administration were the less, for saying, that they are the Instruments in the Hand of God to scourge the Nation for its Sins, and to execute his Vengeance in overthrowing the Church and Constitution.

So that I am afraid, this Part of his Solemn Protestation is either false, or evasive, or both.

And let so much suffice to be added on these Clauses.

To what I offered to your Lordships on the Clause of keeping up Distinction of Factions and Parties;

I desire to add the Weight of One Authority, out of the Excellent Sermon preached by the most Reverend Prelate, my Lord Archbishop of York, and produced by the Doctor.

The Words are these:

“ They are Factious, they are Setters up and Abettors of Parties, who endeavour to destroy, or unsettle, or disparage, or in the least hurt or weaken the Government, and the Laws as they are established; let the Principles on which they go, or the Pretences they make, be what they will.”

Whether the Doctor hath not endeavoured in the highest Degree to disparage the Government, and consequently to weaken it, your Lordships will judge.

As to the other Clauses, they have offered very little, and I will not repeat what I said before.

Only I would take notice, that under the Head of stirring up to Arms, something was urged by the Council, in relation to what I said upon some Texts of Scripture, but so entirely mistaking my Meaning, that I think my self unconcerned therein.

As for perverting Scripture;

The Council would seem to pretend something or other to be the Mistake of the Printer, without saying where the Mistake is, or how they would have it read.

I'll tell your Lordships what the Mistake is; it is Printing the Second Chapter of Lamentations instead of the First, and Misplacing the References to Lamentations and Zechariah; which I scorned to take Advantage of, and, in what I said, rectify'd.

But this served for a Shew of an Excuse.

They said something more on this Head, but not to what was my Objection; but promised the Doctor should clear all.

My Lords, I think I might reasonably here put an End to the Trouble I am giving your Lordships; but that I apprehend some Things which fell from the Doctor, and which have not fallen in my way already, may be proper to be taken notice of, so far as concerns what is within my Province.

I own, his Speech was extremely well composed, fitted not so much to inform (his Case would not bear that) as to move, (wherein his Hopes were more justly placed;) not so much to state the Question, and clear it, as to divert it: All the plausible Topicks were laboured, and all the Arguments that press'd hardest upon him, and most required an Answer, pass'd over in Silence; the Whole framed to give the Passions Mastery over Reason, and to induce a Persuasion, that so good, so excellent a Man as he painted himself, that has so many Virtues, so great Sincerity, so true a Zeal for Religion, could not be Guilty of this Charge, though plainly proved upon him: The Protestations were strong and hearty, and such as will read well amongst the People; clear of all those qualifying Clauses, that might perhaps have made it suit better with the Truth of his Case, but would have had the Inconvenience of giving to the Readers Suspicion of Guilt. An agreeable Concern for Religion and Virtue ran thro' all; which will always strike an Audience, and seems intended to make some Amends for the Rage and Fury, and Zeal for Party in the Sermon.

I only wish, for the Doctor's Sake, the Composer had preserved a little more Regard, as well to what was fit to be said here, (where the Truth of the whole Matter is known) as to what was fit to be said abroad, and given it a little more Resemblance of the Doctor and his Sermon; That he had not calculated so many Parts of it for an Appeal to the People, and to obtain their Acquittal upon his own Word. And I must needs say for my self, (tho' my liking, or disliking it, is of very little Moment) had it had fewer and less Solemn Appeals to God Almighty, or more Truth, or I known less of the Matter, I should have liked it much better.

He begins with making his Order, the Church and Christianity to be concerned in the Cause; intending it, I presume, to be understood abroad as a Charge upon his Accusers, that in his Person they arraign all these.

But I shall not pretend to follow him throughout the whole Speech, only point out some Fallacies in it.

My Lords, Great Regard is to be had to the Word, much more to the Solemn Declaration, much more to the Oath of a Clergyman, when he is free and unbiass'd.

But when he stands in Judgment, when the Rod is over him, when there is only one way open for Escape from the just Punishment due to his Crimes, by protesting his Innocence; neither his Word, nor his Declaration, nor his Oath is to be regarded.

That Method will acquit all that are accused; and the less Conscience any such Wretch has, the surer and easier will be his Escape.

And therefore your Lordships will judge, by what the Doctor has taught the People, what he has published, and not by what he pretends to be his Intentions in doing it.

He makes Complaint of the Generality of the Charge, that it was such that he knew not where it would point.

My Lords, Suppose we had followed the more common Way, and set forth all the Passages we have read, or the whole Sermon and Dedication verbatim, (as we might have done) without pointing out what we objected to, or why; had that left him less in the dark? It was therefore more for his Advantage, that we should tell him the particular Points we would insist upon, than if we had left our selves at Liberty at the Trial, to make as many Points as we then pleased.

He lays it down for a Rule, That the bigger the Charge is, the more clear ought the Proof to be.

My Lords, The Proof here is indisputable; the Sermons and Books are not denied to be his. And these these are all that strictly make the Evidence in the Case; the rest is but Argument, and shewing them to be Libellous in the Particulars in the Charge.

But take Proof in a larger Sense, so as that it may extend to the Reasoning upon the Evidence, and to the making good the Charge, as in this Case is perhaps not improper:

I have no Reason, in respect of this Charge against him, to contest his Rule, because the Proof of it is clear in that Sense too.

But yet, for the sake of Justice, I shall take the Liberty to say, that, as apply'd to this Case, it is a Fallacy.

This sort of Proof arises from the Sense and Doctrine of his Books.

And I presume, the Doctor cannot hope, that because this is charged to be so high a Crime, as Defaming and Undermining the Government, any more favourable Meaning is to be put upon his Words, than if it were the less Crime of defaming a Private Person; or that your Lordships should not understand in this Case, (that which every body else that hears it, understands) and which your Lordships would have understood, if it had not endangered the Government.

I own, I cannot comprehend why your Lordships should be more shy of Defending the Government, than a private Reputation; or most afraid of censuring that which is infinitely the most dangerous Consequence, if it escape uncensured.

On the contrary, in the Case of those Things which tend to the Overthrow of the Constitution, where the Rules and Methods of Inferior Courts cannot apply a proper Remedy, your Lordships (upon the Impeachment of the Commons) may. Let the Contrivance lie never so deep, be never so artfully wrought, when it strikes at our All, it would be absurd to say, the Commons may not bring it to the Bar of Justice, and your Lordships prevent its dreadful Effects, and give it the Punishment it deserves.

My Lords, Without that Power, your Constitution were weak and precarious.

THE Doctor observes in what manner the Charge against him is supported, not by express Sentences of his, but by Inferences, and joining independent Sentences, (as to that part I have considered it already;) and he seems to expect, that if he were Guilty of Suggesting and Maintaining the Things charged upon him, the Passages might as easily be pointed to in his Sermon, as the Doctrine in those he produced; and that bare reading, without a Comment, would convict him.

No, my Lords—Even Doctor Sacheverell is not yet arrived at that Pitch, as to arraign the Government so directly and openly, as to preach a general Doctrine.

This Fallacy seems very gross.

For is it reasonable to think, that a Man that intends to unhinge the Government, to expose an Administration, to fire the People, to raise Sedition, should speak directly and plainly? No—he is to cover his Design even from those he is to draw in; he is to pretend Zeal for Religion, insinuate himself by degrees, not shock his Hearers at first with a Declaration against a Queen they are fond of; he must pretend Zeal for her Majesty, to preserve their good Opinion of himself, while he is doing that which by degrees will alienate their Affections from Her. This he must do, though there were none to punish, and to prevent the dashing his own Hopes of Success. But when he knows that the Power of the Administration he is to revile and rail at, is over him, and at hand; that is a farther Reason for Caution: Therefore in such Discourses, dark Phrases are to be studied, confused Descriptions will be frequent, with a perpetual Perplexity of Expression, between saying what his Rancour will not let him withhold, and withholding what his Fear will not let him speak out. Schemes of Speech are to be contrived, that have two Meanings; the one more obvious and plain, to have its full Effect upon the People; and the other (that will occur to no body else) a Reserve to be offered to a Court of Justice. This is naturally to be expected in Seditious Discourses. But if your Lordships will pass this by, which has spoke infinitely more plain and audaciously than any other (I believe) that ever so publicly dared Authority, your Lordships may expect to see a new Discourse from the Doctor, where Sedition, that had but a very thin Disguise in this, shall there have none at all.

And this may serve for an Answer to what is urged from his zealous Expressions for the Queen; for if the whole Discourse have quite another Tendency, it is plain that those are only Parts of the Blind and Disguise.

He complains, That he is accused for what he has omitted, as if done with Design; and his Silence is made criminal.

My Lords, I was the Person that took Notice of his Omissions, but I did not make them a part of his Charge.

Indeed, when he in his Answer protested (as now he does more solemnly) his Loyalty, I took that Profession into Consideration, as a part of his Defence, which I ought to take notice of.

I had learned, that the best way to try the Truth or Falsity of Pretenders to Virtue or Religion, was by their Fruits.

Accordingly I considered his Management of his Text in this Sermon, how agreeable it was to such Profession, and to see what Fruits of Loyalty I could find there.

And your Lordships will now apply those Observations to his solemn Appeal to God before your Lordships, that his Intentions in that Sermon were to exert his BEST ENDEAVOUR for the Security of her Majesty.

I shewed your Lordships, that he omitted the only true Notion of False Brotherhood in State, which took in the Non-Jurors and Disaffected, tho' his Text led to it; that he had omitted to make the proper Use of the Doctrine of Passive Obedience, which was to press Obedience and Submission TO HER MAJESTY, tho' the Day and the Doctrine seemed both to require it.

That he had set up another Notion of False Brotherhood, which I shewed to be, upon his own Principles, wrong.

By these I try'd his Pretences, and shewed, that if they were sincere, this Behaviour was unaccountable; but if he were at Heart for the Pretender, I made it manifest that all his Proceedure was just; nay, that even his Notions of False Brotherhood was right to him that was of that Mind, and that his Application of the first of Lamentations was exact and fine upon that Supposition, which is never to be justified or excused on any other.

This I then press'd no farther, than to shew that his Sermon had in it no Fruits of that Loyalty which he pretended.

But I may make a further Use of it now, as a plain Contradiction to his Solemn Declaration.

For has he pretended to give any Answer to this?

Was I wrong in my Notion of False Brotherhood, or was he right in his? Has he made that Use of Passive Obedience, as to press Submission to the Queen from it? Has he not let the Non-Jurors escape, tho' his Text led him to speak against them, and advanced a wrong Notion of False Brotherhood merely to fall foul upon those that justify the Resistance in the Revolution, and cut off thereby every Colour of Title to the Pretender? Or does he offer to reconcile that Proceeding with his Pretence? No — And then, tho' bare Omission were not a Fault, yet I may now ask; Is that Omission consistent with his Protestation of an Intention to exert his best Endeavour for Security of the Queen? Did he exert, or intend to exert his best Endeavours, that omitted things so very obvious? Nay, where does he shew that he has exerted any such Endeavour at all?

On the contrary, he has fallen into the Methods used by those that are against her Majesty, to undermine and weaken her Title, and to disparage her Government, and to render it odious to the People.

He complains that where he presses Obedience to the Queen, we say he means the Pretender.

My Lords, It was one of the Omissions that I urged against him in the manner I have just mention'd, that he nowhere presses Obedience to the Queen.

Does he think it had not become him to shew where he did press it, if he could?

Or what Name does he think is to be given to his taking it for granted, that he had done that, which it was expressly charged he had not done, and which he cannot shew he has?

He seems to complain of some Expressions that have been used against him by the Managers, as not becoming this Place, or his Order.

My Lords, I hope we shall always demean our selves with just Respect towards your Lordships.

And as to him, he is to consider, that there is a wide Difference between what a private Man says of others, much more of his Governors, in Conversation, or in popular Assemblies, and what is spoke of an accused Person at his Trial. In the former Case, it is not fit to speak ill of them, that which is true; in the other, the Crime is to be represented as it is, and the Person is to have no Respect paid him that shall any way tend to prevent shewing the full Enormity of the Crime in all its true Colours. And if any thing has been said, which otherwise his Orders would have secured him from, let him remember that his Crime deprives him at this Time of that Protection; where 'tis one Aggravation, that he has abused his holy Function; which it was the Business of the Managers, both to say and to make out.

He complains that there is no Allowance made to a Minister rebuking Vice and Irreligion with Zeal, when he happens thereby to be carried into an Expression not well guarded.

My Lords, His Zeal is levelled more at Persons than Crimes, he mentions not false Doctrines to confute them, nor the Faults of those that bear him, that they may amend them; but rails at Persons absent to expose them; and raise the Passions of his Auditory against them; His Zeal leads to bunt out Faults, for an Occasion of Complaint; to magnify whatever is amiss, and charge all home upon the Government; departing from the Office of an Am- bassador of the Prince of Peace, and preaching Sedition and Rebellion.

And in such Case, his Orders are so far from being an Excuse, that they are an Aggravation; when he who ought to preach Peace, Long-Suffering, Gentleness and Submission, foments Divisions, creates Jealousies; heightens Animosities, and disturbs the Government.

But where there is a Sermon truly tending to promote Religion and Virtue, God forbid that any incautious Expressions in it, tho' justly exceptionable, should be laid hold on as an Occasion to punish the Preacher; it has not been done, nor, I think, ought to be.

Yet when a Minister presumes to go out of his Way, and to meddle with the Government, he ought to be more than ordinarily wary in his Expressions, since his Character gives his Reflections greater Weight and Force with the People, and his Errors will therefore do the greatest Mischief.

And this Man that professes to preach Politicks, and laughs at those that tell him 'tis his Duty to preach Peace, and is inflaming the People against their Sovereign, must not think himself entitled to that Favour.

I own I am very well pleased to hear the Doctor's Declaration in Favour of the Succession in the House of Hanover, and his earnest Prayer for perpetuating it. Because, whenever our Sins shall be the Occasion of our losing the best of Queens, the Security of our Religion and Liberties for our Posterity depends upon it.

But I a little wonder, that he appeals to God that in this Sermon he had sincere Intentions to exert his best Endeavours for the Security of the Queen, and the Protestant Succession. I hope he is hearty for both, but sure, his best Endeavours for them are not exerted in this Sermon.

As for the Queen, I have spoke already.

As for the Succession, I own myself entirely at a Loss, in what part of the Sermon it is, that he has exerted any Endeavour at all for the Security of the Protestant Succession: I do not find any thing that I apprehend can concern it, except that Place where he ridicules the Notion of any Right to the Crown, but an Hereditary Right.

THE COUNCIL having in great measure declined that Head about Wresting and perverting divers Texts and Passages of Holy Scripture, and seeming to promise that the Doctor should give Satisfaction therein; I was in great Expectation of his Performance there; but am miserably disappointed, and cannot but be in some Confusion for the Doctor; tho' he seems to have entire Satisfaction in himself.

His Conduct upon this Clause, from first to last, amazes me.

His Answer put in before your Lordships to the Charge of the Commons, is throughout evasive and reflecting; but in this part of it there is a Master-piece of Equivocation and Malice, to avoid either confessing or denying the Charge, and to cast an Odium on the Commons as Persecutors of the Clergy.

The Words are these:

"Hard is the Lot of the Ministers of the God, if when they cite the Word of God in their general Exhortations to Piety and Virtue; or in Reproof of Mens Transgressions, or where they are lamenting the Difficulties and Conflicts with which the Church of Christ whilst militant here on Earth, must always struggle; the several Texts

"and

"and Passages by them cited, shall be said to have been by them meant of particular Persons and Things, and shall be considered in the most criminal Sense, and be made by such Construction, one Ground of an Impeachment for High Crimes and Misdemeanors."

These are the Words of his Answer; and give me leave to ask, Do they deny, or do they confess the Charge?

Neither——But are an Appeal to the Passions of the People, amongst whom it has been so industriously and irregularly dispersed.

Yet I dare say every unwary Reader took the Doctor to have deny'd this Charge, and felt some Indignation against the Commons for making it.

My Lords, he has now come upon his Trial, he has been charged home upon this Head.

And permit me to say, there cannot be a heavier Charge upon a Minister of the Gospel, nor more afflicting to any one that has not abandoned all Pretence to Common Honesty.

Give me leave to mention some of those solemn Words, wherein a Priest receives his Orders. "Receive the Holy Ghost, for the Office and Work of a Priest in the Church of God; and be thou a faithful Dispenser of the Word of God, and of his Sacraments, in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

This Crime therefore, when committed by a Priest, is betraying that sacred Trust reposed in him with his holy Orders; 'tis forging the Authority of God, 'tis assuming a Superiority over the inspired Writers, if not over Him that inspired them.

The Doctor therefore, that is sensible (as he says) of the Load of Guilt and Infamy the Charge of the Commons lays upon him, and whereof this is surely the heaviest Part; What does he say to this?

He says, if he be guilty he is to answer it at another Tribunal, where he is to be judged by those Scriptures.

My Lords, so he is to answer at that great Tribunal for every Branch of this present Charge.

But is this all? Is he negligent of his Reputation in no other Instance but this, that is the tenderest and most afflicting?

Or will he thus give himself up for a Falsifier of the Word of God, and yet have the Confidence to hope for any Reputation, or any Capacity of doing good in preaching it?

Is it thus the Dignity of the Sacred Order is to be supported?

Is this the Cause of the Church, and of Christianity? And are they wound up in the Fate of an Impostor and false Prophet?

Pardon the Warmth of Expression; his not saying a Word to the Charge, owns all this.

My Lords, It is true (as the Doctor has said) the Sacred Order, the Church and Christianity are concerned in this Cause; but 'tis, that they may be clear'd from the Reproach brought upon them by this unhappy Man.

But if he be self-condemned, if he dare not open his Mouth on this Subject, how dare he declare his Hopes, that those of your Lordships, whose Studies more particularly lead that way, should acquit him?

My Lords, He has made an Appearance before your Lordships in a manner very extraordinary, not only as in a Defence of a Prosecution, but as in a most solemn Act of Devotion, before the most August Judicature on Earth, appealing to a yet greater in Heaven.

But with what Sincerity! what Candor! or what Sense of that which he has done!

VOL. V.

I am amazed, that a Person in holy Orders, in his distinguishing Habit, before this awful Assembly, should dare to take the tremendous Name of God into his Lips, and appeal to him for the Sincerity and Integrity of his Heart, at that very Time when he stands charged with this black Crime, and is neither able to repel it, nor has the Sincerity and Honesty to repent, to take Shame upon himself in the most publick manner, and to ask Pardon of God and the World for it.

But while he can thus, with such Assurance as your Lordships have seen, and now see, face out such a Crime, and be equivocating and playing double with your Lordships, with God Almighty, and his own Conscience; what Regard is to be had to his most solemn Protestations? His manifest Insincerity in this plain Point, leaves him no Credit in any thing; and his having taken the Abjuration Oath, gives me not the least Difficulty, after what I have observed of his more solemn Oath before your Lordships.

My Lords, The just Veneration we owe to the Divine Majesty, (for the Doctor's Behaviour has made that now part of the Case) the Honour of Christianity, the Church and its Holy Orders, the Security of the present Establishment and the Protestant Succession, the Safety of her Majesty's Person, the Quiet of her Government, the Duty we owe to her as our Sovereign, the Gratitude for her most gracious Administration, the Honour of our Prelates, the Obligations we are under to prevent Seditions and Tumults, to undeceive the People, to quiet the Minds of the Protestant Dissenters, and convince them that the Toleration allowed them by Law is not to be taken away from them, to secure at present, and transmit to our Posterity (as far as in us lies) our Religion and Liberties, and vindicate the Revolution (which is the Foundation on which they stand) and the Glory of our late Royal Deliverer, to whom, under God, we owed it; and to banish Sedition from the Pulpit, which is, and ever ought to be sacred to Divine Purposes, REQUIRE the Commons to demand your Lordships Judgment on this Offender.

But, my Lords, he observes so far rightly, that his Punishment is not all we aim at.

No, my Lords,——What we expect from your Lordships Justice, is, the supporting our Establishment, the preventing all Attempts to sap its Foundation, and answering those other great Purposes I have mentioned; and I hope the Clergy will be instructed, not to preach the Doctrine of Submission in such manner as to prepare the way to Rebellion, but to follow the Advice and Example of my Lord Archbishop of York, rather than tread in the Steps of Doctor Sacheverell.

And we doubt not, but that those to whom our Proceedings have been so industriously misrepresented, will see and own the Favour shewn to this Man, in the manner of the Charge; and our Care for the Honour of the Church and Clergy, in singling out for an Example for these impious Attempts against his Country, him that now plainly appears the Shame of his own Order.

Lord Nottingham. My Lords, I desire your Opinion, whether I may propose a Question to the Judges here.

Thereupon the Lords, being moved to adjourn, adjourned to the House of Lords; and being returned, and seated as before, Proclamation was made for Silence.

Note, During this Adjournment, the Lords on Debate agreed, That the Question should be proposed in Westminster-Hall.

5 N 2

Lord

Lord Nottingham. My Lords, The Question I humbly propose to your Lordships, that my Noble Lord on the Woolfack may propose to the Reverend Judges, is, Whether by the Law of England, and constant Practice in all Prosecutions, by Indictment or Information for Crimes and Misdemeanors by Writing or Speaking, the particular Words, supposed to be Criminal, must not be expressly specified in such Indictment or Information?

Then the Lords were moved to adjourn, and accordingly adjourned to the House of Lords; and being returned, and seated as before, Proclamation was made for Silence.

Lord Chancellor. I take it, the Question that your Lordships are of Opinion to ask the Judges for them to give an Answer to, is, Whether by the Law of England, and constant Practice in all Prosecutions, by Indictment or Information for Crimes and Misdemeanors by Writing or Speaking, the particular Words, supposed to be Criminal, must not be expressly specified in such Indictment or Information?

Mr. Baron Lovell. My Lords, I have always taken it to be so, and by constant Experience we have practis'd it so, that all Words and Writings, which are supposed to be Criminal, ought to be expressly mentioned in the Information or Indictment.

Mr. Justice Dormer. My Lords, I am of Opinion, That by the Laws of England, and constant Practice in all Prosecutions, by Indictment or Information for Crimes and Misdemeanors in Writing or Speaking, the particular Words supposed to be Criminal, ought to be specify'd in such Indictment or Information, in the Courts of Westminster-Hall.

Mr. Baron Bury. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion with my Brothers.

Mr. Justice Tracy. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion.

Mr. Justice Gould. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion. It is our Practice in the King's Bench; and we specify the Words in the Indictment, or it is Cause of Demurrer.

Mr. Justice Blencowe. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion with my Brothers.

Mr. Justice Powys. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion.

Mr. Justice Powell. My Lords, The Law of England is certainly so.

Lord Chief Baron. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion.

Lord Chief Justice Trevor. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion, That by the Laws of England the Words ought to be specify'd in the Indictment or Information.

Then the Lords adjourned to the House of Lords, as before.

Note, The Lords did not come again into Westminster-Hall 'till Monday the 20th of this Month of March; but in order to the Delivery of their Opinions, did on some of the intermediate Days come to these following Resolutions, viz.

Monday, March 20.

The Lords coming down from Westminster-Hall, and being seated in the manner before-mentioned, Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows:

Then another Proclamation was made: Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, else thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Then some Time being spent by the Lord Chancellor in numbring the Opinions of the Lords:

Lord Chancellor. My Lords, I have cast them up with as much Exactness as I can; and I find that there are of your Lordships present in all One Hundred Twenty one; of these Sixty Nine of your Lordships have found Dr. Henry Sacheverell Guilty of the High Crimes and Misdemeanors charged on him by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and Fifty Two have found him Not Guilty.

Then Dr. Henry Sacheverell was brought to the Bar, and kneel'd till he was bid to stand up by the Lord Chancellor.

Lord Chancellor. Dr. Henry Sacheverell, The Lords having fully considered of your Case, have found found you Guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, charged on you by the Impeachment of the House of Commons.

Dr. Sacheverell. My Lords, One of your Lordships Officers acquainted me, that it was your Lordships Order, That neither I nor my Counsel might have the Privilege of standing at the Bar while your Lordships were giving your Opinions whether I was Guilty of the Crimes laid to my Charge; by which Means I was prevented from offering several Matters to your Lordships Consideration in Arrest of Judgment, which I now beg leave to offer to your Lordships Consideration, and I desire my Counsel might be heard to them.

The first is, That no entire Clause, Sentence or Expression, contained in either of my Sermons or Dedications, is particularly set forth in my Impeachment, which I have already heard the Judges declare to be necessary in all Cases of Indictments or Informations.

I desire to add another Exception, That the Impeachment is by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses, Commissioners of Shires and Burghs, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain; but the Articles are only by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses, in the Name of Themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain; which is neither agreeable to the Impeachment, nor to the Title of the House of Commons since the happy Union.

Then the Lords adjourned to the House of Lords,

Where they took into Consideration the Matter moved by Dr. Sacheverell in Arrest of Judgment; and thereupon ordered,

That this House will, to-morrow, at eleven of the Clock, take into Consideration what Censure to pass upon the said Dr. Henry Sacheverell.

Tuesday, March 21.

The Lords, upon Debate in the House of Lords, agreed upon the Judgment to be passed in this Case upon Dr. Henry Sacheverell, in the Form hereafter mentioned.

Wednesday, March 22. in the House of Lords.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, to acquaint them, That the Lords are ready to give Judgment in the Case of Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, if they with their Speaker will come and demand the same.

Thursday, March 23. in the House of Lords.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, to acquaint the House of Lords, That the House of Commons, with their Speaker, do intend immediately to come to the House of Lords, to demand Judgment against Dr. Henry Sacheverell; and therefore desire that the Painted-Chamber, and Passage to the House (of Lords) may be cleared.

The Messengers were called in and told, the Lords would give Order as desired.

Which was done accordingly.

Then the House of Lords adjourned during Pleasure to Robe.

And being resumed,

The Commons, with their Speaker, being present at the Bar of the House of Lords,

The Deputy Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod brought the Prisoner to the Bar, who after low Obeisances made, kneel'd, until the Lord Chancellor bid him stand up.

Then the Speaker said as followeth, viz.

My Lords, The Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses in Parliament Assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, did at this Bar Impeach Dr. Henry Sacheverell of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and did exhibit Articles of Impeachment against him, and have made good the same:

I do therefore, in the Name of the Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses in Parliament Assembled, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, demand Judgment of your Lordships against Dr. Henry Sacheverell, for the said High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Then the Lord Chancellor said,

Mr. Speaker, The Lords are now ready to proceed to Judgment in the Case by you mentioned.

Dr. Sacheverell, the Lords having found you Guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, charged on you by the Impeachment of the House of Commons; and you being thereupon admitted to the Bar, and acquainted therewith, moved two Things in Arrest of Judgment.

First, That no entire Clause of either of the Books or Sermons referred to in the Impeachment, is specify'd, or particularly set forth, in any of the Articles of Impeachment.

Secondly, That in the Title of the Articles exhibited by the Commons, the Style of the Commons run thus,

"The Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses in Parliament Assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, &c." Omitting the Words, Commissioners of Shires and Burghs.

I am to acquaint you, That the Lords took these Points into Consideration.

I. And as to the First, they found,

That on Occasion of the Question before put to the Judges in Westminster-Hall in this Case, and their Answer thereto, their Lordships had before fully debated and considered of that Matter, and had come to the following Resolution:

That this House will proceed to the Determination of the Impeachment of Dr. Henry Sacheverell, according to the Law of the Land, and the Law and Usage of Parliament.

And after, to this Resolution;

That by the Law and Usage of Parliament, in Prosecutions by Impeachments for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, by Writing or Speaking, the particular Words supposed to be criminal are not necessary to be expressly specified in such Impeachments.

So that, in their Lordships Opinion, the Law and Usage of the High Court of Parliament being a Part of the Law of the Land, and that Usage not requiring the Words should be expressly specified in Impeachments, the Answer of the Judges, which related only to the Course used in Indictments and Informations, does not in the least affect your Case.

II. As to the Second,

Their Lordships finding, that in the Act made in the Sixth Year of Her now Majesty, For rendering dering the Union of the two Kingdoms more entire and compleat, the Terms Commissioners of Shires and Knights of the Shires, Commissioners of Boroughs and Burgeses, are used as synonymous Terms, signifying the same Thing; they were clearly of Opinion there can be no Weight in that Exception, and accordingly over-ruled the same; without entring into the further Consideration, how far a Mistake in the Title of the Articles, would viciate or avoid an Impeachment, if such a Mistake had happened.

So that the Lords find themselves obliged by Law to proceed to Judgment against you, which I am ordered to pronounce.

And in which you cannot but observe an extreme Tendernefs towards your Character, as a Minister of the Church of England.

Therefore this High Court doth adjudge as followeth,

That you Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, shall be, and you are hereby enjoined not to preach during the Term of three Years next ensuing.

That your two printed Sermons, referred to by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, shall be burnt before the Royal Exchange in London, between the Hours of one and two of the Clock, on the twenty-seventh day of this instant March, by the Hands of the common Hangman, in the Presence of the Lord Mayor of the City of London, and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

Then the Speaker with the Commons returned to their House; and Dr. Sacheverell being withdrawn,

The House was adjourned during Pleasure to unrobe.

The House was resumed.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Dr. Henry Sacheverell's two printed Sermons, one preached at Derby Assizes, and the other at St. Paul's, London, referred to by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, shall be burnt before the Royal-Exchange in London, between the Hours of one and two of the Clock, on the seven and twentieth day of this instant March, by the Hands of the common Hangman, in the Presence of the Lord Mayor of the City of London, and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

To the Lord Mayor of the City of London, and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

The House taking into Consideration a Judgment and Decree of the University of Oxford, passed in their Convocation the one and twentieth of July, one thousand six hundred eighty-three, given in Evidence by Dr. Henry Sacheverell at his Trial, upon the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and thereupon lately reprinted; It is Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the said Judgment and Decree contains in it several Positions contrary to the Constitution of this Kingdom, and destructive to the Protestant Succession as by Law established.

It is thereupon Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the said Judgment and Decree, lately printed and published in a Book or Pamphlet, entitled, An entire Confutation of Mr. Hoadly's Book of the Original of Government, taken from the London Gazette, published by Authority; London, Reprinted in the Year 1710. shall be burnt by the Hands of the common Hangman, in the Presence of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex; at the same Time and Place, when and where the Sermons of Dr. Henry Sacheverell are ordered to be burnt.

To the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain do give Order for the printing and publishing the Trial of Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity; and that no other Person do presume to print the same. And further, That the last mentioned Resolution and Order agreed on this Day, be printed at the End of the said Trial.

The Lord Haversham's SPEECH in the House of Lords, on the first Article of the Impeachment of Dr. Henry Sacheverell.

My LORDS,

WHEN I consider where this Impeachment first began, I cannot but think the Design of it was very good; but whatever it was, in its first Intendment, it is very evident, it has already produced very mischievous Effects; it has created great Disturbances in private Families, and Tumults among the People; and raised a Ferment in the Nation, that will not be laid by your Lordships Judgment, let that be what it will. It has been a two-edged Mischief; giving the Church on the one side, and the Dissenter on the other, too just Apprehension, that they are both in danger. Nor can this be wondered at, when your Lordships have been told, by some of the Managers, of a pretended Divine Right of the Church; and when it has been more than hinted by the Managers of the House of Commons, That the Clergy ought to be directed by the Civil Power, what Doctrine they should teach: Nay, when they have authoritatively taken upon them to interpret Scripture, and charged it as a Crime upon a Minister, that he had wrested several Places of it to his own wicked Intentions.

My Lords, After so noble a Defence made for the Doctor by his Counsel, and to great and moving moving an Apology by himself, I should not trouble your Lordships upon this Occasion, were it not more in Justification of myself, for the Judgment I shall give, than for the sake of the Doctor, whose Cause, I think, now stands in very little need of it.

I was, my Lords, a Sufferer in the late Reigns, as well as others; I was in the Convention-Parliament, and in the Vote of Abdication; and am, at this day, of the same Principle I was then; and yet, notwithstanding this, I am not ashamed to say to your Lordships, that I think myself obliged, in Justice, to acquit the Doctor from the Charge brought against him in this Article. And tho' this may seem strange to some of your Lordships, yet, I hope, it will not appear so very strange as to see Bishops vote against their own Doctrines, and Dissenters in the midst of a Mob, that are pulling down Meeting-Houses; especially, after the Reasons I shall offer to your Lordships for the Support of my Opinion.

I shall not trouble your Lordships about the Original of Government, or the divers Forms of it; your Lordships heard that learnedly discoursed on by one of the Managers of the House of Commons below: But there is one thing, My Lords, that if my Memory serves me right, that Gentleman omitted, and it is a Matter too that I take to be of the greatest Consequence to any Government whatsoever: I mean, the Divine Appointment, or Institution of Government itself; from which Appointment it is, that Men are obliged to Obedience to the Magistrate, not only for Wrath, or Fear of him, but for Conscience-sake, for Dread of a future Punishment, which is the greatest Security the Magistrate has. And I the rather mention this, because of Notions that some People have of late advanced of their own, (and have found their Advantage too in so doing) of a discretionary Obedience only; that is, in my Opinion, whilst the Government is for them, they will be for it; and think themselves bound to obey no longer. It is not necessary, to the Proof of this Divine Authority, to fix the just Time and Place, when, and where, and how the Knowledge of it was first communicated to Mankind: It is enough, that we have it as expressly, as plainly, and as clearly declared, as can be put into Words, that it is so.

There is another thing, My Lords, that in general, I would mention to your Lordships, before I come to the Article itself, which may otherwise be the Occasion of some Mistake in this Debate; we are not now judging according to our own Notions of Politicks, or determining how far Resistance or Non-Resistance is lawful. It would be a strange Rule of Judgment, to find any Man guilty for the sake of one's own private Opinion, and for the establishing a Doctrine which he likes, and his Neighbour does not. But the only Question before your Lordships is, whether, and how far, the House of Commons have made good their Charge against the Doctor. And, I take liberty to say plainly to your Lordships, that, in my Opinion, they have been very far from making good their Charge against him in this Article.

My Lords, to prevent the least Mistake, I shall read the Words of the Article to your Lordships, as they stand in the Impeachment.

"He, the said Henry Sacheverell, in his said Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, doth suggest and maintain, That the necessary Means used to bring about the said happy Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable: That his late Majesty, in his Declaration, disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance, and that to impute Resistance to the said Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the said Revolution."

The Doctor in this Article is charged with having maintained, That the necessary Means used to bring about the late happy Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable. To support this, the Commons say, That having asserted the general Proposition of the Unlawfulness of Resisting the Supreme Power, and not having excepted the particular Case of Resistance that was made use of as a Means to bring about the late happy Revolution; he does thereby reflect both upon the Means, and upon the said Revolution. In Answer to this, there have been two Things insisted upon to your Lordships, in behalf of the Doctor, by his Counsel: First, That in Cases of such a Nature as this, the Exception is always imply'd in the general Rule; and there was a very unanswerable Instance brought in Proof of this, at least to most of your Lordships; it was the Oath of Allegiance to King James. All those that took that Oath, took it in general Words, and yet such an extraordinary Case as the Revolution was excepted, tho' not express'd by those that took that Oath. The next was, the Doctor, say they, would have been justly more blam'd, had he mention'd all the Cases of Exception, which extraordinary Cases ought to answer for themselves, whenever they fall out.

And tho', My Lords, these two be a full Answer, yet there are two things more, I think, with Submission, may be added to it, which have not as yet been taken notice of.

The first is, My Lords, That the Proof against the Doctor is drawn by Consequences of the Commons own making, which he himself disowns; and I appeal to that Reverend and Learned Bench, who are great Masters of Controversy, whether it is not an establish'd Rule amongst all learned Men that have the least Spark of Ingenuity, That no Man ought to be charged with Consequences, let them appear to his Adversary never so clearly and undeniably to follow from his Assertion, when he himself denies those Consequences. This is so known a Maxim, in all Disputes between Protestants and Papists, and between Protestants themselves, that it cannot be denied. Now, the Doctor himself denying, as he does, that he had the least Thought of including the Revolution under his general Assertion, or that he apply'd his Doctrine of Non-Resistance to that Case, cannot, without the highest Injustice, be charged with Consequences which he himself utterly denies.

In the next place, it is impossible, in my Opinion, to prove that Resistance was made use of as a Means to bring about the late happy Revolution; and, consequently, is not within the Doctor's general Maxim.

Means, My Lords, is a relative Term, and refers to some End; and the End and Design of the the Prince of Orange in his coming hither, and of those that join'd him when he was here, being to have the Nation and Rightful Succession secur'd by a Free Parliament, it follows, that whatever Force was at that Time made use of, could not be made use of as a Means to bring about an End which was never intended.

Far be it from me, My Lords, to lessen the great Undertaking to deliver us from Popery and Arbitrary Power; and tho' the Glory of that Enterprize is wholly attributed to King William, 'tis certain, her present Majesty had her Share in it, however that is forgotten: For, give me leave to say, that had not her Majesty countenanc'd the Undertaking of the Prince of Orange with her Assistance, in my Opinion, the Success had been very dubious.

Now, is it possible, My Lords, to imagine, that it was ever the Design of her Majesty, or those that join'd the Prince of Orange, to take the Crown off of King James's, and put it upon King William's Head?

No, My Lords, the avowed great Design was quite otherwise, as appears by the Declaration it self, which was read below: It was to restore and secure our Laws from the Invasions that had been made upon them by Arbitrary Power: It was to secure that Right which all the World knows the Princess had to the Succession of the Crown, and to have every thing settled by a free Parliament, and not to make a Revolution by de-throning King James. This the Prince himself owns, when he says in his Declaration, he had no other Design in coming hither, but a Free Parliament.

My Lords, I take it to be of most dangerous Consequence, to judge any Man by Suggestions and Innuendos: Let what will be said to justify it, it shall never be the Rule of my Judgment.

Groundless Suggestions, My Lords, have, within my Memory, been the Pretence of Power, to cover illegal Oppression with the Shew of Reason, to the Publick. I will give your Lordships but one Instance of it: It was the Case of a Reverend Prelate, now in the House; I mean the Archbishop of York; his Grace was then Dr. Sbarpe only. It was in the Year Eighty Six; there was an Order, directed by way of Letter to the Protestant Bishops, to discharge all the inferior Clergy from preaching upon controverted Points in Divinity. They thought it served the Designs of Popery, then, to direct Ministers how they should preach; which was, in effect, to forbid them to defend their Religion. This Precedent was taken from an Order in Queen Mary's Time, says the printed Account; when at the same time, it was attack'd by the Romish Priests with all the Vigour they were capable of, whilst the Popish Sermons and Discourses were printed by Authority. Notwithstanding this Order, the Doctor took occasion, in some of his Sermons, to vindicate the Church of England, in opposition to the Frauds and Corruptions of Popery. But this, by the Court Emissaries, was interpreted much the same way as the Doctor's Sermon is now, to be endeavouring to beget in the Minds of his Hearers, an ill Opinion of the King and his Government, by insinuating Fears and Jealousies, to dispose them to Discontent, and to lead them into Schism, Disobedience and Rebellion.

My Lords, When the Homilies and Articles, when so many Archbishops and Bishops, and the University, and most of the Foreign Divines too, especially the Lutherans, have asserted the same Doctrine of Non-Resistance to the Supreme Power, as Dr. Sacheverell has; I think it the hardest Case in the World, that this unfortunate Gentleman should thus be singled out and made a Criminal, and a kind of Martyr, enduring the Trial of cruel Mockings, yea, moreover, of Bonds and Imprisonment, for asserting the same Doctrine. 'Tis true, Beza and Pareus, and some others of the Calvinists, are of another Opinion; but 'tis known, that Pareus's Commentary on the 13th of the Romans was burnt at Oxford, by the Order of King James I. for asserting that Doctrine.

But there is one thing, My Lords, so astonishing in this Prosecution, that I cannot but take notice of it: Those who were at Man's Estate, at the Revolution, know how industrious, on the one side, all that were Friends to King James were, to put his leaving the Nation then upon the Foot of Force and Resistance, as thinking this the strongest and best Argument to justify his withdrawing himself from his People. They rack'd their Brains to find out Arguments to convince Men, that his Life was manifestly in Danger, by staying here; and that it was for the sake of that, and his Liberty, that he was forc'd to withdraw; and that his Withdrawing was just, being an Act of Necessity, and not of Choice.

On the other side, those that were Friends to the Revolution, made it their Business to persuade the World, that all this was but a Colour and Pretence, and that the Fact was quite otherwise; that the Sense and Conviction King James had of what he had done, prevail'd upon him rather to throw off the Government, than concur with a Free-Parliament.

That this was the only Foot they then put it upon; and that it was not then put upon the Foot of forfeiting the Government by Male-Administration; if any Man denies, I appeal to the Papers that were then writ, and are now in Print, on this Subject.

This being so, it is very strange to see so great an Alteration in Mens Notions of Things; and that now, after our Constitution has maintain'd it self upon this Foot, against all Designs and Attempts that have been made upon it, for above twenty Years, those very Men, and that Party, who endeavour'd to place the Revolution then, upon King James's voluntary Desertion, which they call'd Abdication, should now without any Reason given, be for changing that Foundation, and do all they can, to put it upon King James's Foot of Force and Resistance. What, My Lords, are we endeavouring, after twenty Years, to make King James's Title better now than any of his Friends could make it then, and not only finding out Arguments they never thought of, but impeaching any that dare so much as question the Truth and Force of them? This, My Lords, seems very strange.

My Lords, I cannot but take Notice to your Lordships, of what was said by that noble Lord, who spoke last, because, to me it appears to be a Matter of the last Consequence, to the Honour of her present Majesty. He told your Lordships, that the best Title her Majesty had to the Crown, was her Parliamentary Title. I must take liberty to affirm the quite contrary; and that, in my opinion, the best Title her Majesty has, is her Hereditary Title; tho' I deny not, but that the Act of Parliament is a Strengthening and Confirmation of that Title: But I deny a Parliamentary-Title to be the only, or the best Title that the Queen has to the Crown she wears. And in saying this, I do not fear the malicious Reflections of having a squinting Regard to the Title of any Person on the other side the Water; for in affirming (as I now do to your Lordships) that her Majesty is my Rightful and Lawful Queen, by Right of Inheritance; and as she is Daughter to King James the Second, I do in so many Words affirm also, that there is no other Person, the Rightful and Lawful Heir to King James, but herself. And if the present Impeachment of Dr. Sacheverell shall have this Effect (as I hope it will) to convince the Nation of the undoubted Truth of her Majesty's Right of Inheritance to the Crown, (a Matter now so industriously opposed) the Security this will bring to her Majesty's Person and Crown, and to the Succession in the Protestant Line, and Illustrious House of Hanover afterwards, shall prevail with me easily to pardon any warm and unguarded Expressions, that the Doctor may here and there have dropt, and made use of in any of his Discourses.

*The Bishop of Salisbury's * Speech in the House of Lords, on the first Article of the Impeachment of Dr. Henry Sacheverell.*

THE Counsel for the Prisoner did so plainly and fully yield all that any Loyal Subject has ever pretended to, that in Cases of extreme Necessity, Self-defence and Resistance were lawful, and that this was the Case at the Revolution; that it may not be necessary to say any thing further on this Head, if it had not been that the Evidence they brought seemed to carry this Matter much farther, and that the Prisoner himself allow'd of no Exception in Cases of Necessity. And since it is grown to be a vulgar Opinion, That by the Doctrine of the Church of England, all Resistance in any Case whatsoever, without Exception, is condemn'd; I think it is incumbent on me, who have examin'd this Matter long and carefully, to give you such a clear account of this Point, as may as fully satisfy you as it did myself.

I served in the Revolution, and promoted it all I could. I served as Chaplain to the late King: I had no Command, and carried no Arms, but I was so far engaged in it, that if I could see that I had gone out of the way in that (and the many Up-and-Downs we have have gone thro' since, has given much occasion to reflect on that Transaction) I should hold myself unworthy to appear longer, either in this Habit, or in this Great Assembly; but should think myself bound to pass away the rest of my Life in Retirement or Sorrow. There is nothing more certain in Religion, than that we ought to repent of every Sin we have committed; and that we cannot truly repent, unless we repair or restore, as far as it is in our power.

I go now to give you the Account of the Doctrine of our Church in this Particular. In the Times of Popery it was a Tenet, built upon Bishops setting the Crown on the Heads of Princes, and anointing them, that they held their Crowns of the Church, and at the Pope's Mercy; who had for about five hundred Years got into the Claim of deposing them, and giving their Dominions to others, in case they were Hereticks, or the Favourers of them. But the Reformation being in its first beginning protected by the Princes of Germany, by the Kings of the North, and then by the Kings of England; they came every where in opposition to the Papal Notions, to say that Kings had their Power from God: Not that they meant, that they had any distinct Authority besides the Law of the Land derived to them from God; but that by the Laws of God, the Authority of the Law of the Land was secured to them. For when a different Authority from that of the Law came to be pretended to, and to be grounded on these general Expressions, that received here a Parliamentary Censure, and it was then declared, that the Laws of Religion in the Scripture did only establish the several Constitutions and Governments that were in the different Parts of the World.

The Occasion that the Apostles had to write what we find in their Epistles, with relation to Government, was this: The Jews had a Notion among them from a Passage in Deuteronomy, that they were only to set a King over them, One from among their Brethren, and not a Stranger. From whence it is, That to this day they do not think they are bound in Conscience to obey any Magistrate, who is not one of their Nation. Now the first Converts to Christianity being Jews, the Apostles took care that they should not bring this dangerous Notion with them into the Christian Religion: But they did not meddle to determine where this Authority was lodged, that was to be gathered out of the several Constitutions: They did not determine how much was due to the Emperor, and how much to the Senate; and tho' not long after those Epistles were writ, the Senate condemn'd Nero to die more majorum, to be whip'd to death, none of the Christians interposed in that Matter. He prevented that infamous Death by his own Hands: And the Primitive Christians reckon'd it one of the Articles of the Glory of their Religion, that their first Persecutor came to such an End.

Not long after that, Trajan was famed for that memorable Expression, when he deliver'd the Sword to the Governors of the Provinces, as the Emblem of their Authority, he used these Words, Pro me, si merear, in me: For me, but if I deserve it, against me. That did not weaken his Authority; his Government, with that of his Successors for above eighty Years, being the greatest and happiest time the Romans had under their Emperors. This Word was put on King James the First's Coin in Scotland. It is true, that was during his Minority; but when he afterwards changed his Motto, the Coin was not call'd in, but continued current till the Union.

The Primitive Christians had no Laws in their Favour, but many against them: so their patient suffering so many Persecutions according to the Laws of the Empire, under which they lived, was conform to the Doctrine laid down by the Apostles. When they came afterwards to have the the Protection of Laws, they claim'd the Benefit of them, not without great Violence, when they thought an Infraction was made on those Laws; which broke out into great Tumults, in many of the chief Cities of the Empire, not excepting the Imperial City itself.

But to proceed with the History of our Church: When the Articles of Religion were settled, the Books of the Apocrypha were indeed declared not to be a part of the Canon of the Scripture, but yet to be useful for the Example of Life, and the Instruction of Manners. A great part of these are the Books of the Maccabees, which contain the History of the Jews shaking off the Yoke of the Kings of Syria, when they were broke in upon by a total Overthrow of their whole Law, and an unrelenting Persecution. Mattathias a private Priest began the Resistance which was carried on by his Children, till they shook off the Syrian Yoke, and formed themselves into a free Government, under the Family of the Maccabees. It were easy to shew that the Jews had been for above 400 Years subject, first to the Babylonian, then to the Persian, and at last to the Grecian Empire: So that by a long Prescription they were Subjects to the Kings of Syria. It were easy also to shew, that this Resistance was foretold by Daniel, in Terms of high Commendation, and is also mentioned in the Epistle to the Hebrews, as the Work and Effect of their Faith. If then all Resistance to illegal and barbarous Persecution is unlawful, these Books contain nothing but a History of a Rebellion, and all the Devotion that runs thro' them, is but a Cant, and instead of reading them as Example of Life, and Instruction of Manners, we ought to tear them out of our Bibles with Detestation. I shall afterwards shew what use was made of these Books, not only by private Writers of our Church, but by what the whole Body in Convocation was about to determine.

The next Step to be made, is, to consider the Homilies: The Second Book of Homilies, which has the Homilies in it against Wilful Rebellion, is generally believed to have been composed by Bishop Jewell, who was by much the best Writer in that time. It is certain, he understood the meaning of them well: Now I will read you two Passages out of his Defence of his Apology for the Church of England; from whence we may clearly gather what his Notion of Rebellion was, and that he thought a Defence against unjust and illegal Violence was not Rebellion. In one place he has these Words:

The Nobles of Scotland neither drew the Sword, nor attempted War against the Prince: They sought only the Continuance of God's undoubted Truths, and the Defence of their own Lives against your barbarous and cruel Invasions: They remember'd besides all other Warnings, your late Dealings at Vassy, where great Numbers of their Brethren were murder'd, being together at their Prayers in the Church, holding up their innocent Hands to Heaven, and calling upon God. In another place he writes, Neither do any of all these (Luther, Melancthon) teach the People to rebel against their Prince, but only to defend themselves by all lawful Means against Oppressions; as did David against Saul, so do the Nobles in France at this day, they seek not to kill, but to save their own Lives.

These Passages shew that he looked on Rebellion to be a violent Rising against a Prince executing the Laws; which was the Case of the three Rebellions in England that they had in view: That in King Henry the VIIIth's, in King Edward's, and in Queen Elizabeth's Time, where the Papists took Arms against their Prince, who was executing Laws made in Matters of Religion; and that with a great Gentleness. Of the eleven Passages quoted by the Prisoner out of the Homilies, five plainly relate only to the coercing the Person of the Prince; in which David is set in Opposition to those Rebels: Now, tho' he indeed defended himself, yet he had a just and sacred Tendernefs to the Person of Saul, when he had him in his Power, which is certainly sacred by our Constitution. Five of them relate to wicked Princes. It was never pretended by any who pleaded for Necessary Defence, that the bad Life of a Prince can be a just Cause of Resistance: Yet that was then pretended; for King Henry VIII. had given too much occasion to reckon him a wicked Prince. So there is only one of all the Passages quoted from those Homilies, that relates simply to Rebellion in general: And it has appear'd what Bishop Jewell's Sense of the Matter was. There is also a Prayer at the end of every Division of the Homily against Wilful Rebellion, (and, by the by, Wilful was not put in the Title for nothing) for those oppress'd by Tyranny in other Parts, that they might be relieved, and that those who were in fear of their Cruelty might be comforted.

Let us next look thro' Queen Elizabeth's long and glorious Reign, and see what was the constant Maxim of that Time.

The Year after the Queen came to the Crown the War in Scotland broke out between the Queen Regent that govern'd by Commission, from her Daughter then Queen of France, and the Lords in Scotland. She, to obtain the Matrimonial Crown to be sent to Francis II. gave Assurances for the Exercise of the Reformed Religion; but the Point being gain'd, she broke all her Promises, and resolved to force them to return to the Exercise of the Popish Religion. Upon which the Lords of Scotland formed themselves into a Body, and were called the Lords of the Congregation. Forces were sent from France to assist the Queen Regent; upon that Queen Elizabeth enter'd into an Agreement with the Scottish Lords, and sent an Army to their Assistance, which continued in Scotland till all Matters were settled by the Pacification of Leith: And in a Manifesto, that I have in my Hands, set forth twenty-five Years after that, I find her reflecting on that Interposition in the Affairs of that Nation, with great Satisfaction.

The Year after this War was ended, upon Francis the II'd's Death, Charles the IXth, who was a Child, succeeded in France. Edicts were granted in favour of the Protestants: These were soon after broken by the Triumvirat, and upon that followed a Series of Wars often pacified, but always breaking out again, by reason of the Violence and Cruelty of the Government. All these Wars, till Henry the IVth was settled on the Throne, were in a Course of twenty-eight Years, that which some would call Rebellion, being carried on against two succeeding Kings. Yet the Queen was in all that time still assisting them with Men and Money.

In the Year 1568, the Provinces in the Netherlands threw off the Spanish Yoke, that was become intolerably severe and cruel. The Queen for some Years assisted them more covertly, but when the Prince of Orange was kill'd, and they were in danger to be over-run, she took them more openly into her Protection; and by the Manifesto which I have in my Hands, she published the Grounds upon which she proceeded. She laid down this for a Foundation, That there had been an Antient League not only between the Crown of England, and the Princes of the Netherlands, but between the Subjects of both Countries, under their Seals interchangeably, for all Friendly Offices. If this was a good Reason for the Queen's giving Aid to the oppressed People of the Netherlands, then if the Case had been reversed, that the People of England had been illegally and cruelly oppressed, it furnished the Princes of those Provinces with as good a Reason for assisting them. In this Assistance given the States, the Queen persisted till the End of her Reign; nor was this only done by the Court, but both Parliaments and Convocations granted her several Aids to maintain these Wars: And in the Preambles of those Subsidy Acts, the Queen's Proceedings in those Particulars were highly approv'd and magnify'd. Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, and several other Writers in that time, justified what she did; and not one that I ever heard of, censured or condemned it.

Upon King James's coming to the Crown, the first great Negotiation was for a Peace between Spain and the United Provinces; which lasted several Years. The States insisted on a Preliminary, That they should be acknowledged Free, Sovereign and Independent States; the Spaniards would not yield to this, nor would the States recede from it. Some here in England began to say, They were form'd in Rebellion, and ought not to carry their Pretensions too far: Upon that, King James suffer'd a Convocation to meet; and a Book of Canons, with relation to the supreme Authority, was prepar'd; in which, tho' the Authority of the Prince, even when he becomes a Tyrant, is carried very far; yet the Case of the Maccabees is stated; and, it was determined, That when a new Government, tho' begun in a Revolt, is come to a thorough Settlement, it may be owned as Lawful. King James, who was jealous enough of the Regal Authority, yet did not like their carrying these Matters so far: He ordered the whole Matter to be let fall so entirely, that there is not a Word of it in the Books of Convocation: But Archbishop Sancroft found this Collection of Canons at Durham, under Dr. Overhall's Hand, which he copied out, and Licens'd the Book a few Days before he fell under his Suspension. I soon saw that it had a Relation to the Affairs in Holland: For the Dutch delighted to compare their first Beginnings to that of the Jews in Antiochus's time: They compar'd King Philip to Antiochus Epiphanes, and the Prince of Orange to Judas Maccabeus. But I saw much clearer into the Matter by an Original Letter of King James, which a worthy Gentleman sent me. I knew his Hand well, the Letter is in Print; but I will read some particulars out of it. It is directed to Dr. Abbot, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury. It begun with censuring some Positions concerning a King in Possession, the same with our Modern Term of a King de facto: He goes on in these Words, My Reason of calling you together, was to give your Judgments, how far a Christian and a Protestant King, may concur to assist his Neighbours to shake off their Obedience to their own Sovereign, upon the Account of Oppression, Tyranny, or what else you like to name it. In the late Queen's Time, this Kingdom was very free in assisting the Hollanders both with Arms and Advice; and none of your Coat ever told me, that any scrupled about it in her Reign. Upon my coming to England, you may know it came from some of yourselves to raise Scruples about this Matter; yet I never took any notice of these Scruples, till the Affairs of Spain and Holland forced me to it. I call'd my Clergy together, to satisfy not so much me, as the World about us, of the Justness of my owning the Hollanders at this time. This I needed not to have done, and you have forced me to say, I wish I had not. He reflects on those who had a great Aversion to the Notion of God's being the Author of Sin, which plainly points at Dr. Overhall, who was the first Man of Note among us, that oppos'd the Calvinists Doctrine of Predestination; yet he says, They had gone to the Threshold of it, by saying, That even Tyranny was God's Authority, and should be revered as such. He concludes, These were edg'd Tools, and that therefore they were to let them rest. Here is a full Account of King James's Thoughts of this Matter, which was then the chief Subject of Discourse all Europe over. He had Twelve Years before this shewed, on an eminent Occasion, that he owned the States, when he invited them in the Year 1593, to Christen his Eldest Son, Prince Henry. They were sensible of the great Honour done them by it; and tho' they were then but Low, they sent an Embassy, with a noble Present of Gold Plate, to assist on that Occasion. This Negotiation stuck for several Years, the Spaniards refusing to own them in express Words: The Temper found was, they were treated with (tanquam) as with Free States; and the Matter went no further at that time, than a Truce for some Years, which was concluded in the Year 1609. This lets us see, That the Words in King James's Speech that Year to his Parliament, were not chance Words that fell carelessly from him, A King leaves to be a King, and degenerates into a Tyrant, as soon as he leaves off to govern by Law: In which case the King's Conscience may speak to him, as the poor Woman to Philip of Macedon, Either govern by Law, or cease to be a King.

There is another eminent Instance towards the End of that Reign, that shews what the Sense of our best Divines was in this Matter: When the Archbishop of York's Son and Mr. Wadsworth had changed their Religion in Spain, Wadsworth writ over a bold Defence of that; and among other Things, charged the Reformation with Rebellion. This was answer'd by one of the best Books of that Time, writ by Dr. Bedell, dedicated to the Prince of Wales, who afterwards promoted him to a Bishoprick. His Words on this Head are full: I will read some of them. Do you think Subjects are bound to give their Throats to be cut by their Fellow-subjects, or to their Prince, at their mere Wills, against their own Laws and Edicts? You would know quo jure the Protestant Wars in France and Holland, are justified. First, The Law of Nature, which not only alloweth, but inclineth and forceth every living Thing to defend itself from Violence. Secondly, That of Nations, which permiteth those who are in the Protection of others, to whom they owe no more than an honourable Acknowledgment, in case they go about to make themselves absolute Sovereigns, and to usurp their Liberty, to resist and stand for the same. And if a lawful Prince, who is not yet Lord of his Subjects Lives and Goods, shall attempt to despoil them of the same, under colour of reducing them to his own Religion, after all humble Remonstrances, they may stand upon their own guard, and being assailed, resist Force with Force, as did the Maccabees under Antiochus. In which case notwithstanding, the Person of the Prince himself ought always to be sacred and inviolable, as was Saul to David. No Commentary is wanted here.

My Lords, You see how this Matter stood during King James's Reign. In the first Year of King Charles's Reign, Grotius's Book de Jure Belli & Pacis, was published at Paris, dedicated to the King of France, while France was under the Administration of the wisest and most jealous Minister of the last Age, Cardinal Richelieu. In that Book, in which he asserts the Rights of Princes with great Zeal, yet he enumerates many Cases, in which it is Lawful to resist, particularly that of a total Subversion: And that Book is now all Europe over in the highest Reputation of any Book that the Modern Ages have produced. In the beginning of King Charles's Reign, a War broke out in France, against the Protestants; upon which he sent over Ambassadors, by whose Mediation a Peace was concluded; but that being ill kept, the War broke out again; and the King thought himself bound by his Mediation to protect the Protestants. So in the Second Session of the Parliament, 1621, in the Demand of a Supply that the Lord Keeper Coventry made in the King's Name, these Words are to be found: France is sway'd by the Popish Faction, and tho' by his Majesty's Mediation, there were Articles of Agreement between that King and his Subjects, that Treaty hath been broke, and those of the Reformed Religion will be ruined without present Help. Upon this the Commons petitioned the King for a Fast, and desired the Concurrence of the Lords, who join'd with them in it. The King granted it, and an Office was compos'd suitable to the Occasion; in which, among other Devotions, the Nation was directed to pray for all those, who here or elsewhere were fighting God's Battles and Defending his Altars. Thus the whole Body of the Legislature did concur for a Fast for that, which if this Doctrine is true, was no better than Rebellion; and yet the whole Nation, Clergy and Laity, were required to pray for Success in it.

But to complete this View of the Doctrine of our Church, it is to be consider'd, That when a Year before this, while the Loan or Benevolence were carried on, some officious Divines made use of those Expressions of Kings having their Power from God, as importing an Authority of a Nature superior to the Laws of the Land. One of these, Dr. Manwaring, was Impeached, and had a severe Sentence passed on him for it. So I have now made it out, beyond, I hope, the Possibility of Contradiction, that for Seventy Years together, from 1558, to 1628, the Lawfulness of Self-defence in the Case of illegal and violent Cruelty, was the publick and constant Doctrine of this Church.

These were the best and happiest Times of our Church, as is often repeated by the Earl of Clarendon: From these we ought to take the Standard of our Doctrine.

I go next to shew what was the common Doctrine for the next Sixty Years, from 1628, to 1688. I must yield up the first twelve Years: For upon the unhappy Misunderstanding between the King and that Parliament, there was a long Discontinuance of Parliaments, then the lately condemned Doctrine was again in Vogue; and nothing was so much heard of, as the Law of Government that was from God, antecedent to all Human Laws: Out of this sprung illegal Imprisonments, illegal Monopolies, severe Proceedings in the Star-Chamber, but above all, the Ship-Money. These things put the Nation in an Universal Disjointing and Feebleness. And when an unavoidable Necessity forced that King to call a Parliament, the fatal Effects of those Counsels broke out terribly. I know many fancy, that the War is to be charged on the Principles of Self-defence: They are much mistaken. I had occasion to see a great way into the Secret of that time, when I examin'd the Papers relating to the two Dukes of Hamilton. I knew a great deal more since from two Persons of unquestionable Integrity, who knew the Secrets of that time, the Lord Hollis, and Sir Harbottle Grimston; but all receiv'd a full Confirmation, when I found it agreed perfectly with the noble Account given by the Earl of Clarendon.

No body dreamt of a War, nor had they any Principles leading to it. But there was an unhappy Train of Accidents that hindred Matters from being brought to a Settlement, even while the King was granting all they could desire. Stories were carried by Persons about both the King and Queen, of Words let fall, that made them conclude, there were still ill Designs on foot, against the Laws that were then passed. But that which brought all to a Crisis, was the Discovery of a Negotiation, to engage the Army to declare against the Parliament. Whosoever compares the Depositions in Rushworth, with the Account given of that Matter by the Earl of Clarendon, will see there is a great deal more in the one, than the other is willing to believe; tho' he acknowledges they had both Goring's Evidence, and Piercy's Letter with them. I will not take it upon me to determine, whether they believ'd too much, or the Earl of Clarendon too little. It is certain, they believ'd all that was in the Depositions, and a great deal more: For Goring being continued in the Government of Portsmouth, and his Father being advanced from being a Baron to be an Earl, and Piercy's being made a Lord, and Master of the Horse to the Prince of Wales, made them conclude they had suppressed a great deal, instead of saying more than was true. This stuck deep in their Hearts, and at last fatally broke out in the Demand of the Militia, that brought on the War, which I do own was plainly a Rebellion; because a Force was offer'd to the King, not to defend themselves from an unjust Invasion, or illegal Grievances, but to extort a new Law from him.

Thus the true Occasion of the War, was a Jealousy, that a Conduct of 15 Years had given too much ground for; and that was still unhappily kept up, by a fatal Train of Errors, in every step that was made. The great Concussion that the War gave the Nation, and the barbarous Effusion of so much Blood, especially of the Royal Blood of that Blessed KING, had at last a happy, tho' a late Conclusion in the Restoration: And it's no wonder, if such a Series of Tragical Events, begot a general Horror at the Occasion of them. But then it was, that had it not been for the Firmness of the Earl of Clarendon to his English Principles, the Liberties of the Nation had been deliver'd up.

It is to his Memory that we owe our being a free People ; for he with his two great Friends, the Duke of Ormond and the Earl of Southampton, check'd the Forwardness of some who were desirous to load the Crown with Prerogative and Revenue. He stopt all this, which being afterwards odiously represented, brought on him that great and lasting, but honourable Disgrace. The Earl of Southampton, whose Death went a little before his Fall, and perhaps hasten'd it the sooner, said to many about him, that he was a true Protestant, and an honest Englishman ; and that the Nation would feel the Effects of his being removed, whensoever it might happen.

That Lord, in the great Settlement after the Restoration, would carry things no farther than to repeal what had been extorted by the Tumults ; and in the matter of the Militia-Act, and the Oaths relating to it, all was more cautiously worded than is commonly understood. To the Word Commission'd by the King, some indeed moved, that the Word Lawfully might be added, to make all plain. This was press'd in the House of Commons by Vaughan, afterward Lord Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas. The Attorney General, afterwards Lord Chancellor Nottingham, answer'd, That was not necessary, for the Word Commission imported it ; since, if it was not lawfully issued out, to lawful Persons, and for a lawful Reason, it was no Commission ; and the whole House assented to this : yet in the House of Lords, the same word Lawfully was press'd to be added by the Earl of Southampton, who was answer'd by the Earl of Anglesey, to the same purpose with what had been said in the House of Commons. He indeed insisted to have the Word added, because it would clear all Difficulties with many, who not having heard of the Sense given in both Houses, might fancy, that any sort of Commission being granted, it would not be Lawful to resist it. He did not prevail : for it was said, That this Explanation being the Sense of both Houses, it would be soon spread and known over the Nation. In this Sense, it is certain, that it is not lawful to take Arms against any so commission'd by the King ; for that were to take Arms against the King's Commission in the Execution of the Law, which is certainly a resisting the Ordinance of God, which whosoever do, they shall receive to themselves Damnation.

It was no wonder, if after such a War the Doctrine of Non-Resistance was preach'd and press'd with more than ordinary Warmth, and without any Exceptions ; yet some still kept these in view : so did both Dr. Falkner and myself ; and I know many others had them always in their Thoughts, tho' they did not think it necessary to mention them.

I found the ill Effects that the carrying this Matter so far, had on the Mind of that unfortunate Prince, King James ; for in the Year 1673, when he was pleas'd to admit me to much free Conversation with him, among many other things, I told him, it was impossible for him to reign in quiet in this Nation, being of that Religion : he answer'd me quick, Does not the Church of England maintain the Doctrine of Non-Resistance and Passive Obedience ? I begg'd of him not to depend on that ; for there was a Distinction in that matter, that would be found out when Men thought they needed it. I now come to tell your Lordships, how right I judged. —

It is true, they pass'd a very pompous Decree at Oxford in 1683, but you shall hear how long they stood to it. In Summer, 1686, the Prince of Orange was pleas'd to receive me into his Service with a particular Confidence. Soon after the Ecclesiastical Commission was set up, and upon some Proceedings before that Board, he was desir'd from England to break with King James upon that Head. I oppos'd this, and said, I was convinced, that Commission was against Law, and would have ill Effects, but it did not strike at the Whole. This was more warmly press'd upon the Proceedings against Magdalen College. I still stood to my ground ; and told both Prince and Princess, That if a Breach should follow on these Matters, I could not serve. When indeed the Declaration was publish'd a second time, with a Resolution to have it carried thro' ; and that many Laws were dispensed with at pleasure ; and Persons who were under legal Disabilities, were made Judges, Sheriffs and Magistrates ; all whose Actings were so many Nullities : Then I thought there was a total Subversion of our Constitution ; which from being a Legal one, was made precarious, subject to mere Will and Pleasure. So I was ready to serve in the Revolution.

Some Days after we came to Exeter, Sir Edward Seymour came thither, and he presently sent for me : When I came to him, he asked me Why were we a Rope of Sand, and had not an Association ? I said, Because we had not yet a Man of his Weight to begin the Motion : He said, if we had not one by To-morrow, he would leave us before Night. I presently saw a Noble Duke, now in my Eye, and acquainted him with this : He went to the Prince, who approving of it, an Association was prepar'd, and laid on the Table next Morning ; and was after that signed by all who came to wait on the Prince. Three Days after we left Exeter, a Head of a College came to the Prince, to invite him to come to Oxford, assuring him, that the University would declare for him. He went as near it as Abingdon, but then the sudden Turn of Affairs at London obliging him to haste up, the Association was sent thither, and was signed by the Heads of the Colleges, and many others there ; some doing it in a particular Warmth of Expression, and saying, That their Hearts as well as their Hands went with it. Upon what Disappointments or other Views, I cannot tell, this Contradiction to their famed Decree, five Years after it was made, seem'd to take another Turn back to it again ; and the Notion of a King de facto, which is but a softer Word for an Usurper, came in Vogue.

The Parliament, to prevent the ill Effects of that, studied to secure the Government, First, by an Association, and then by an Abjuration. I, who was always against every thing that might break in upon Conscience, was for making these only voluntary ; but they were Enacted, and they were generally taken. A Noble Lord on the Earls Bench, procur'd me the Sight of a Letter, that went about to persuade the taking the Abjuration, that he had from a Place where he believed it had its Effect ; where I found this Distinction, That the Abjuring any Right whatsoever that the Pretender might claim, was only meant of a Legal Right, and that it had no relation to Birth-Right, or to Divine Right. This agreed with a Report that went then current, That a Person, in a great Post, sent a Message to an Honourable Gentleman, who would not take the Abjuration, that if he had an half Hour's Discourse with him, he doubted not to be able to convince him, that he might take the Abjuration, without departing from any of his Principles. Towards the end of the last Reign, a bold Attempt was made on the King's Supremacy, by an Incendiary, who is supposed to have no small Share in this Matter now before your Lordships: But the Attack on the Supremacy being liable to a Premunire, it was turn'd with much Malice, and managed with great Prevarication, against the Bishops, who adhered firmly to their Duty to the King. How great a Disjoining that has brought on this Church, is too visible all the Nation over; and it tends to carry on the wicked Design of distracting the Church, and undermining the Government.

By the time the Queen was on the Throne, or soon after, the Rehearsal began to be spread over the Nation, two of them a Week, which continued for several Years together, to be publish'd without Check or Controul. It was all thro' one Argument against the Queen's Right to the Crown: That, tho' it was diversified with Incidents and Digressions, was kept always in view. The Clergy were in many Places drawn into Subscriptions for this Paper. This look'd like a Design long contrived at, to have the Queen's Title undermin'd: Besides this, we had a Swarm of Pamphlets every Year to the same Purpose, and, as was believed, writ by the same Hand. One sold at the Door of the House, with the Title of King William's Exorbitant Grants, did plainly call him an Usurper: and starting an Objection against the Queen's possessing the Throne, gave it this Answer, That she did well to keep it till she could deliver it up to the righteous Heir. At that time there was a quick Prosecution of a Paper, publish'd, with the Title of The Shortest Way with the Dissenters; and upon that, I brought that Pamphlet to a great Minister, and offer'd to shew him this Passage in it, to see if there should be a Prosecution of this order'd. He turned from me; so whether he heard me or not, I cannot tell: I am sure, if he says he did not, I will believe him. No Prosecution follow'd, and the Rehearsal went on. The Clergy in many Places, met at a Coffee-House on Saturdays, to read the Rehearsals of the Week, which had very ill Effects in most Places. I know it may be said, That the Queen's Learned Counsel ought to have look'd after these things: But we all know, that they stay till they receive Orders from the Ministry. The Course of that Treasonable Paper has been now for some time stopt, so we see there is some Change in the Ministry.

But to compleat the Insolence of the Enemies of the Queen and of the Protestant Succession, they had the Impudence to give it out, That the Queen secretly favour'd them. And as this, we all know, has been long whisper'd about among us, so it was more boldly given out in Scotland; which obliged one of the Queen's Ministers in that Parliament, in a Speech that was printed, to contradict this treasonable and dishonourable Suggestion, That as some Divines would have it, that there was in God a secret as well as a revealed Will, and that these might be contrary to one another; so they would fasten an Imputation on the Queen, that while she revealed her Will one way, she had a secret Will another way; which he solemnly affirmed to be false, and highly injurious to the Queen.

While the Pamphlets and these Reports were thus set about, Mr. Hoadly thought that it became him to assert the Queen's Title, by justifying the Revolution, out of which it rises. But what an Outcry was raised on this, that one durst disturb the Progress of a wicked Opinion, that was visibly designed to overturn the Government: And yet he asserted nothing, but what the Counsel for the Prisoner did all fully and plainly own, That in the Cases of extreme Necessity, an Exception to the Doctrine was to be admitted, and that that was the Case at the Revolution.

But as these Notions have been long let run among us, so they have appeared in a most violent and unguarded manner, ever since the Attempt of the Pretender; and more of late, since the Preliminaries upon the Overtures for a Peace, seem to extinguish their Hopes. What Sermons on this Head are preached in this City, at Assizes, at Bath, and at many Cathedrals? Furious Men fit themselves with some hot Sermons, which they carry about from Place to Place, to poison the Nation. This has not only the visible Effect designed by it, of shaking many in their Allegiance to the Queen, and in their adhering to the Protestant Succession; but it has a cursed Effect on many others, on whom this their Design does not succeed.

I am very sensible there is a great deal of Impiety and Infidelity now spread thro' the Nation: This gives every good Mind all possible Horror; but I must tell your Lordships, on what a great part of it is founded: for since my Conversation with Wilmot, Earl of Rocheſter, I have had many Occasions to discourse with Persons tainted with those wicked Principles; and I do affirm it, that the greatest Prejudice these Persons have at Religion, at the Clergy, and at the Publick Worship of God, is this, that they say, They see Clergymen take Oaths, and use all Prayers, both ordinary and extraordinary, for the Government, and yet in their Actings and Discourses, and of late in their Sermons, they shew visibly that they look another way: from whence they conclude, They are a mercenary sort of People without Conscience.

I hope there are not many that are so corrupted and so scandalous: I am sure I know a great many that are far otherwise, who preach, speak and act as they swear and pray; but those who act in another way, are noisy and impudent, and so bring an Imputation on the whole Body. And unless an effectual Stop is put to this Distemper, it is not possible to foresee all the ill Consequences that may follow upon it.

I have, I am afraid, wearied your Lordships; but I thought it was necessary, once for all, to enlarge copiously on this Argument. And now to come close to the Article, and the Sermon, for I meddle not at all with the Person of the Man, whatever general Expressions might very well have been used, in setting forth Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance before the Revolution; because odious Cases ought not to be supposed, and therefore are not to be named, yet since Resistance was used in the Revolution, and that the late King invited all the Subjects to join with him, which was in them certainly Resistance; and since the Lawfulness of the Revolution is so much controverted, the condemning all Resistance in such crude and general Terms, is certainly a condemning the Revolution. And this is further aggravated from those Limitations on our Obedience, in an Act past soon after the Revolution, by which, in Case our Princes turn Papists, or marry Papists, the Subjects are in express Words discharg'd from their Allegiance to them. Certainly this puts an End to the Notion of Non-Resistance in any Case, or on any Pretext whatsoever. For these Reasons, I think the first Article of this Impeachment, is both well grounded, and fully made out.

*The Bishop of Oxford's * Speech in the House of Lords, on the first Article of the Impeachment of Dr. Henry Sacheverell.*

My LORDS,

SOME of this Bench are necessarily call'd up, by Words which fell from the noble Lord who spake third in this Debate, who was pleas'd to mention among other strange Things, Bishops voting contrary to their Doctrines. The Opinions of several of the Reverend Prelates have been read before your Lordships in Westminster-Hall: They were first quoted by the Counsel for the Defendant, and by their Order read in such a partial and unfair manner, that if I may be allow'd to use any other Author after the same way, to take a naked Proposition out of his Book, and not consider the Coherence or Dependence of the Words, how it may be explain'd or limited in other Places, to read just so far as may serve my Purpose, and stop when any thing follows that may set the Matter in a just Light, I dare undertake to make any Author speak on which-ever side of the Question I please.

But the Managers for the Honourable House of Commons did Justice to those Reverend Prelates, by obliging the Clerk to read other Passages in their Books, which clearly explain'd their Opinions; and so the only Purpose that was eventually serv'd by producing those Quotations, was that which, I fear, was not intended; the vindicating those Reverend Prelates from the uncharitable Imputation of having asserted a Doctrine in their Writings, which they had contradicted by their Practices, in relation to the Revolution, and the Government founded upon it.

I hope to be able to reconcile the Vote which I shall give, with the Opinion which I have always been of, and which having not been produced below, I stand up to give it your Lordships here; being far from censuring, far from entertaining the least disrespectful Thought of any that shall differ in Opinion from me.

I own the Subject now in debate, is a matter of great Consequence, and of great Nicety and Tenderness; and that he, who should presume to entertain your Lordships upon it, ought to be better qualify'd, and better prepar'd than I am in other Respects; but I will give place to none in those that follow, viz. in delivering my self with that Respect and Deference which is due to this House, that humble Diffidence which becomes a just Consciousness of my own Weakness, and that Plainness and Sincerity which becomes that Character, which however unworthy of it, I have the Honour to bear; and then I am sure I may depend upon your Lordships known Candor, Honour and Justice, that if any thing should fall from me less correct, or less guarded than it ought to be, it shall receive the most favourable Construction that it is capable of.

Before I deliver my Opinion, I beg leave briefly

to state the Question; and in order to that, to lay down two Premises.

1. That Government in general, was in its original Institution, designed for the Good of the whole Body. Men were not form'd into Societies, only to be Subjects of the arbitrary Wills, the slavish Instruments in the gratifying the ambitious or other corrupt Designs, of any one or more Men; but for the Safety and Prosperity of the whole Community.

2. That in the Holy Scriptures (as far as I can find) there is no Specification of any one particular Form of Government to which all Nations and Bodies of Men, in all Times and Places ought to be subject; nor are there any such exact Accounts of the Extent of the Power of the Governor, or Obedience and Submission of the Governed, as can reach to all Cases that may possibly happen.

There are many general Precepts requiring the Obedience and Submission of Subjects to their Governors: Let every Soul be subject to the Higher Powers: You must needs be subject not only for Wrath, but also for Conscience-sake: He that resists, resists the Ordinance of God: And submit your selves to every human Constitution for the Lord's sake, &c.

But yet these Scriptures do not tell us how far we must obey and be subject, nor do they necessarily imply that there can never be any Cases wherein we may not obey and not be subject, but resist; because there are other Places in Scripture, where other Duties are requir'd in Terms as large and general as these, nay in universal Terms, which yet must admit of Exceptions.

Some of the most zealous Contenders for the absolute Power of the Prince, and unconditional Submission of the Subject, found themselves very much upon the fifth Commandment, Honour thy Father and Mother, which they expound as comprehending political as well as natural Parents; and I do not gain-say it: But then pray, my Lords, let us see in what Terms the Duty of Children to their natural Parents is requir'd in Scripture: Children, says the Apostle, obey your Parents in all Things. This Expression is surely universal enough; and from hence, according to some Mens Reasoning, it must follow, if Children must obey their Parents in all things, then they may resist in none.

But will any body say, that notwithstanding the Universality of this Precept, there may not be some Exceptions and Limitations understood, both as to the active and passive Part of the Child's Obedience? As to the active, no one will deny, but the Command must be restrain'd to Licita & Honesta; they are not to obey in all things absolutely, but in all things that are lawful and honest.

And

And as to the passive Part of the Child's Obedience, the Submission or Non-Resistance requir'd, permit me to put a Case: Suppose a Parent in a Phrenzy, in a Fit of Drunkenness or Passion, draws his Sword, and attempts to kill his innocent Son, and the Son has no way to escape from him: Is he oblig'd by this Duty of not resisting, to stand still and let his Father sheath his Sword in his Bowels? May he not, tho' he must still have a care of his Father's Life, defend his own? May he not put by the Pass, grapple with his Father, and disarm him if he can? My Lords, surely he may; that prime Law of Nature, of Self-Preservation, will justify him in it: And then why may not the same Law of Self-Preservation justify the Political Child, the Body of the People, in defending their political Life, i. e. their Constitution, against plain and avow'd Attempts of the political Parent utterly to destroy it? And it is upon this Point only that I shall state the Question.

I do allow, that in all Governments whatsoever there is an absolute Power lodg'd somewhere. With us, as I humbly conceive, that Power is lodg'd in the Legislature; for which I have the Authority of a great Politician and Statesman, Sir Thomas Smith, who was Secretary of State to two Princes, King Edward VI. and Queen Elizabeth; who in his Book, De Republica Angl. a Book seen and allow'd, as is said in the Title-Page, in that Chapter where he treats of our Parliaments, and the Authority thereof, lays down this Assertion, 'The most high and absolute Power of the Realm of England consisteth in the Parliament.' And giving particular Instances of that Power, among others, mentions this, 'That the Parliament gives Forms of Succession to the Crown.'

The executive Power with us is lodg'd with the Prince; and I do readily allow, that the Prince so vested with the Executive Power, and all others lawfully commission'd by him, acting according to their Commission, and within those Laws with the Execution whereof he and they are respectively trusted, are irresistible: The Person of the Prince is always inviolable; no personal Faults in him; no Injuries to particular Persons, where they can have no Redress by Law, as in several Cases they may have; no general Misdemeanors, whereby the Publick may be greatly hurt, can justify any forcible Resistance of his Subjects; nor any thing else than a total Subversion of the Constitution.

But if in a legal Monarchy, where such Laws have been enacted by common Consent of Prince and People, as are to be the Measures of his Government, as well as of their Obedience, that limit his Power, as well as secure their Rights and Properties, the Prince shall change this Form of Government into an absolute Tyranny, set aside those Laws, and set up an arbitrary Will in the room of them: When the Case is plain, and when all Applications and Attempts of other Kinds prove unsuccessful; if then the Nobles and Commons join together in defence of their Ancient Constitution, Government and Laws, I cannot call them Rebels. Allow me, my Lords, to lay before you a few things in maintenance of what I have advanced. And,

1. I would humbly offer some Facts, which I allow do not directly prove what I have said to be true, but they do prove it to have been the Opinion of our Princes, Parliaments, Clergy and People, in the Reigns of those three great Princes, Queen Elizabeth, King James and King Charles I. I mean the Assurances which those Princes gave to the Subjects of other Countries that were resisting their respective Princes; and to enable them to do so, they had Subsidies given them in Parliament and Convocation—, and there were Prayers composed and used for the Success of their Arms.

Surely, my Lords, if those Princes, Parliaments, Clergy and People, had been of opinion, that the Resistance of Subjects against their Princes was in no case lawful, but always damnable Rebellion; they would never by aiding and assisting such Rebels have involv'd themselves in the Guilt, and expos'd themselves to the dangerous Consequences of such a Sin. I mention not the particular Stories, because they are better known to your Lordships than to me, and because I doubt not but in the Course of this Debate, some Lord or other will give a larger Account of them. But I cannot forbear observing one thing relating to that Assistance, which that pious Prince, and now glorious Saint in Heaven King Charles I. gave to the Rochellers, who were surely the Subjects of the King of France: He order'd a Fast by Proclamation, and appointed a Form of Prayer to be drawn up for the imploring of God's Blessing. It is highly probable, that Bishop Laud had the great Hand in composing those Prayers, he being then Bishop of London, and in great Favour, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, Abbot, at that time in Disgrace. But whoever compos'd them, I beg leave to read part of one of the Collects in that Office: 'O Lord God of Hosts, that givest Victory in the Day of Battel, and Deliverance in the time of Trouble, We beseech thee to strengthen the Hands, and encourage the Hearts of thy Servants, in fighting thy Battles, and defending thy Altars that are among us, and in all the Reformed Churches.' It seems the Reformed Churches were thought to have God's Altars among them then, however they have been villify'd since. But that which I would observe from this Passage is this, That neither that excellent King who commanded those Prayers to be compos'd, nor the Bishops who compos'd them, nor the Clergy and People who used and join'd in them, could in so solemn a manner have recommended those Forces to the divine Protection and Favour, and as such as were fighting God's Battles, if they had thought they were fighting against God in his Vice-gerent; and as defending his Altars, if they believed they were resisting his Ordinance.

2. I could produce several Authorities in support of what I have laid down, but I shall mention but one: It is in a Book written professedly on this Subject, and the Passage I shall quote comes home in point to the matter in hand. The Book was written in Queen Elizabeth's Time: every one that is acquainted with the History of her Reign, knows what Attempts were made by the Pope and his Party against her Government and Life, by excommunicating, deposing her, absolving her Subjects from their Allegiance, by raising Tumults and Insurrections, by Dagger, Poison, and what not: And 'tis certain, that they were these wicked Practices of the Pope and his Followers, and the Doctrines by which they justify'd them, that the Compilers of the Homilies, which were then made, and other Authors, who then wrote about the Power of the Prince and the Duty of the Subject, had principally in their View. The Book I mean, is intitled, The true Difference between Christian Subjection and Unchristian Rebellion. It is written by way of Dialogue between a Christian, whom the Author calls Theophilus, and a Jesuit whom he calls Philander. I beg leave to read a Quotation out of it. Theophilus the Christian says, I busy not myself in other Men's Commonwealths as you (the Jesuits) do, neither will I rashly pronounce all that resist to be Rebels: Cases may fall out even in Christian Kingdoms, where the People may plead their Right against their Prince, and not be charged with Rebellion. Philander the Jesuit asks, As when for Example? Theophilus the Christian replies thus: If a Prince should go about to subject his Kingdom to a foreign Realm, or change the Form of the Commonwealth from Impery to Tyranny, or neglect the Laws establish'd by common Consent of Prince and People, to execute his own Pleasure: In these and other Cases, which might be named, if the Nobles and Commons join together to defend their antient and accusom'd Liberty, Regiment, and Laws, they may not well be accounted Rebels. This Book is said, in the Title-page, to have been perused and allow'd by publick Authority; was written by a great Man, Dr. Bilson, then Warden of Winchester College; printed at Oxford by the University Printer, and dedicated to Queen Elizabeth; and the Author was afterwards made Bishop of Winchester. I could offer many other Authorities, not from false Sons, or perfidious Prelates of the Church, not from Men of factious and antimonarchical Principles in relation to the State; but venerable Names, Ornaments to the Ages they lived in, and such as will be remembred with Honour in succeeding ones: But I am superseded in producing, and your Lordships Trouble saved in hearing more particular Quotations to this purpose, by what is yielded by a Reverend Divine of great Parts and Learning, far enough from the Suspicion of being prejudic'd against the Rights of Princes, or partial to those of the People; I mean the Reverend Dean of Carlisle, who in a Latin Discourse preach'd and printed in this Town upon the Duty of Submission, stating some Cases of extreme Necessity, and putting the Question, Whether it may not be lawful for the People in such Cases to resist? answers, Viri boni & graves, &c. 'That good and judicious Men, that have taken great and useful Pains in defending the Rights of Princes, and representing popular Licence, have contended that it is lawful.' He adds indeed, 'Whether they have done right or wrong, let others judge;' and does not give his own Opinion. But since he has granted, that such Men as he has described, Men of Probity and Judgment, zealous Assertors of the Rights of Princes, and Repressors of popular Licence, have contended that in Cases of extreme Necessity it is lawful for the People to defend themselves; I may comfort myself, if I err in my Opinion, that I err in good Company. But I humbly conceive I do not err, and that,

3. For this plain Reason, That if it be utterly unlawful to resist in any case whatsoever, even that of a total Subversion of the Constitution and Laws; then there is no Distinction of Governments, of absolute, I mean, and limited: or if there be a Distinction, it is a nominal one, without any real Difference. For what Difference is there between a Prince's governing arbitrarily without Law, and governing arbitrarily against Law? betwixt having no Laws at all, and having precarious Laws that depend intirely on the Will of the Prince, whether he will observe one of them, or subvert them all; and if he does, the People cannot help themselves?

But, my Lords, I hope and believe that there is a real Distinction of Governments, and that the Subjects of all Governments are not in the same wretched Condition that those of France and Turkey are in. I hope we have not boasted falsely or vainly of our own Form of Government, that we are bless'd with a Constitution more happy than any other Nation in the World enjoys, that allows and secures as great, and (I had almost said) God-like Powers and Prerogatives to the Crown, as any wise and good Prince can desire; a Power of doing every thing that is good, and nothing that is ill; and at the same time secures most valuable Rights and Privileges to the People.

What wise or good Prince would not rather chuse to reign over free Subjects, than tyrannize over Slaves? To receive a willing cheerful Obedience, proceeding from the Principles of Gratitude, Love and Interest, as well as of Duty, rather than a forced one, owing meerly to a Principle of Fear, the Principle from whence the Indians worship the evil Spirits?

My Lords, such a Frame of Government your Lordships have receiv'd from your Ancestors; and I hope and trust, that in grateful Respect to their Memory, and in tender regard to your Posterity, (I say nothing of ourselves, my Lords; for as for us who have the Happiness to live under the Government of the best of Princes that ever Heaven bless'd a Nation with; for us, I say, were our Government as arbitrary as any in the East, yet I should think our Rights, Liberties and Properties, and whatever is most dear and valuable to us, as safe if they depended entirely upon Her Majesty's gracious Will, as they are now they are secured to us by our Laws, or stronger Fences, if they could be made) but I speak in regard to those that are to come after us: and I do hope and trust, that as your Lordships have receiv'd such an inestimable Treasure from your Predecessors, you will transmit it inviolable to your Posterity.

My Lords, I fear I tire you, but I must beg your Patience a little longer, while I express my Surprise and Wonder that the Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance, in the unlimited Extent in which some explain it, is so diligently inculcated, and so zealously press'd at this Time.

Passive Obedience, I own, when truly stated, is a truly Christian Duty; a perpetual Duty as to the Obligation, but occasional as to the Practice of it. Now Preachers do not usually, neglecting the pressing of other Duties of more constant Practice, lay out their Time and Labour in filling both Pages of their Discourses with earnest Assertions and violent Exhortations to the Practice of an occasional Duty, unless they have some near Prospect of an Occasion for the Exercise of it. And yet, my Lords, has this one Duty been of late, more frequently and earnestly asserted and urged both from Pulpit and Press, than all the other Duties of Christianity: And what Occasion for this does any one pretend to have in view?

Can there be a Wretch so abandon'd, so lost to all Sense of Gratitude and every thing that is good, as to be capable of admitting a Thought, that that our gracious Queen has done, is doing, or intending to do any thing, that may give her Subjects occasion for the Practice of this Duty: Has she not, ever since her happy Accession to the Throne, postponed, sacrificed her own Repose and Ease to the Quiet and Happiness of her Subjects? Has she not clearly shown that she has nothing so much at heart, as the Good and Prosperity of her People, the true Interest and Honour of her Kingdom, which she has carried higher than any of her Royal Predecessors ever did before her? Has she not approv'd herself a true Parent of her Political Children, by exercising as prudent a Care of, and expressing on all Occasions as tender an Indulgence to them, as any natural Parents ever did towards theirs?

If then there be no Occasion from the Conduct of our Prince, is there any Reason from the Behaviour of her People that may justify this extraordinary and otherwise unseasonable Zeal for this Doctrine? Do they (excepting such as the Zealots for this Doctrine have excited to disturb her peaceful Reign at home, by rebellious and dangerous Tumults and Insurrections) shew any Uneasiness under her Majesty's Government, or Inclination to throw it off? Do they not bless their glorious Queen and God for her? Do they not on all Occasions express their grateful Sense of the many inestimable Blessings they enjoy thro' her Administration? Do they not constantly offer up their devout Prayers to God for her long Life and happy Reign? Do they not willingly pay their Taxes for the Support of her Government, cheerfully expend their Treasure and Blood too in Defence of it?

What then can be said for such a Conduct, which can have no other natural Tendency than to create unreasonable Jealousies of her People in the Head of our Queen, and groundless Fears of their Queen in the Hearts of her People? Jealousies in the Queen, that her Subjects are inclinable to rebel against her, when the Clergy think it necessary thus to press these Restraints upon them; and Fears in the People when their Pastors are so industriously preparing them for Sufferings.

My Lords, I would not be thought to charge upon all that hold and assert this Doctrine, the Consequences which I may with too much Reason charge upon some of them; I mean such as do not allow Her Majesty's Title to the Crown, but refuse to take the Oaths to Her, or join in Prayer for Her, and have upon that account form'd one of the most unaccountable Schisms that ever was made in the Church. Some of these have engaged zealously in asserting this Doctrine; and one of them in a Paper written in Vindication of it, has not been afraid to insinuate a Parallel between the Case of Her Majesty and the Pretender, and that of Atbaliah and Joash.

Horrid Suggestion, that would make one tremble! What do these Men mean? Any Service to Her Majesty? No: The Consequences as to them are plain. If to resist upon any Occasion whatever be unlawful, be Rebellion, damnable Rebellion; then the Revolution was Rebellion, and all that were concern'd in it are involv'd in that Guilt; then we have continued in a Rebellion ever since; then if we wou'd avoid Damnation, we must repent of that Sin: but there is no true Repentance without Restitution, and if there must be Restitution, they will tell you what that is.

VOL. V.

I would charitably hope, that the unfortunate Person now in Judgment before your Lordships, did not intend to carry Matters so far: But I must say, his Doctrine as he has stated and managed it, under his Head of Falſe Brotherhood with relation to the State, does give too great a Handle for those that have such Views, to improve what he has said to their Purposes.

The Counsel for him, have labour'd to defend him against the Charge in this Article, by producing a great many Quotations out of the Homilies, Statutes, and Writings of Divines dead and living, wherein this Doctrine has been laid down generally. They all allow'd that Cases of extreme Necessity were always excepted out of this general Doctrine; and that tho' the Exception was not express'd, yet it was always imply'd; and they allow'd farther, that the Case of the Revolution was a Case of such Necessity: But how did they apply this to the Case of their Client? Thus: They said, that those Divines whom they had quoted, were never found fault with for asserting the Doctrine in general Terms, not expressing but tacitly implying the Exception: Then they ask'd, Why should the Doctor be charged for asserting the Doctrine in general Terms, as others had done, not expressing the Exception which they had not express'd? Why should not he be intitled to the favourable Construction of tacitly implying the Exception of Cases of Necessity, such a Necessity as they allow'd justify'd the Revolution?

Indeed I should readily have admitted the Plea, if the Doctor had done no more than barely assert the Doctrine in general Terms, and his only Fault had been that he had not express'd the Exception which he tacitly imply'd: But has he done no more than this? Has he not mention'd the Case of the Revolution, with no other view, as I can see, than to expose it; not as an Exception out of his general Position, but an Objection against it? Our Adversaries, says he, that is, those that oppose his general Doctrine, think they have us sure, i. e. effectually confute that Doctrine, by objecting the Revolution. This Objection must suppose that there was Resistance at the Revolution; for to say that the general Doctrine, That it is not lawful in any Case to resist, is not true, because the Revolution was lawful, in which there was no Resistance, would be a wonderful Objection indeed: I say, Resistance must be suppos'd in the Objection, to make Sense of it. How then does he solve this Objection? Does he say the general Doctrine always implies an Exception of Cases of Necessity? That the Revolution was a Case of such Necessity, and therefore that Necessity justify'd the Resistance at the Revolution; No, but by advancing a strange Position (which he proves by as strange a Medium) viz. That there was no Resistance at the Revolution: plainly implying, that if there was Resistance at the Revolution, which every body knows there was, the Revolution stands condemn'd by his general Doctrine. So that I cannot see that his learned Counsel, who wanted neither Abilities nor Inclinations to serve him, have at all defended him against the Charge in this Article. But this they have effectually done, they have given up his general Doctrine, if it admits of no Exceptions; and thereby clear'd the Revolution and the necessary Means whereby it was brought about, from those black and odious Colours which he endeavour'd to cast upon them.

After all, I can truly appeal to my own Heart, and a greater than it, the Searcher of it, that I am not any ways prejudiced against the Person of the unhappy Prisoner, but rather in favour of him, as I am of all Men in his suffering Circumstances, by a natural Tenderneſs (it may be a Weakneſs, but ſuch a one as I cannot help) which never ſuffers me, however oblig'd in Juſtice to it, to do a hard thing to any one—however deſerving it, without doing at the ſame time a hard thing to myſelf: And if your Lordſhips ſhould be of Opinion in the Concluſion of this Trial, That the Commons have made good their Charge againſt him, I am ſure I could come into as eaſy a Sentence upon him as may be conſiſtent with the Honour and Juſtice of your Proceedings, and with that which I take to be the chief End in all Punishments, not ſo much the hurting the Offender, as the preventing the like Offences, and hindring others from committing them for the future.

But ſtill, my Lords, there is ſurely a Tenderneſs and Compaſſion due to our Queen, our Country, and our Poſterity; all which, I humbly apprehend, are highly concern'd in the Iſſue of this Affair.

If Clergymen may with Impunity publickly in their Sermons arraign and condemn the Revolution; beſides the Reflections they caſt upon all the worthy Patriots that were concern'd in that great Work, the Commonalty, Gentry, and Nobility, Lords upon every Bench in this Houſe; beſides this, it muſt ſhake, it muſt ſap the very Foundation of our preſent Eſtabliſhment, as it ſtands upon the Foot of the Revolution, and utterly deſtroy our future Hopes in the Proteſtant Succeſſion, which is founded upon that bottom only.

My Lords, I muſt humbly aſk Pardon for having treſpaſs'd ſo long upon your Patience, and will conclude with this one Word, That in my Opinion, theſe Praeſcriptions of Clergy-men (to uſe the Expreſſion of a great and eminent Prelate) in State-Matters, are of that dangerous Tendency and Conſequence, that if there be not ſome effectual Stop put to theſe Praeſcriptions, theſe Praeſcriptions will, in time, put an effectual End to our Conſtitution.

The Commons had therefore Reaſon to bring this Matter in Judgment before your Lordſhips, and I think they have fully made good their Charge in the firſt Article of their Impeachment againſt Dr. Sacheverell.

*The Biſhop of Lincoln's * Speech to the Houſe of Lords, March the 17th, at the opening of the ſecond Article of the Impeachment againſt Dr. Sacheverell.*

MY LORDS,

IT was the Miſfortune of ſome of our Bench, that in the Proſecution of the foregoing Article of this Impeachment, a Noble Lord, who ſpoke very early to that Point, was pleaſed not only to anticipate our Judgment in that Particular; but to do it with this pretty hard Reflection, That in giving it, as he ſuppos'd we would, we ſhould vote contrary to our own Doctrine. It is not improbable but that, in the Courſe of the preſent Debate, another Arrow may be drawn out of the ſame † Quiver to ſhoot at us; and we may be told, that in defending of the || Toleration granted by Law to the Diſſenters, we ſhew ourſelves to be Apoſtates from our own Order. But from both theſe Imputations I am perſuaded both our Writings, and our Actions, will ſecure us in the Judgment of all indifferent Perſons.

The Subſtance of this Second Article of the Impeachment, which your Lordſhips are now about to enter upon, is this: 'That Dr. Sacheverell in his Sermon doth ſuggeſt and maintain, that the Toleration granted by Law is unreaſonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable. That he is a False Brother with relation to God, Religion, or the Church, who defends Toleration, and Liberty of Conſcience. That Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbiſhop Grindal to the Toleration of the Genevian Diſcipline: And that it is the Duty of ſuperior Paſtors to thunder out their Eccleſiaſtical Anathemas againſt Perſons entitled to the Benefit of the Toleration; and insolently dares, or deſies, any Power on Earth to reverse ſuch Sentences.' This, my Lords, is the Sum of this part of the Commons Charge againſt Dr. Sacheverell, and I think the Managers have fully made it out; not by bare Intendments, by unneceſſary Implications, and forced Conſtructions; not by piecing together broken Sentences, and conjoining of diſtant, and independent Paſſages (as he has unjuſtly complain'd;) but by the plain Words, and neceſſary Meaning, of a very great part of his Diſcourſe.

But before I trouble your Lordſhips with the Proof of this, give me leave, upon this Occaſion (tho' it be no part of the Impeachment laid againſt the Preacher) to obſerve to your Lordſhips what a ſtrange Account he has thought fit to publiſh of that other popular Engine, which, he ſays, has been made uſe of ‡ to pull down the Church, and which he calls by the Name of Comprehension.

The Perſon who firſt concerted this ſuppoſed Deſign againſt our Church, was the late moſt Reverend Dr. Sancroft, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The Time was towards the End of that unhappy Reign, of which ſo much was ſaid upon the Occaſion of the foregoing Article. Then, when we were in the height of our Labours, defending the Church of England againſt the Aſſaults of Popery, and thought of nothing elſe; that wiſe Prelate foreſeeing ſome ſuch Revolution as ſoon after was happily brought about, began to conſider how utterly unprepared they had been at the Reſtoration of King Charles II. to ſettle many things to the Advantage of the Church; and what a happy Opportunity had been loſt for want of ſuch a previous Care, as he was therefore deſirous ſhould now be taken, for the better and more perfect Eſtabliſhment of it. It was viſible to all the Nation, that the more moderate Diſſenters were generally ſo well ſatisfied with that that Stand which our Divines had made against Popery, and the many unanswerable Treatises they had publish'd in Confutation of it, as to express an unusual Readiness to come in to us. And it was therefore thought worth the while, when they were deliberating about those other Matters, to consider at the same time what might be done to gain them, without doing any Prejudice to ourselves.

The Scheme was laid out, and the several Parts of it were committed, not only with the Approbation but by the Direction of that Great Prelate, to such of our Divines as were thought the most proper to be intrusted with it. His Grace took one Part to Himself: Another was committed to the then Pious and Reverend * Dean, afterwards a Bishop, of our Church. The reviewing of the daily Service of our Liturgy, and the Communion-Book, was referr'd to a select Number of excellent Persons, † two of which are at this time upon our Bench; and I am sure will bear Witness to the Truth of my Relation. The Design was, in short, this: To improve, and, if possible, to enforce our Discipline; to review, and enlarge our Liturgy; by correcting of some things, by adding of others; and if it should be thought advisable by Authority, when this Matter should come to be legally consider'd, first in Convocation, then in Parliament, by leaving some few Ceremonies, confess'd to be indifferent in their Natures, as indifferent in their Usage, so as not to be necessarily observ'd by those who made a Scruple of them; till they should be able to overcome either their Weaknesses or Prejudices, and be willing to comply with them.

How far this good Design was not only known to, but approved of by, the other Fathers of our Church, that famous Petition, for which Seven of them were sent to the Tower, and which contributed so much to our Deliverance, may suffice to shew. The 'Willingness there declared of coming to such a Temper as should be thought fit with the Dissenters, when that Matter should be consider'd, and settled, in Parliament and Convocation;' manifestly referr'd to what was then known to several, if not all of the Subscribers, to have been at that very time under Deliberation. And that nothing more was intended than I have before said, is as evident from what was publicly declared in a Treatise purposely written to recommend the Design, when it was brought before the two Houses of Parliament, in the beginning of the late Reign; and Licensed by the Authority of a Noble Peer, now present, who was at that time Secretary of State: In the very Beginning of which there is this remarkable Passage, which I shall beg leave to read to your Lordships: || 'No Alteration, that I know of, is intended, but in things declared to be alterable by the Church itself. And if Things alterable be altered upon the Grounds of Prudence and Charity; and Things defective be supplied; and Things abused be restored to their proper Use; and Things of a more than ordinary Composition, revised and improved; whilst the Doctrine, Government, and Worship of the Church remain intire, in all the substantial parts of them; we have all reason to believe that this will be so far from injuring the Church, that, on the contrary, it shall receive a very great Benefit by it.'

And now, my Lords, let any impartial Person consider, what was there in such a Design that could be justly esteem'd prejudicial to the Constitution of our Church? Wherein would our Canons have suffer'd, if those already made, had been more strongly enforced; and some new ones had been added, for the Reformation of Manners; for the better punishing of notorious Offenders; and to render our publick Discipline more strict, and severe? This we have been wishing for, ever since the Reformation. What harm would it have done our Church had it now been effected? Or how would our excellent Liturgy have been the worse, if a few more doubtful Expressions had been changed for plainer and clearer; and a Passage or two, which however capable of a just Defence, yet in many Cases seem harsh to some even of our own Communion, had either been wholly left at liberty, in such Cases, to be omitted altogether; or been so qualified as to remove all Exception against them in any Case. If such Collects, as are not yet adapted to the Festivals, or Gospels, to which they belong, had been made more full, and apposite to both; if some of the occasional Offices had been enlarged, and new ones added: If, for Example, there had been a greater variety of Prayers, Psalms, and Lessons appointed by Authority, instead of the Compositions of private Persons, now necessarily to be used, for the Visitation of the Sick; and new Forms composed for the Use of Prisoners for Debt or Crimes: For the greater Solemnity of receiving Profelytes into our Church; of reconciling Penitents to it; and of casting notorious Offenders out of it: These were some of the main things that were then design'd. As for any favour to the Dissenters, none, that I know of, was intended, but what should have been entirely consistent with our own Constitution: And I hope it will not be thought any Crime for the Bishops, and Clergy of our Church, to be willing to enlarge its Communion, by any Methods which may be likely to gain others, and yet not injure our own Establishment.

But to satisfy your Lordships that nothing could have been designed to the Detriment of the Church; be pleas'd farther to consider, how what was thus at first projected in private, by select Persons, and in a difficult Time, when no Countenance was to be expected from Authority to any such purpose, was afterwards, if ever, to have been brought to Maturity. And this being a matter of publick Notice, the relation of it will admit of no Exception.

No sooner were their late Majesties, of glorious Memory, seated in their Thrones, but this Design was openly espoused by them. A Commission was issued out, under the Great Seal of England, to a large number of Bishops and other eminent Divines, to meet together, and to consider of these Matters. What they did, having not had the Honour to be one of them, I shall not presume to say. This we know, that whatever they did, it was to have been carried on from them to the two Convocations of Canterbury and York: And after it should have pass'd their Approbations, it was finally to have been laid before the

the two Houses of Parliament, and so to have gone on to the Royal Assent. This, my Lords, was the Course thro' which all that was designed, or should have been done in this matter, must have pass'd: and I am persuaded nothing very injurious to our Church's Welfare, will ever be able to pass thro' all these.

Having thus given your Lordships a true account of that Design which Dr. Sacheverell mentions under the Name of Comprehension, I doubt not but that your Lordships will now be amazed to hear, what a false and scandalous Report he has made of it. In the 16th Page of his Sermon, he thus speaks of it: 'The worst Adversaries of our Church, says he, were to be let into her Bowels under the Holy Umbrage of Sons; who neither believed her Faith; own'd her Mission; submitted to her Discipline; or complied with her Liturgy. For the admitting of this Trojan Horse, big with Arms and Ruin into our Holy City, the straight Gate was to be laid quite open; her Walls and Enclosures to be pull'd down; and a High-road made in upon her Communion. Her Articles to be taught the Confusion of all Senses, Nations, and Languages.'

This, my Lords, is a very strange Representation of so good a Design, as that I before recounted to your Lordships. Yet this Representation did this bold Man, as confidently, as falsely, make of it in the House of God, and publish to the View of the whole Nation. For thus he goes on: 'This pious Design of making our House of Prayer a Den of Thieves, of reforming our Church into a Chaos, is well known to have been attempted several times in this Kingdom, and lately within our Memory; when all Things seem'd to favour it, but that good Providence which so happily interposed against the Ruin of our Church, and blasted the long-projected Scheme of these Ecclesiastical Achitophels.' To say nothing more of the Design itself, of which I have given an Account before; pray, my Lords, who were the Achitophels that projected it, and must have concurr'd to the Execution of it? I have already named the first, and chiefest of them, the late Archbishop Sancroft. The next who openly approved of it, were the Commissioners who met upon it in the Jerusalem-Chamber: A Set of Men, than which this Church was never, at any one time, bless'd with either wiser or better since it was a Church: Who it was that* presided in the Convocation of this Province, to which this Project was next to be referr'd; and who, had it gone on, must have had a chief Hand in the Management of it, I need not say. Every one who knows any thing at all of his Character, (and I am sure your Lordships are none of you Strangers to it) knows him to be too good a Friend to the Establishment of our Church, to have been capable of being engaged in such a villainous Design, as Dr. Sacheverell pretends, for the Subversion of it. Or had he been otherwise, yet still the major Part of that venerable Body must have been as great Achitophels as himself, or no Harm could have been done by him. Pardon me, my Lords, if the Course of my Argument obliges me to rise yet one Degree higher, and to say, that the like Majority of your Lordships, and of the House of Commons, together with his late Majesty, must all have come into the Plot against the Church; or all the Skill and Malice of the inferior Achitophels, would have signified nothing. And what Censure that Man deserves, who has the Confidence to insinuate to the World, that the Bishops, the other Clergy, the Convocations, the Parliament, nay, and the late King himself, our glorious Deliverer; or at least the greater part of all these, were engaged in a Project 'so monstrous, so romantic, and absurd, (for here I am content to use his own Expressions) that it is hard to say whether it had more of Villany, or Folly, in it;' I shall submit it to your Lordships to consider. All I design in taking notice of this part of his Sermon, is only to clear the Memory of many excellent Persons who are dead; and to vindicate the Reputation of some still living, and in the highest Stations of the Church, from that Load of Infamy which this rash Man has with so much Virulence of Speech cast upon them: And to let your Lordships see that nothing was intended in all that Affair but what was both Honourable to those who engaged in it, and I am persuaded would have been for the Interest and Peace of our Church and State, had it been accomplish'd.

I come now to that which is the proper Subject of the present Debate; namely to offer such Passages to your Lordships, as I humbly conceive do plainly and fully make out the Second Article of the Commons Impeachment against the Preacher; and prove him to have spoken with more Freedom than he ought, not only of the Dissenters themselves, but of the Toleration, (or as he had rather we should call it) the Indulgence granted by Law to them.

And here, as I remember, it was not deny'd either by his Counsel or himself, but that he had spoken, and spoken with Warmth too, against Toleration. The only Question is, What the Toleration is against which he spake? Whether it was that which has been granted by Law to the Dissenters? Or whether it was only against a general Toleration of Atheists, Deists, Socinians, Men of no Principles, perhaps of no Religion? Or at most against such of the Dissenters as abused the Indulgence granted them by Law; and made use of it to Purposes not at all warranted by it? The former of these the Commons charge upon him: The latter he pretends; the better to clear himself of their Charge.

To determine this Point, I must in the first place beg leave to observe, that among the several sorts of false Brethren, enumerated by the Preacher with relation to God, Religion, or the Church; the second kind is of those, who give up any Point of the Church's Discipline and Worship, Page 8. To this he adds, that those are false Brethren who defend Toleration, and Liberty of Conscience. And that we may the better know what Toleration and Liberty of Conscience he means, he specifies the very Persons to whom he refers, and of whom he speaks; the Dissenters: 'If, says he, to comply with the Dissenters both in publick and private Affairs, as Persons of tender Conscience and Piety, to promote their Interests in Elections, to sneak to them for Places and Preferment, to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and under the pretence of Moderation, excuse their Separation, are the Criteria of a true Church-Man; God deliver us all from such false Brethren.' The Toleration therefore, and Liberty of Conscience, against which he

he speaks, must necessarily be that of the Dissenters; those who separate from our Church: He names no others; but carries the same Persons thro' his whole Sentence, both before and after those Expressions. Either therefore it is no Reflection upon the Act of Indulgence to say that all those who defend the Toleration of the Dissenters, and are for allowing Liberty of Conscience to them, are false Brethren with relation to God, Religion or the Church, Page 6, 7, and such against whom we ought to pray to God to deliver us all, Page 8: Or if this cannot with any Reason be either said, or supposed, then it must remain that Dr. Sacheverell has here said what the Commons charge him withal; and that in express Terms, viz. That he is a false Brother who defends the Toleration, not of Deists, Socinians, and I know not what Monsters of Irreligion, but of the Dissenters: Those same Dissenters who by the Act of Indulgence have a right to that Liberty of Conscience of which this Gentleman speaks so very hardly; and prays God to defend us from all such false Brethren as shall presume to excuse it.

But not to insist upon a single Passage which may be supposed to have dropt unwarily from him: In the Second Part of his Sermon, he proceeds to shew the great Perils and Mischiefs of those false Brethren, against whom he was before speaking, both to the Church and State, Page 15. And that these again are the same Persons who have a Right to the legal Indulgence, is so very clear, that I do not see how it is possible for any one to make the least doubt of it. Page 18. He describes them as Occasional Conformists to the Church. Page 19. As those who had the old Leaven of their Forefathers still working in them: And, in the next Sentence, he expressly talks of the religious Liberty which our gracious Sovereign has indulged them. This in the very same Sentence he calls their Toleration; (for the Doctor himself is not tied up to any Niceties of Expression; he may call it so, tho' others may not:) These are the Persons, and the only Persons, of whom he speaks in all that part of his Discourse; let us see what he says of the Indulgence granted by Law to them.

And first, he tells us, Page 18. 'That it cannot be deny'd, but that tho' they do submit to the Government, their Obedience is forced, and constrained; and so treacherous and uncertain, as never to be trusted. That they are as much Occasional Loyalists to the State, as they are Occasional Conformists to the Church; and will betray either whenever it is in their Power, and they think it for their Advantage. That nothing but a sottish Infatuation can so far blind our Eyes and our Judgments, as to make us believe that the same Causes should not produce the same Effects; that the same Latitudinarian and Republican Notions should not bring forth the same rebellious and pernicious Consequences. That we shall be convinced to our Sorrow, if we don't apprehend that the old Leaven of their Forefathers is still working in the present Generation; and that this traditional Poison still remains in this Brood of Vipers to sting us to death. That they have advanced themselves from the religious Liberty which our gracious Sovereign has indulged them, to claim a Civil Right; and to juggle the Church out of her Establishment, by boisting their Toleration into its Place. That to convince 'us what alone will satisfy them, they insolently demand the Repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, which under her Majesty, is the only Security the Church has to depend upon: And which (if we may believe him) they have so far eluded by their abominable Hypocrisy, as to have undermin'd her Foundations, and endanger the Government, by filling it with its professed Enemies.' His Meaning is plainly this; that the Dissenters, whom we are so foolish as to indulge, are a parcel of false and treacherous Persons; Enemies both to our Church and State; and such as, if not timely suppress'd, will convince us to our Sorrow of the Weakness and Folly of taking such Vipers into our Bosom, as watch only for a fair opportunity to sting us to death.

But what then must we do to secure ourselves against these dangerous Enemies? Why first, the Doctor assures us, that they are never to be gain'd by any Favour that can be shew'd to them. 'That he must be very weak, or something worse, that thinks, or pretends, that the Dissenters (for of these he still speaks) are to be won over by any other Grants and Indulgences than giving up our whole Constitution.' This shews the Folly of trying the soft way of Indulgence with them: And therefore he concludes, That 'He who recedes the least Tittle from it (our Constitution) to satisfy, or ingratiate with these clamorous, insatiable, Church-devouring Malignants, knows not what Spirit they are of; or he ought to shew who is the true Member of our Church.'

This I think comes fully up to what is objected against him; namely, that Dr. Sacheverell does in his Sermon suggest and maintain, that the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the allowance of it unwarrantable: For so it needs must be, if the Dissenters be such Men as he tells us they are; and will be satisfy'd with nothing less, than he assures us they will. And yet what next follows, is, if possible, still more express to the same purpose. It is objected against him, by the Commons, that he had affirm'd in his Sermons, That 'Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbishop Grindal, (whom he scurrilously calls a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate) to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline.' The Fact is not denied, but the Expressions are excus'd; and the Truth of the Allegation is endeavour'd to be made out by Historical Memoirs: And it is hoped that your Lordships will not account it a High Crime and Misdemeanor, to have spoken too hardly of a Prelate who has been so many Years in his Grave.

I am, my Lords, very far from thinking, that the Commons ever intended to charge Dr. Sacheverell as guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, for speaking scandalously of that good Archbishop. Their Concern was not for his Person, what Respect soever they may have had (as all true Friends of the Reformation must needs have a very great one) for his Memory. But the Truth of the matter is this: The Preacher complains, Page 19 of his Sermon, that Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbishop Grindal, to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline. He adds, 'That the Archbishop was a perfidious Prelate, for deluding her to tolerate that Discipline. That she found it such a headstrong and encroaching Monster, that in eight Years she saw it would endanger the Monarchy

*' Monarchy as well as the Hierarchy: And like a Queen of true Resolution, and pious Zeal for both, she pronounced that such were the restless Spirits of that factious People, * that no Quiet was to be expected from them, till they were Utterly Suppress'd. That this therefore, like a prudent Princess, she did by wholesome Severities; and the Effect was, that by this means the Crown for many Years sat easy and flourishing on her Head: But that her Successor, King James, did not follow her wise Politicks.' And the Result was as deplorable on his side, as it had been glorious on hers: For by this means, His Son fell a Martyr to their Fury; his unhappy Offspring suffer'd such disastrous Calamities, as made the Royal Family one continued Sacrifice to their Malice.' And all this for want of those wholesome Severities which the wise Queen his Predecessor had used utterly to suppress that factious People.*

This, my Lords, is the Doctor's Narrative, and I have given it you in his own Words. The Application is plain and home. The Dissenters are now again tolerated, as they were heretofore under Queen Elizabeth. There is a perfidious Prelate (perhaps in his Opinion a great many) who, like Archbishop Grindal, help to delude another Queen, into the Toleration of them. These Eight Years past (for the very number of Years is remarkable) her Majesty has borne the restless Spirits of this factious People; and had no Quiet for them. It is now high time for her to alter her Measures, as Queen Elizabeth wisely did. It is the only way to make the Crown sit easy and flourishing upon her Head. And if this be not plainly to speak out what he would have done with the Act of Indulgence, I must despair of ever being able to know any Man's Meaning by his Expressions. Such Examples are not only the most likely to enforce, but the most proper and lively Methods to convey a Man's Sense, even to the dullest Capacity; and make him clearly perceive if not what he ought, yet I am sure what the Preacher would have him to do.

The Truth is, so plain was his Meaning, that he himself began to fear that he had gone a little too far in what he had said of this Matter. And, for that reason, he added that one poor Sentence which immediately follows, and of which he has made such good use since: ' That he would not be misunderstood as if he intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government had condescended to give them, (the Dissenters:)' But what then did he intend by all this bitter Invektive against them; and that very instructive Piece of History with which he concluded it? He has told us, ' that the Dissenters are false Brethren; destructive both of our Civil and Ecclesiastical Rights: That they are Occasional Loyalists to the State, as well as Occasional Conformists to the Church; and will betray both whenever they have it in their Power, and it shall be their Interest to do it: That it must be a sottish Infatuation to believe that the same Latitudinarian and Republican Notions, should not bring forth the same rebellious and pernicious Consequences: That we shall be convinc'd to our Sorrow, if we do not apprehend that the Old Leaven of their Forefathers, is still working in the present Generation: That they have already made dangerous Encroachments upon the Government, and published treasonable Reflections upon her Majesty: That they have advanced their Indulgence into a Civil Right, and justified the Church out of her Establishment, by hoisting their Toleration into its Place: That they have by their abominable Hypocrisy undermined the Foundation of the Church, and endangered the Government, by filling it with its professed Enemies: That they are clamorous, insatiable, Church-devouring Malignants; whom no other Grants or Indulgences can win over, but the giving up our whole Constitution: That ever since their first unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, they have improved, and rose upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government: That Queen Elizabeth, who tolerated them for eight Years together, was forced at last to suppress them by wholesome Severities: That this made her Crown sit easy and flourishing on her Head; whereas King James the first, by not pursuing the like Methods, ruined the whole Royal Family: That nothing better could be expected from such Miscreants, begot in Rebellion, born in Sedition, and nursed up in Faction.' All this Dr. Sacheverell has said in these very plain, and emphatical Words. If he did not intend by all this to shew the Necessity of suppressing these factious People, these Vipers, who are just ready to sting us all to death, I would be glad to know what it was that he did intend by it? Could he say all this, and with such a singular Strain of impetuous Eloquence, and yet, ' not intend to cast so much as the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence which the Government has thought fit to give them?' I must freely own, my Lords, I could never have imagined this: Nay, I must be excused if I add, That notwithstanding this poor Evasion, I cannot yet believe it. But the Act of Indulgence stood in his way: That Act the Queen had declared her Resolution to maintain: Your Lordships and the Commons had often shewn your Steadiness to the same effect. Even those who press'd so violently against occasional Communion, yet thought it necessary to say, in the very Preamble of that Bill, that the Act of Indulgence ought inviolably to be observed: And therefore Dr. Sacheverell thought it needful to add somewhat that he knew would not take off any thing from the Force of his Invektive, yet might serve to excuse the Severity of it, and be made use of to the purpose it now is, if he should chance to be call'd to account for it. This, my Lords, I conceive to be the true Meaning of that one single Passage, so utterly repugnant to all the rest of his Discourse; nor can I put any other Interpretation upon it. For had I the same Opinion of these Men, their Principles, and their Designs, that Dr. Sacheverell has, I should be so far from thinking them fit to be indulged, that I should account it my Duty, and the Duty of every true Friend to our Church and Government, to take the same Methods of wholesome Severities with them that Queen Elizabeth did: And I hope, by God's Grace, that should I be question'd for it, I should not dissemble my Opinion; but should have the Courage honestly to own it, whatever I might chance to suffer for it.

I have, my Lords, insisted the longer upon this Part of the Doctor's Sermon, because I would not willingly fall under the Censure of picking out disjointed Sentences, and putting them together from distant Places, that so I might the better draw draw a Sense out of them, contrary to his Meaning. I shall trouble your Lordships but with one part more of it, to the same Effect, Page 24, 25. where he comes to consider, What should be the Result of his long Discourse? I shall read it to your Lordships in his own Words, Page 25. 'Let us therefore, says he, as we are unhappy Sharers of St. Paul's Misfortune, to have our Church in Perils amongst false Brethren, follow his Example and Conduct in a parallel Case. He tells us in his Epistle to the Galatians, c. 2. That he was obstructed, and pester'd in preaching the Gospel, by False Brethren unawares brought in, who came privily to spy out his Liberty which he had in Christ Jesus, that they might bring him into Bondage. To whom he gave place by Subjection, no not for an Hour, that the Truth of the Gospel might continue with the Church. Doubtless this brave and bold Resolution did the Apostle take by the peculiar Command and Inspiration of the Holy Ghost: And yet if our Dissenters had lived in those times, they would have branded him as an intemperate, hot, furious Zealot, that wanted to be sweetned by the gentle Spirit of Charity and Moderation forsooth.'

Here we have again the Persons of whom the Preacher speaks: They are our Dissenters, not the Deists, Atheists, Socinians, Hypocrites, of our times. And accordingly what follows, plainly refers to them: For thus he goes on, 'Schism and Faction are things of impudent and incroaching Natures; take Permissions for Power; and advance a Toleration (for so the Doctor is still at liberty to call what we must style Indulgence) immediately into an Establishment.' Your Lordships will please to observe, by the way, that this was the very thing he had before said of these same Persons, Page 19. and thereby plainly shews, that he speaks in both places of those Dissenters who have a Right to the Toleration or Indulgence, granted by Law to Protestant Dissenters. Let us now hear what he would have done with them. Why he would have them 'treated like growing Mischiefs, or infectious Plagues; kept at a distance, lest the deadly Contagion spread.' And the Method he proposes in order thereunto, is this, 'Let us therefore, says he, have no Fellowship with these Works of Darknes; but rather reprove them.' These Works, Schism and Faction; for of these, and these only, he here speaks. This is the People's Part, and the inferior Pastors: 'As for the superior Pastors, let them do their Duty, in thundring out their Ecclesiastical Anathemas against them.' Against whom, my Lords? what Works of Darknes? Still the same he before mentioned: Our Dissenters, those are the Persons: Their Schism and Faction; those are the Works of Darknes to which he refers. 'And let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratify'd in Heaven.'

This, my Lords, was the last part of the Commons Impeachment upon this second Article: And 'tis so plainly expressed by the Preacher in this Passage, that I confess it amazes me to consider with what Positiveness he has thought fit to deny that any such thing was meant by him. The Persons whom the superior Pastors are summoned to anathematize, are the same with those, whom the other Pastors and People are to have no Fellowship withal, but to reprove. These, by the necessary Connection of his Discourse, are our Dissenters; whose Works of Darknes, he states to be Schism and Faction: Those Dissenters to whom the Government hath granted a Toleration; as himself, in the same Passage, takes notice. Which being so; I shall leave the Doctor to deny and protest, as he pleases; but when all is done, his own Words will rise up against him, and appear to every impartial Person so plain, and positive, as to put it beyond the Power of any artificial Interpretation to perplex the Meaning of them.

And this lets us into the true Application of those Passages of Scripture, with which he concludes his whole Discourse. In which, having shewn the Danger of our Church from these false Brethren, and exhorted his Auditor to a steady Courage and Resolution in the Defence of it; he thus at once both inforces his Doctrine, and abuses his Adversaries. That tho' the Church (for to that he applies, what * Zechariah spake of the false Prophets that seduced the People) lies bleeding of the Wounds she has received in the House of her Friends: A Passage first thrown at my † self, for defending the Prince's Authority, when some of these very Men engaged as vehemently on the side of Liberty, against the Rights of the Crown, as they now pretend to stand up vigorously for it: † Tho' the Ways of Zion may mourn for a Time (so the Doctor glosses upon the Text) and her Gates be desolate; her Priests sigh, and she in bitterness, because (it is the Preacher's Reason, the Text has no such Word) her Adversaries are chief; he means in the Administration under her Majesty; and her Enemies at present prosper; (so he again improves the Text; in hopes, I suppose, that it will not be long before he shall have preach'd them out of their Places:)  Tho' among all her Lovers she has few (the Prophet complained that Jerusalem had none) to comfort her; and many (Jeremiah said all) have dealt treacherously with her, and are become her Enemies; (he refers to those of whom he had before spoken, Page 22.) †† Tho' there are few to guide her among all the Sons which she hath brought forth; neither are there many to take her by the Hand of all the Sons that she hath brought up; (Isaiah in both places, says none:) Tho' her Enemies cry, Down with her, down with her, even to the Ground: That is, in other Words, tho' (the Preacher, and a few of his Friends, excepted) both the Fathers and Pastors of the Church; and the Men who are at present in Power, and Authority, in the State, are become false Brethren, and run in with those Enemies of the Church, our Dissenters, against it; 'Yet there is a God that can, and will raise her up, if we forsake her not.'

It were an easy matter to make many proper Remarks upon these Passages of Scripture, thus applied, or rather abused, by the Preacher: But that would be besides my present Business; and will fall in more properly under the last Article of this Impeachment. It is enough that I have, I hope, fully shewn your Lordships how Dr. Sacheverell has treated, if not the Indulgence itself, yet I am sure, those who are entitled to the Benefit of it: And who, if they shall have the Misfortune, by this kind of Preaching, to be once generally thought such wicked, false, and dangerous Enemies to our Church and State as they are here represented, I cannot think that their Indulgence will hold long. If they have Numbers to secure them, it is well for them: But otherwise I am sure as the Case is here stated, it must be our Wisdom, as well as Duty, to suppress them.

How criminal such an Invektive as this will be accounted in the Eye of the Law, I dare not presume to suggest: Much less shall I pretend to intimate what Censure it may deserve. Somewhat I think should be done to put a Stop to such Preaching, as if not timely corrected may kindle such Heats and Animositities among us, as may truly endanger both our Church and State. As for the Preacher himself, I am very willing to come into any Measures of Favour to him, that are consistent with your Lordships Honour and Justice, and will answer the Ends of the Impeachment that has been brought before us against him.

*The Bishop of Norwich's * Speech in the House of Lords, at the opening of the Second Article of Impeachment against Dr. Sacheverell.*

My LORDS,

I Am very sensible under what Disadvantage in the Opinion of many, a Bishop must speak against a Clergyman that stands accused of Crimes committed by him in the seeming Execution of his Office; especially after having been so publicly required to be an Advocate as well as a Judge. And I am the more sensible of this Prejudice lying against me, for having been so lately called into that Order, and for being so unworthy of it.

But I think myself obliged notwithstanding, under all these Disadvantages, to deliver not only my Judgment, but also the Reasons that determine me to it: Which I shall do as I plainly as I can; with that Deference to your Lordships, which I am sure it must upon all Occasions particularly become me to pay; and at the same time with that Freedom which I think the Importance of this Cause does at this time require.

Dr. Sacheverell stands impeached by the Commons of Great Britain, of High Crimes and Misdemeanors expressed in the several Articles of the Charge exhibited against him: And your Lordships have heard what they have said in support of that Charge, as well as what has been offer'd in the Doctor's Defence.

Your Lordships have also debated among yourselves the Merits of the Cause as to the first of these Articles; and have come to a Resolution, that the Commons have made good that part of their Charge: In which Resolution as I did heartily concur, so I was ready to have humbly represented to your Lordships my Reasons for so doing, had there been either room or occasion for it.

Your Lordships are now upon the Second Article; wherein the Doctor is charged for suggesting and maintaining, that the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; with other Particulars that have immediate relation to this general Charge, and which are indeed for many Proofs of it.

In this view therefore, my Lords, I beg leave to consider them: And the First of these Instances in support of this Charge, is, that he asserts, that He is a false Brother with relation to God, Religion, or the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; and this, my Lords, the Doctor does assert in so many Words. It is one of the many Marks he gives whereby we may discern who is a false Brother in those respects; not a small part of one general Mark, as was alledged very inconclusively, I think, in his Defence. For if it was to be granted, (tho' it cannot be fairly pretended) that the Doctor makes the defending of Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, one Branch only of the Character of a false Brother; I do not see how it could make even a part of that Character, if there was no false Brotherhood in it. And I shall not trouble myself or your Lordships with going about to settle the degrees of false Brotherhood that are in this part of the Character, because I think every degree of it is unreasonable and not to be warranted.

And therefore the Doctor cannot make it so much as a part of the Character of a false Brother to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, as it is confess'd that he does, but he must at the same time suggest and maintain that the Toleration is unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable. For it can never be any degree of false Brotherhood, to defend what is reasonable and warrantable: Nor would even the Doctor, as inconsistent a Man as several of the Noble Lords that have spoken for him represent him to be, ever have made it one; if he had not himself condemned that which he blames others for defending.

The Second Instance alledged is, that he calls Archbishop Grindal a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for deluding Queen Elizabeth into the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline. I shall not, my Lords, go about to add any thing to the full and just Vindication you have heard of that excellent Prelate. But can any of your Lordships believe, that a Presbyter of the Church of England, professing more than ordinary Zeal for Episcopacy and the Constitution of this Church, should bestow such Language on one who was the first Bishop and the Ornament of it so long; only for disposing that glorious Queen to a mild Treatment of the Puritans of that Time, which is the utmost that is pretended to be laid to his Charge, if he had thought Toleration a reasonable thing, or what was fit to be established by Law?

This, my Lords, I confess can never enter into my Thoughts, as ready as I am to enlarge them for the admitting of any favourable Construction that will not shut out common Sense.

The Third Instance is his making it the Duty of the Superior Pastors to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathemas against Persons entitled to the Benefits of the Toleration. And to shew that he has done this, I need only refer your Lordships to that part of his Sermon where the Superior Pastors are call'd upon to do so; (viz.) the Fourth and last General Head, where he draws the Consequence of all that that he had spoken before, in the following Words: 'Now what should be the Result of this long Discourse, but that if we bear any true Concern for the Interest, Honour, and Safety of our Church and Government, we ought stedfastly to adhere to those Fundamental Principles, upon which both are founded, and upon which their Security under God alone depends; and consequently that it highly behoves us, cautiously to watch against, to mark, and avoid all those that thus treacherously desert them. And indeed it would be both for our Advantage, as well as their Credit, if such Men would throw off the Mask, entirely quit our Church of which they are no True Members, and not fraudulently eat her Bread, and lay wait for her Ruin, purloin her Revenues, and ungratefully lift up their Heels against her. For then we should be one Fold under one Shepherd; all those invidious Distinctions, that now distract and confound us, lost; and we should be terrible like an Army of Banners to our Enemies; who could never break in upon such an uniform and well-compacted Body. This indeed would be a True Peace, and Solid Union, when we should all with one Mind and one Mouth glorify God, and not with a confused diversity of contradictory Opinions, and inconsistent Jargon of Worship, which the God of Peace, Purity and Order, cannot but abhor. As it is a Maxim in Politicks, that all Governments are best supported by the same Methods and Councils upon which they are founded; so it will appear undeniably true in its Application to our Constitution, which can be maintain'd by no other Principles, but those on which it is built, and like their Basis, the Gospel, if there's any Violation, or Breach made in any Branch of it, it shakes and endangers the whole Frame and Body. These things, however little they may be represented by our Adversaries, will be found of the most considerable Consequence. Let us therefore, as we are unhappy Sharers of St. Paul's Misfortune, to have our Church in Perils among false Brethren, follow his Example and Conduct in a parallel Case. He tells us in his Epistle to the Galatians, c. 2. That he was obstructed and pester'd in his preaching the Gospel, by false Brethren unawares brought in, who came privily to spy out his Liberty, which he had in Christ Jesus, that they might bring him into Bondage: To whom he gave place by Subjection, no not for an Hour, that the Truth of the Gospel might continue with the Church. Doubtless this brave and bold Resolution did the Apostle take by the peculiar Command and Inspiration of the Holy Ghost; and yet if our Dissenters had lived in those Times, they would have branded him, as an intemperate, hot, furious Zealot, that wanted to be sweeten'd by the gentle Spirit of Charity and Moderation forsooth. Schism and Faction are things of impudent and incroaching Natures, they thrive upon Concessions, take Permission for Power, and advance a Toleration immediately into an Establishment. And are therefore to be treated like growing Mischiefs, or infectious Plagues, kept at a distance, lest their deadly Contagion spreads. Let us therefore have no Fellowship with those Works of Darkness, but rather reprove them. Let our superior Pastors do their Duty in thundering out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's, and let any Power on Earth dare reverse a Sentence ratify'd in Heaven.'

Can any thing, my Lords, be plainer than that the Dissenters, and they only, are here spoken of? And what does the Doctor say in his own Defence, to avoid it? His Words in his printed Speech are these:

'Schismaticks, my Lords, are not the only Persons against whom Ecclesiastical Censures may be denounced: The Works of Darkness which I referred to as fit to be reprov'd, in that part of my Sermon where I speak of these Censures, are of the same kind with those mentioned by the Apostle, whose Words I produced. All lewd and immoral Practices, &c.'

It is very true, my Lords, Schismaticks are not the only Persons against whom Ecclesiastical Censures may be denounced, but I must still say they are the only Persons referred to, in the Paragraph I have read to your Lordships; and therefore I own I am a good deal concern'd, to find the Doctor making so vain, so unsincere a Defence. For it is not Works of Darkness in general he is cautioning against, but expressly, by a Word of his own inserting, not the Apostle's, those Works of Darkness mentioned immediately before; Schism and Faction, which with him go always together.

These are the Sins against which he calls upon his superior Pastors to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's; nor can the Charge be avoided by that Distinction which was offer'd in his behalf, between a Censure purely Spiritual, and an Ecclesiastical Censure. For admitting there is ground for that Distinction in a Scholastical Consideration of the general Question of Christian Censures; yet there is no room to make use of it in this Case, because he calls expressly for Ecclesiastical Anathema's, which can be apply'd to none but such as are part of the Order and Discipline of this Church.

And it is certain, my Lords, that these Censures cannot, since the Act of Toleration, be inflicted upon Dissenters, how much soever their Schism remains; because it is expressly provided by Act of Parliament, (an Act, my Lords, of the whole Christian Society, to which the Superior Pastors were personally concurring) that they shall not be treated as Schismaticks in the way of those Ecclesiastical Censures, to which their Separation would otherwise have certainly subjected them.

And tho' I cannot undertake upon Memory to be very particular, yet I dare venture to say, there have antiently been Relaxations of the Discipline of the Church, even when the Crime was thought to deserve the Continuance of it, for Publick Expedience, and better preserving the Peace of the Christian World: And that in such Cases any Presbyter or Bishop would himself have been censured, if he had not acquiesced in such Relaxations.

My Lords, a Presbyter of the Church of England, is the more obliged to acquiesce in all such Relaxations amongst us as are legally made, because he has solemnly promised at his Ordination, that he will give his Faithful Diligence always so to minister the Doctrine, and Sacraments, and the Discipline of Christ, as the Lord hath commanded, and as this Church and Realm hath received the same.

I have already observed to your Lordships, how the Discipline of the Church stands at present as to the Point in question. And as the Relaxation of it in that particular, was agreeable to that Temper which the Bishops who petitioned King James, gave the

the Dissenters ground to expect; so I am verily persuaded, that the Church is so far from having been hurt by this Indulgence, that it has received Advantage as well as Credit, from that Moderation which gave way to it. I could give several Instances of this within my own Observation, while I was Arch-Deacon, under a Reverend Prelate that sits now before me, and since I have had the Honour to be on this Bench: In which compass of Time several Men of Sobriety and Learning, bred up to be Ministers amongst the Dissenters, have left the Separation, and upon due Trial have been admitted to Orders in our Church; in which they have officiated with entire Conformity to our Rules, and to the Honour of our holy Religion.

These Instances have been so frequent and remarkable, since the Dissenters have been exempted from the Penalties of certain Laws, above what had been observed before; that I think it very ill becomes any Clergyman to preach against that Exemption, as the Doctor (notwithstanding his Reserve for Consciences truly scrupulous) has done; and to call upon his Superiors to act in Contradiction to it. He should have forbore doing this, at least out of regard to her Majesty, who had been graciously pleased to declare from the Throne, that she would preserve the Toleration inviolable: A Resolution I shall ever think it my Duty, upon all proper Occasions, to express my Approbation of, as just and wise and charitable, and every way agreeable to the Spirit and Genius of the Christian Religion.

I shall not, my Lords, enter into the Enquiry of what Sentences are ratified in Heaven: But as one may venture to say, that all that have been pronounced on Earth, are not ratified there; so, by all I have seen of the Doctor's Spirit in these Matters, I have great reason to fear, that if the Power of the Keys was in his Hands, it would often be very sadly abused.

However he has so good an Opinion of his own Spirit, as to put his Superiors in mind of another Part of their Duty, immediately after that I have mentioned; and that is, to promote Men of Probity, Conscience and Courage; without which, he thinks, they cannot be fit Members of the Church Militant: in which I can as little agree with him as in the former Demand. For if I may judge of the Probity, Conscience, and Courage he thinks of deserving, by what appears in his Sermon, compar'd with his Speech to your Lordships, I cannot think them Qualifications for a Minister of the Church of Christ in any respect; and I hope I shall be so happy as to find all the Reverend Prelates, with whom I have the Honour to sit, agreeing with me in this.

But tho' I hope such a Conduct will never recommend any Person to Favour, yet I do not desire that even that which I heartily blame should be punished so much as I think it deserves. And tho' he, who pleads so warmly for wholesome Severities toward those who differ from him, has the least Title to your Lordships Compassion; yet I hope he will find it, as far as the just Concern you have for the Publick Tranquillity will allow you to shew it.

This I say from that which, I bless God, is the natural Temper of my Mind, and not from the Care that has been taken by some to intimidate, as far as they could, those who were to have the Cognizance of the Doctor's Cause, and were not thought to be favourable to it.

I shall not take upon me to charge the Doctor or any of his particular Friends with this Practice, as great a Temptation as one is under to do so from several Circumstances. And it is not the least, that occurs in his Prayers, which he has publish'd upon this Occasion, to represent not so much to God as to the World, that he is under Persecution, when he is prosecuted for offending against the Law, by those, who in common Justice ought to be thought the fairest Accusers; and before your Lordships, who are justly acknowledged to be the most impartial Judges.

However I will never believe, till I cannot avoid it, that any Members of the Church of England who have acknowledged the Government, much less any Clergyman who has so often profess'd his Obedience to it in Church and State, should have been any way accessary to those Threatnings that have been given out, particularly against such Bishops as should happen to condemn the Doctor's Proceedings.

As far, my Lords, as I have seen of this Cause, I am likely to be one of those Bishops; and tho' I do not pretend to any great share of Courage, I am very free to declare to your Lordships, that I am in no Comparison so apprehensive of what may befall myself for condemning this Person, as I am of what will probably befall the Publick, if your Lordships should not condemn him.

But that is in your Lordships Judgment, to which I humbly submit it: And only beg Pardon for having detain'd your Lordships so long in giving my Reasons why I think the Commons have made good this Second Part of their Charge.
